46.49 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Hugh Barbour said that just after the APC had arrived there were about 250 to 300 people in the car park. Some people were running away, while others confronted the soldiers. Some of the crowd threw stones and bottles at the soldiers. He said that about 15 to 20 people were throwing stones.² He said that those throwing stones were on the ground; he saw no-one throwing missiles from the balconies or windows of the Rossville Flats.³

Sean Collins

46.50 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sean Collins told us that he was ten years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. On that afternoon he was in his mother's and stepfather's flat at 64 Donagh Place on the top floor of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats. He saw an APC stop in the entrance to the car park. Two soldiers disembarked and stood between the APC and Block 1. He watched "as milk bottles smashed down from Block 1 near where the soldiers were standing". He distinctly recalled a milk bottle smashing on the top of the APC. He could not see from precisely where the bottles were thrown. His impression was that the bottles were empty.

46.51 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sean Collins said that he thought that there had only been one milk bottle. The sound of the impact suggested to him that it had been empty.

Francis Dunne

46.52 In his NICRA statement,¹ Francis Dunne recorded that he saw two or three military vehicles tearing along Rossville Street. He hurried from the north end of the Rossville Flats "back to the courtyard behind the three blocks". There was a lot of confusion there, with the two exits at the junctions of the blocks jammed with fleeing people. There were a few people throwing stones towards "the Chamberlain St. side of the court". Francis Dunne looked back and saw three soldiers along the wall at the back of the houses of Chamberlain Street. At this point the shooting started. The soldier at the front of the group was firing from the hip "towards the Fahan St. opening". Behind that soldier was another on his knee in an aiming position. Francis Dunne saw a boy fall, whose position he described as “up towards my left”. A taller man was standing in the middle of the courtyard with his hands up and spread wide, shouting “They are shooting, they are killing”. This man also went down.

46.53 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Francis Dunne said that he ran first to the alley that gave access to Joseph Place, which was choked with people. He thought that he would head towards the Fahan Street exit from the courtyard. He could see a crowd there too. He turned and saw the soldiers along the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. At this point the shooting started. The soldier at the front had his rifle at his hip. The soldier behind him was kneeling and aiming. The third soldier’s gun was pointed at the ground. Some of “the boys towards the Fahan Street side” were throwing stones at the soldiers. One of these boys fell and was dragged back by two or three others. A tallish, fair-haired youth was standing with his arms high in the air, towards the centre of the courtyard, shouting. The soldier at the corner of the wall fired at him from the hip, and he fell.

46.54 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Francis Dunne said that he intended to leave the car park through the passage on the Rossville Street side but found that it was jammed with people. He decided to try the Fahan Street exit. He took about three or four steps and saw that “there were people there and there were also some boys still throwing stones”. He saw that he could not leave by the Fahan Street exit. He then turned and saw the three soldiers. The firing started at about this stage. The soldier at the front was firing. No-one was attacking the soldiers at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, but there were “some boys still throwing stones over towards the gable of ... the Rossville Street side flats”. Francis Dunne saw a tall, fair-haired young man slightly to his right, who was shouting “They’re killing, they’re killing, they’re shooting” and pointing towards the Fahan Street side of the flats, where a young man had fallen. At the time, Francis Dunne thought that the young man who had fallen had probably been hit by a baton round. A couple of boys seemed to be helping him and dragging him. The soldier at the front of the group at the back of Chamberlain Street fired from the hip at the man who was shouting, who fell. Francis Dunne said that the stones were thrown at the soldiers who were “down towards the corner of the Rossville Street Flats, where the Saracens were”.²

² WT8.35-WT8.36

46.55 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Francis Dunne told us that there was such a crowd in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats that he started to move along in front of the low wall in the car park towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3. Youngsters were throwing stones into the car park “near the gap”. He assumed that they were throwing them at soldiers who had disembarked from a vehicle in the entrance to the car park. Francis Dunne saw a tall, fair-haired man shouting and gesturing towards the vehicle. He saw three soldiers in front of the vehicle between Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. One of these soldiers was leaning against the wall of Block 1, holding his rifle at hip level. The tall, fair-haired man suddenly staggered back and fell, clutching his right leg. Francis Dunne had the impression that the man had been shot by the soldier at the wall of Block 1, who had fired his rifle, although Francis Dunne had not seen him fire it. He now believed that the fair-haired man was Michael Bridge. By this time the area between Blocks 1 and 2 had cleared. Francis Dunne was aware of some young men still throwing stones at the soldiers. He was not aware of any other casualties.

46.56 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Francis Dunne said that the youngsters who were throwing stones were “up towards the corner between [Blocks] 2 and 3”, in the area of the swings in the recreation ground. There were only a few of them. They were throwing stones towards the entrance to the car park. He said that his original account of the position of the three soldiers along the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses was to be preferred to his later recollection that they were in a line between Block 1 and the back of those houses.² He said that it was his impression that it was the same group of people in the area of the swings who were still throwing stones at the time when Michael Bridge was shot.³ He said that he could not remember when the stone-throwing finished, but that it had been “a very minor thing”.⁴ He said that he did not now recall seeing a boy fall before the shooting of Michael Bridge.⁵

Billy Gillespie

46.57 According to a note made by Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times and dated 6th April 1972,¹ Billy Gillespie helped to carry the wounded Margaret Deery into 33 Chamberlain Street. He then went with Michael Bridge into the car park of the Rossville Flats and saw “duddy shot”. He threw some stones at “the soldier on the corner of the flats” and saw Michael Bridge shouting at the Army and being shot.

46.58 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Billy Gillespie said that after helping to carry an injured woman, whom he later heard was Margaret Deery, into a house in Chamberlain Street, he ran into the car park of the Rossville Flats and turned right towards Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He picked up some stones to throw. He saw Michael Bridge with half a brick in his hand. A soldier came into view at the north-east corner of Block 1. Michael Bridge started shouting “shoot me” at the soldier and threw the piece of brick at him. Suddenly there was a bang. The soldier had shot Michael Bridge in the leg. Billy Gillespie said that he did not remember speaking to anyone from the Sunday Times.²

46.59 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Billy Gillespie said that there were a few other people throwing stones when he was in the car park. Michael Bridge lifted half a brick. Billy Gillespie threw some stones at the soldier at the corner of Block 1. Michael Bridge threw the piece of brick at the soldier, and shouted at him. The soldier then shot him. Billy Gillespie said that he estimated that perhaps ten to 15 people had been throwing stones and parts of bricks.² He said that he thought that the number of people was eight to 15, or about a dozen.³ He was throwing whatever missiles he could get his hands on, and assumed that the others had been doing the same.

Floyd Gilmour

46.60 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Floyd Gilmour told us that he was watching from a window in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. After the soldiers arrived, he saw and heard bottles and stones being thrown down from the Rossville Flats into the car park. He said that this was completely normal and “would have occurred in any riot situation had the soldiers or police ever come in that far”.

46.61 Floyd Gilmour died before he could be called to give oral evidence to this Inquiry.

Frank McCarron

46.62 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Frank McCarron told us that he ran down Chamberlain Street and turned right into the car park of the Rossville Flats around the corner of the last house on the west side of the street. He was part of a crowd, which on his estimate contained 50 to 60 people. They stopped and looked around to see which way to go. It seemed to him that some of the crowd intended to “fight back with bottles and stones” and that the crowd “still regarded this as a riot situation”. Out of the corner of his eye he saw someone fall forward while running through the car park. Frank McCarron did not recognise him at the time but heard someone say that he was Jackie Duddy. Frank McCarron moved forward to the end of the wall on the west side of the south end of Chamberlain Street. He took a quick look around the corner and saw soldiers and an APC. This was where people were rioting and throwing “bottles and stuff”. However, someone then shouted that they should not riot, and they seemed to lose their enthusiasm.

46.63 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Frank McCarron marked a photograph² to show the area in which he saw people throwing stones and bottles, which was at the corner of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. He said that they were throwing the stones and bottles “over the top towards the Saracen”. He did not see anyone throwing objects from anywhere else. He thought that the man who shouted that they should not riot was in the crowd at the end of Chamberlain Street. Frank McCarron said that he would probably have thrown a few stones himself.³

³ Day 389/181-184

James McKinney

46.64 In his NICRA statement,¹ James McKinney said that he ran into the car park of the Rossville Flats from Chamberlain Street. He saw a paratrooper behind an APC aim at an unarmed civilian and shoot him in the back. He then saw two paratroopers “running along at the back of the flats”. Soldiers pointed their guns at some people who were throwing a few bottles from about the third or fourth floor of the flats, but James McKinney was not sure whether the soldiers fired.

46.65 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ James McKinney told us that the man who was shot was between 17 and 20 years of age, with short dark hair. After this shooting James McKinney took cover behind the low wall parallel to Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. Two soldiers came around the corner of the north end of Block 1. Stones and bottles were thrown at the soldiers from the balconies of Block 1. No petrol bombs were thrown. While the soldiers were being bombarded, James McKinney began to hear live rounds being fired. The firing seemed to be coming from around Block 1, but he could not tell exactly where.

46.66 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ James McKinney said that there was a “good continuation” of stones and bottles thrown from Block 1 when he was behind the low wall. He did not see anything being thrown from the other blocks. The bottles were empty. They smashed when they hit the ground. Some of them hit the ground close to where the soldiers were standing. He said that there were about a dozen people running backwards and forwards on the lower and middle balconies of Block 1 and throwing objects.² He could not remember whether he had seen any objects thrown from windows.

² Day 81/117-119

Neil McLaughlin

46.67 In his interview with John Barry of the Sunday Times,¹ Neil McLaughlin is recorded as having said that when the Army vehicles came down Rossville Street, he rushed down Chamberlain Street into the car park of the Rossville Flats. He saw soldiers jumping out of an APC in the car park. An old man, who was being beaten over the head, emerged from behind the APC and was led away to the waste ground. Neil McLaughlin and his group surged forward towards the soldiers. It was “in his mind to have a go”. According to the interview note, he told John Barry that he was thinking of rescuing the old man, but then added with a grin that this “might be a bit of dressing put on afterwards”. The soldiers then fired. An Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer fell, though not as a result of being shot, by the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses. “In other words”, according to the note, “the crowd running forward had just about cleared the gable end”. Almost immediately, Margaret Deery was shot. Neil McLaughlin flung himself down “along the gable”. He saw a crowd clustered around what he took to be another body, but he had not seen the shooting of that casualty. Then Michael Bridge was shot. At some stage Neil McLaughlin and others carried Margaret Deery back to the south end of Chamberlain Street.

46.68 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Neil McLaughlin told us that when he reached the car park four or five Army vehicles approached and stopped at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. With about 20 others who were not known to him, Neil McLaughlin ran at the vehicles, throwing stones at them. He was pretty sure that he had hit one of them. Soldiers jumped out of the vehicles and started firing. Neil McLaughlin and others around him dropped to the ground by the side wall of the garden of 36 Chamberlain Street. He heard further shots, and turned to see that Michael Bridge and Margaret Deery had been shot. People gathered around them and took them to a house in Chamberlain Street. Neil McLaughlin did not help to carry them to the house. Neil McLaughlin said that he did not remember speaking to anyone from the Sunday Times.²

46.69 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Neil McLaughlin accepted that only one vehicle stopped in the entrance to the car park. He said that he had thrown his stones from the wall of the house at the end of Chamberlain Street. He did not see what was happening in other parts of the car park at this stage, but he said that there would have been perhaps a couple of hundred people in the car park when the soldiers disembarked. He said that apart from the stone-throwers, who were 20 or so in number, those people were trying to make their way out of the car park.² He said that he had no recollection of seeing the old man or the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer described in John Barry's note.³ He said that it was possible that he had seen Margaret Deery fall and helped to carry her to Chamberlain Street but had forgotten that he had done so.⁴

David Capper

46.70 In the tape recording that he made on Bloody Sunday,¹ the BBC Radio reporter David Capper said that people in a high block of flats above him had been "firing down missiles of various sorts" and that the soldiers had been firing back, mostly with baton rounds and CS gas, but that some live rounds had been fired both by the soldiers and, apparently, by some of the civilians.

46.71 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ David Capper said that there were about four soldiers in “the courtyard of the flats”. People in the upper storeys were throwing missiles, such as tins and bottles, at them. The soldiers were raising their rifles and firing back, although David Capper thought that they were using them to fire gas grenades.

46.72 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ David Capper said that the soldiers were under a hail of missiles, including bottles, bricks and stones, from the upper balconies.

46.73 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ David Capper said that he saw debris being thrown down on the soldiers from the “upper floors and roof of the flats”.

46.74 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ David Capper said that he thought that the reason why he had said on the tape that civilians had apparently fired live rounds had been that he had seen “some of the troops down behind the garden walls taking cover”. Earlier in his evidence he had said that he had seen soldiers crouching behind low garden walls on the west side of Rossville Street.² He said that he did not see any petrol bombs or nail bombs being thrown from the Rossville Flats.³ He said that he saw a “general rain of debris” coming down, consisting of bricks, bottles and cans, which he thought were being thrown from the upper and middle walkways of Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.⁴ He did not “really remember” whether there had been anyone on the roof.

Assessment of the evidence of rioting

46.75 It is clear from the evidence of both soldiers and civilians that the rioting in the car park started as soon as, or immediately after, Sergeant O’s APC had arrived there. It took the form of people both at ground level and from the balconies of Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats throwing stones, bottles and similar missiles at the soldiers and at Sergeant O’s APC.

- 46.76 However, we have concluded that the rioting was not as severe or longlasting as some of the soldiers suggested. It should be borne in mind that in significant respects (and for reasons that we give in the course of this report) we have been unable to accept the evidence given by these soldiers, so that their accounts of the severity of the rioting must be treated with caution.
- 46.77 Most of the people in the car park were intent simply on getting away, and though some stopped or paused to throw things at the soldiers, not many were involved in this activity. It is difficult to be certain of the numbers involved, but in our view probably not more than about 20 at most threw things at the soldiers, either from ground level or from the balconies of the Rossville Flats.
- 46.78 After the arrival of the soldiers, the crowd in the Rossville Flats car park rapidly dispersed, though a few people took cover behind the low wall that ran along the northern side of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats; and others behind the wall of the southernmost house on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street. As we describe later in this report,¹ it was shortly after their arrival in the car park that soldiers opened fire and Jackie Duddy was killed. The car park then rapidly became deserted, except for those tending Jackie Duddy.

- 47.1 Some soldiers of Mortar Platoon gave accounts of seeing or hearing the explosion of nail or blast bombs when they were in the area of Sector 2. Although much of the evidence relates to the period when the soldiers fired in the area of the Rossville Flats car park, which we discuss in detail below,¹ it is convenient to consider at this stage the evidence of all the soldiers of Mortar Platoon on this topic.

Evidence of the soldiers from Lieutenant N's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Lieutenant N

- 47.2 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that he was not aware of hearing the explosion of any nail bomb on Bloody Sunday. According to his accounts, after he had disembarked from his Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC), he had first gone to the Eden Place alleyway, then returned to that vehicle, after which he went to the back of the houses in Chamberlain Street. We describe below² his accounts of his movements after that, in which he said that he shot a man he believed was a nail bomber and then went forward to Sergeant O's APC.

Corporal 162

- 47.3 Corporal 162 said nothing in his Royal Military Police (RMP) account¹ about hearing explosions and told us in his written statement to this Inquiry² that he could not recall hearing any. As we have described earlier in this report,³ Corporal 162 told the RMP that after disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC he had gone forward beside the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, and had then taken William John Doherty from Sergeant O back to Lieutenant N's APC, where he stayed "about 10 minutes" before taking that vehicle to the end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.⁴

⁴ B1962.007-008

Private 019

- 47.4 Private 019 gave no evidence at any stage about hearing explosions.

Lance Corporal INQ 768

47.5 Lance Corporal INQ 768, who gave no evidence in 1972, told us in his written statement that he did not recall hearing any bombs or explosions.¹ Although he believed that after disembarking he knelt at the back of Sergeant O's APC, it seems to us, for the reasons we have given earlier,² that he was probably mistaken about this and was in fact at the back of Lieutenant N's APC.

² Paragraph 24.17

Private INQ 1918

47.6 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1918 told us that he could not recall hearing any explosions that might have been the sounds of nail bombs. He was Lieutenant N's radio operator and had little recollection of where he went after he was with Lieutenant N at the Eden Place alleyway, though as we have pointed out earlier in this report,² one of Colman Doyle's photographs shows him standing by Lieutenant N's APC after having taken his arrestee back to that vehicle.

² Paragraph 33.38

Private S

47.7 We have already described how Private S, according to his account, had moved forward from Lieutenant N's APC to near the southern end of the back of the houses in Chamberlain Street and, in our view, had been involved with Lance Corporal V in the incident with the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle. We discuss later in this report¹ the accounts he gave of firing his rifle at what he described as a gunman or gunmen in the car park from a position some yards south of where Charles McMonagle can be seen in Colman Doyle's photograph.

47.8 Later in this report,¹ when discussing the question of incoming fire directed at or towards the soldiers as they disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC, we draw attention to the fact that whereas in his first and second RMP statements² he had described nail bombs being thrown down from the Rossville Flats, in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry³ Private S described these accounts as "not really correct". Private S continued: "I heard some distant bangs and I assumed that these were nail bombs. I have heard nail bombs before. I did not at this time see any objects thrown which I could identify as nail bombs, and I did not see or hear close to me the explosion of a bomb.”

² B693; B703

47.9 We have also earlier¹ referred to the fact that in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private S said that the claims about nail bombs in his RMP statements were not a deliberate lie but that “I had allowed myself ... to make an inaccurate statement”.² Private S said to us that he was not aware of any nail bombs.³ He suggested that it was “a fair assumption” that the RMP had told him to say that nail bombs had been thrown, but we have found no evidence that such an assumption is justified.⁴

³ Day 332/82

² Day 331/65-69

⁴ Day 332/36-41

Private 013

47.10 Private 013 was the baton gunner who advanced to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, followed by Private Q.

47.11 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private 013 told us that after he disembarked he could hear bangs all around him, and though he did not hear among the bangs anything that he thought was the explosion of a nail bomb, it would have been difficult to tell because of “the environment the acoustics and echoes”.¹ He had made no mention in his RMP statement of hearing nail bombs at any stage.²

² B1406

Lance Corporal V

47.12 Earlier in this report¹ we considered the accounts Lance Corporal V gave, in his RMP statement² of hearing shots and two explosions as he disembarked from Lieutenant N’s APC, and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry³ of hearing explosions just before he disembarked and shots later. We also drew attention to the fact that in his oral evidence to us he was unable to explain why his RMP statement and his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry contained this difference in the order of events.⁴ As we have described earlier,⁵ Lance Corporal V had followed Private S and then accosted

Charles McMonagle (the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer) at the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. We deal below⁶ with his account of shooting at a person he said had thrown a petrol bomb.

⁴ Day 333/103-105

⁵ Paragraphs 31.1–14

⁶ Paragraphs 51.79–135 and 52.4–5

Private Q

47.13 In his RMP account,¹ Private Q stated that when he was at the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, nail bombs were being thrown from the area of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats towards Sergeant O's APC. He stated that he saw a man throw a nail bomb, which he "saw burst some 10 yards from the APC". Private Q fired at this man as he was about to throw another bomb. The man fell and the bomb rolled away.

47.14 In his written account for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q stated that the first nail bomb had "exploded in the forecourt near to the houses at the end of Chamberlain Street". The second did not explode. His oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² was to the same effect. He told the Widgery Inquiry that the first nail bomb "sort of banged".³

² WT12.88-89; WT12.96

47.15 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private Q told us that he shot a man who had thrown a nail bomb and was about to throw another. He said that the first bomb was not thrown very far and landed in the car park, but later in his statement he told us that he did not now remember where it had exploded.²

47.16 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that the bomb made a "dull crump" when it exploded, and that it could have been a blast bomb, not a nail bomb.

47.17 Private Q made no mention in his evidence of hearing any other explosions.

47.18 We consider the firing by Private Q later in this report.¹

Evidence of the soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier

47.19 As we have already noted,¹ it seems probable that six soldiers disembarked from Sergeant O's APC when it stopped briefly in Rossville Street. These were Corporal P, Private 017, Private R, Private 006, Private 112 and Private U.

Corporal P and Private 017

47.20 As we have already described,¹ these two soldiers went to the west side of Rossville Street after disembarking from Sergeant O's APC. We consider their accounts of what they saw and did in the course of our consideration of the events of Sector 3. For present purposes it suffices to record that Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry that he heard no explosions anywhere near the rubble barricade in Rossville Street² and gave no evidence at any stage about hearing explosions elsewhere. Private 017 told this Inquiry that he did not hear any explosions.³

Private 006

47.21 As we have described earlier,¹ after disembarking Private 006 was involved in the arrest of William John Dillon on the Eden Place waste ground. According to his accounts, after taking this arrestee to a vehicle in Rossville Street with the assistance of Private 037, the driver of Major Loden's vehicle, Private 006 moved forward to within a few yards of the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.²

² B1376; B1377.005

47.22 Private 006 told this Tribunal that he did not hear explosions at any time in the car park of the Rossville Flats¹ and made no mention at any stage of hearing explosions elsewhere in Sector 2.

Private U

47.23 Private U, as we have described earlier,¹ was involved in the arrest of Charles Canning. After this, according to his accounts, he made his way to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

47.24 In his written account for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private U stated that he had heard no explosions. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² he said that he had heard no nail bombs.

Private 112

47.25 For reasons given earlier in this report,¹ we are sure that Private 112 (one of the baton gunners) was concerned with Private U in the arrest of Charles Canning. According to his RMP statement, after deploying on the Eden Place waste ground he later took up a position at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.²

47.26 Private 112 did not refer to any explosions in his RMP statement.

47.27 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ Private 112 told us that he heard loud bangs on disembarking in the area of Pilot Row. These could have been the sounds of baton rounds or blast bombs. He stated that when he was trying to disperse the crowd he heard a lot of noise including some explosions. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that he could not tell what had caused those explosions, and that they could possibly have been baton round discharges.²

47.28 During the course of his oral evidence Private 112 was asked about an account given by Lance Corporal F of Anti-Tank Platoon, which we consider in the context of Sector 3, of seeing two nail bombs explode about 40m north of the rubble barricade in Rossville Street; and about Private Q's account, to which we have referred above, of seeing a nail bomb explode in the car park of the Rossville Flats. Private 112 said that he saw none of these explosions. It was then put to him that three nail bombs could not have exploded near his position at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats without him seeing them. He replied: "I probably heard them, I did not see them."¹

Private R

47.29 Private R, as we have described earlier,¹ was, according to his account, detailed to cover Sergeant O's APC, and so ran after it after he had disembarked in Rossville Street. In his first RMP account,² Private R stated that when he reached the APC he heard explosions, the location of which he could not determine. This appears to have been at a time when a crowd was "milling about the flats" and rioters were throwing stones at him and other soldiers near Sergeant O's APC, and shortly before he noticed a man in the car park of the Rossville Flats who had a fizzing object in his left hand. Private R said that he fired one round at the man, who fell and was carried away. We consider the firing by Private R later in this report.³

³ Paragraphs 51.164–207

² B659

47.31 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he heard "one or two explosions" and shooting when he had run perhaps ten to 15 yards to catch up with Sergeant O's vehicle after he had been dropped off in Rossville Street. He pointed out the perceived source of these explosions on the model used at the hearings of the Widgery Inquiry. Lord Widgery described the location indicated by Private R as "the back of the flats". Private R said that the explosions were not large and sounded like those of a "hand bomb". He was asked to confirm that this happened when he was running after the APC, and replied: "Yes, this was when the crowd was running and then there were explosions and shooting." At one stage he appeared to say that he had run about 50 yards when the shooting started,² and at another that the shooting began “Half way along as I came into the open space of the actual flats itself”,³ but in neither passage did he comment on the explosions.

² WT13.79

47.32 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he heard incoming fire when he disembarked from Sergeant O’s vehicle, but did not mention explosions. On the other hand, he did state that he had heard explosions at the time when he fired at the man holding the smoking object. According to him, the sound of these explosions was different from the sound of baton rounds being fired.²

47.33 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private R said that his current recollection was that he heard incoming fire (but not explosions) after disembarking from Sergeant O’s vehicle in Rossville Street and before it moved off. He said that he only heard the explosions after he had reached the APC in the entrance to the car park, and that his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry suggesting that he heard them before then may have been mistaken.² His attention was drawn to Lord Widgery’s description of the source of the explosions as demonstrated on the model as “the back of the flats”, but Private R was unable to say whether that had meant the car park area. However, Private R then said that he believed that the explosions had come from “somewhere in the flats”. He was asked why in that case he had said in his first RMP statement that he could not determine the location of the explosions, and said that he “could not really remember at the time”, having been awake for more than 24 hours when he made that statement.

47.34 We consider Private R’s accounts of his own firing later in this report.¹

47.35 As we have described earlier,¹ it seems probable that only three soldiers were left in Sergeant O’s APC to disembark when that vehicle stopped in the Rossville Flats car park. These were Sergeant O, Private T and Private INQ 1579, the driver.

Sergeant O

47.36 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his oral evidence to that Inquiry,² Sergeant O said that he heard no nail bombs. Sergeant O confirmed this in his written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.³ Sergeant O, though he was involved in the arrest of William John Doherty, had not been far from his APC in the car park from the time he arrived there until after the end of the shooting incidents in Sector 2, when Lieutenant N told him to move his vehicle round the north end of Block 1, after which he went to Altnagelvin Hospital in Lieutenant N's APC, which was carrying the bodies of three civilians shot at the rubble barricade in Rossville Street.⁴

⁴ B469

Private T

47.37 Private T, who is now dead and so gave no evidence to this Inquiry, recorded in his RMP statement that he had assisted in two arrests and then moved back to Sergeant O's APC.¹ From his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, it appears that he in fact covered Sergeant O while the latter was making an arrest. He then appears to have stayed close to the APC.² He told the Widgery Inquiry in his oral evidence that throughout the whole operation in the car park he neither saw anyone throw a nail bomb, nor heard in the car park or elsewhere anything "which I could discern was a nail bomb".³

Private INQ 1579

47.38 This soldier gave no evidence in 1972. In his written evidence to this Inquiry¹ he stated that he could not recall whether or not he heard explosions after disembarking in the Rossville Flats car park.

47.39 It is convenient at this point to summarise the evidence that the soldiers of Mortar Platoon gave relating to the explosion of nail and blast bombs.

Summary of the soldiers' evidence about the explosion of nail and blast bombs

The soldiers from Lieutenant N's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Lieutenant N

He heard no bombs.

Corporal 162

He did not recall hearing any bombs.

Private 019

He gave no evidence of hearing bombs.

Lance Corporal INQ 768

He did not recall hearing any bombs.

Private INQ 1918

He did not recall hearing any bombs.

Private S

In his evidence to us he described the accounts that he gave at the time of nail bombs being thrown down from the Rossville Flats as not really correct and said that he neither saw nor heard any near him.

Private 013

He heard nothing that he thought was the explosion of a nail bomb. He had said nothing about nail bombs in his RMP statement.

Lance Corporal V

His accounts were of hearing two explosions just before or as he disembarked.

Private Q

He said that nail or blast bombs, one of which exploded, were thrown from the area of the passageway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats towards Sergeant O's APC.

The soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier who disembarked on Rossville Street

Corporal P

He gave no evidence of hearing explosions.

Private 017

He told us he had heard no explosions.

Private 006

He heard no explosions at any time in the car park and said nothing about hearing any elsewhere.

Private U

He heard no nail bombs.

Private 112

His account was that he heard explosions which may have been baton round discharges.

Private R

He said that he heard explosions, either (according to his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry) as he ran towards Sergeant O's APC, or (according to his other accounts) after he had reached the APC. In his first RMP statement he said that he could not determine the location of the explosions, but in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he said that they were in the area of the rubble barricade, and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he located them at what the Widgery Inquiry described as "the back of the flats". He told us that he heard explosions at the time he fired at a man with a smoking object in his hand.

The soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier who disembarked in the car park

Sergeant O

He heard no nail bombs.

Private T

He heard nothing that he could discern as the explosion of a nail bomb.

Private INQ 1579

He could not recall whether or not he heard explosions.

Evidence of civilians

47.40 We have found no evidence from any civilian witness that suggests to us that nail or blast bombs exploded in the area of Sector 2 on Bloody Sunday. On the contrary, there was a large body of evidence from civilians in the area (much of it given in 1972) to the effect that they neither saw nor heard any such explosions. Some of these witnesses had seen or heard the explosion of these devices on previous occasions, for (as we have described earlier in this report¹) they had frequently been used in Londonderry by paramilitaries during the previous months; and so these witnesses can reasonably be supposed to have been able to recognise the sound that they made.

Consideration of the evidence relating to the explosion of nail and blast bombs

47.41 Of the 18 men in Mortar Platoon, only four gave any evidence about hearing the explosion of nail bombs. Of these Private S retracted as incorrect the accounts that he gave at the time of nail bombs being thrown down from the Rossville Flats. Lance Corporal V's account of hearing two explosions, "which were definitely not rubber bullets",¹ either just before or as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC is not supported by any of the other eight soldiers who disembarked with him, none of whom suggested that bombs had exploded at this stage. As we have already observed, it seems to us that Lance Corporal V may have heard the discharge of baton guns, which occurred very soon after Lieutenant N's APC had stopped, but we are not persuaded that he heard or might have heard nail or blast bombs.

47.42 We reject Private Q's account of seeing one of two nail bombs explode when thrown towards Sergeant O's APC. Had such an event occurred, we have no doubt that Sergeant O and Private T, who were both near the APC for most of the time, would have noticed and reported it. As it is, both gave evidence in 1972 that they did not hear nail bombs. Private R gave evidence of hearing explosions, but as will have been observed, his evidence about where he was when he heard them and where the noise had come from varied significantly in each of the accounts that he gave, to the extent that in our view no reliance can be placed on this aspect of his evidence. We return below¹ to consider his evidence in the context of his own firing.

47.43 In our view the weight of the evidence of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon, coupled with the evidence of civilians to which we have referred above, establishes that no nail or blast bombs exploded in Sector 2. We should record at this point that in our view no nail or blast bombs were thrown or exploded in any other sector.

47.44 Later in this report¹ we consider, and reject, the submission made by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers,² that wounds sustained by Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron may have been caused by nail bombs.

² FS7.1534; FS7.1611; FS7.1621

47.45 We consider below the evidence of soldiers of Mortar Platoon of the throwing of nail or blast bombs that according to them did not explode. We also consider below their evidence relating to acid and petrol bombs.

The relevance of when soldiers cocked their rifles	48.34

48.1 According to Rule 4¹ of the Yellow Card (the instructions for opening fire in Northern Ireland which we have discussed earlier in this report²): “Your magazine/belt must always be loaded with live ammunition and be fitted to the weapon. Unless you are about to open fire no live round is to be carried in the breech, and the working parts must be forward. Company Commanders and above may, when circumstances in their opinion warrant such action, order weapons to be cocked, with a round in the breech where appropriate, and the safety catch at safe.”

² Paragraphs 8.121–123

48.2 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Major Loden, the Company Commander of Support Company, told us that he did not give any authority for weapons to be cocked.¹ We have no reason to doubt his evidence on this point.

48.3 If the magazine of a 7.62mm self-loading rifle (SLR) is loaded and fitted to the weapon, the action of cocking the rifle puts a round into the breech. If the safety catch is then moved from safe, pulling the trigger will fire the round. Thus cocking the weapon in advance reduces the time required to fire it.

Evidence of the soldiers concerning the cocking of rifles

Lieutenant N

48.4 Lieutenant N did not in his evidence address the question of when he first cocked his own weapon. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ he denied that he had ordered Sergeant O to cock his weapon, or given Sergeant O permission to do so, at or about the time when his platoon moved off to go through Barrier 12. He said that to give such an order or permission would have been wrong because at that stage there was no clear perception of danger or need to use rifles. However, as we explain below, since Sergeant O gave evidence in 1972 that Lieutenant N gave him permission for weapons to be cocked, it seems to us that Lieutenant N is mistaken in his recollection and that he did give such permission.

Private INQ 1918

48.5 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1918 said that he could not remember whether his rifle had been cocked when he disembarked from Lieutenant N's vehicle and arrested a civilian. He said that the safety catch would certainly have been on.²

² Day 342/133

Corporal 162

48.6 This soldier gave no evidence about whether, and if so when, he cocked his rifle.

Lance Corporal V

48.7 In his RMP account,¹ Lance Corporal V stated that he cocked his weapon when he heard shots as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC. He also heard two explosions.

¹ B788

48.8 According to his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² just before he disembarked he had heard two explosions, and so he cocked his rifle as soon as he disembarked. As he was running forward, he heard single shots and saw spurts from the ground to his right.

² Day 333/103-105

48.10 For reasons given above, we do not accept that Lance Corporal V heard shots when he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC. He may have mistaken the sound of baton rounds for explosions and it may have been these sounds that caused him to cock his rifle at this point.

Lance Corporal INQ 768

48.11 In his written account to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal INQ 768 stated that after disembarking he went immediately to the rear of his vehicle. Although he had no actual recollection, he believed that he would have had his weapon cocked at this stage.

Private Q

48.12 Private Q did not say when he cocked his rifle, but he told the Widgery Inquiry that it was not cocked when he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC and began to move towards the Rossville Flats.¹ We have no grounds for suggesting that Private Q was wrong about this.

¹ B636

Private S

48.13 In his RMP account, Private S stated that his weapon was cocked from the time when he took up his position by the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses.¹

¹ B692

48.14 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private S recorded that he and the other soldiers in Lieutenant N's vehicle came under fire as soon as they disembarked, and that he cocked his weapon as soon as he came under fire.¹ In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, he again said that he cocked his weapon as soon as he came under fire.²

48.15 For the reasons we have given earlier in this report,¹ we are of the view that the soldiers from Lieutenant N's APC did not come under fire when they disembarked. It follows that we do not accept Private S's evidence of the reason why he cocked his weapon.

Corporal P

48.16 In his RMP statement,¹ Corporal P described moving forward from Little James Street in an APC. In the same paragraph, and before describing his disembarkation, he said that his rifle was cocked with a round in the breech and the safety catch applied. This indicates to us that he cocked the weapon no later than while he was moving into the Bogside in Sergeant O's vehicle.

48.17 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal P acknowledged that his earlier statement had given the impression that he had cocked his rifle while he was in the vehicle, but he said that in fact he had cocked it only upon disembarking from the vehicle to make arrests.

48.18 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal P said that he did not know why there was a difference between the two statements that he made in 1972 on this point. He agreed that he could not now say whether what he had said in his RMP statement about the matter was true or not. He also said that what he had put in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry

“was my recollection at the time”, and denied that he had realised or had suggested to him that it would be foolish to admit that his weapon had been cocked while he was still inside the vehicle.¹

48.19 Warrant Officer Class II Lewis, the Company Sergeant Major of Support Company, recorded in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that as the soldiers of Support Company embarked into their vehicles, he saw a soldier cock his weapon before entering the APC ahead of the command vehicle. He thought that this soldier was Corporal P. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis told us that he was annoyed and decided to speak to the soldier when they returned to barracks, but in the event never did. In his oral evidence,² Warrant Officer Class II Lewis explained that he had not been in doubt as to the identity of the soldier at the time, but after so many years could not be entirely sure that it had been Corporal P. This paragraph of Warrant Officer Class II Lewis’s statement was put to Corporal P when the latter gave oral evidence.³ Corporal P agreed that he could not now say whether or not, if he was the soldier seen by Warrant Officer Class II Lewis, it was true that he had cocked his rifle before embarkation. He was then asked whether he would have cocked his rifle on instructions or of his own volition. He said that he would have been instructed, but that he could not assist as to whether he had been given any order.

³ Day 353/65-66

² Day 353/31-32

48.20 On the basis of what Corporal P told the RMP, it seems to us that it is more likely than not that he cocked his weapon at some stage before he disembarked from the APC.

Private R

48.21 In his RMP account,¹ Private R stated: “We debussed from the Humber and I heard the sound of shots from the flats area. I cocked my weapon. I was detailed to cover the vehicle. The vehicle suddenly drove off and located itself outside No 1 Block Rossville Flats. I moved through the crowd to the vehicle.”

48.22 In his written statement for and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R stated that he cocked his rifle when he heard shooting as he ran across the waste ground to catch up with Sergeant O's vehicle. He was asked how much time elapsed after he had disembarked before the shooting started, and he replied: "As long as it takes you to run, say 50 yards with my sort of kit on."²

48.23 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R said that when he disembarked from the vehicle he heard incoming fire, which "sounded roughly as if it was coming from the area of the Rossville Flats". He did not say when he cocked his weapon. It was suggested to Private R in the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry² that these accounts were inconsistent. He said that his current recollection was that he heard incoming fire and cocked his weapon after disembarking from Sergeant O's vehicle but before it moved off.

² Day 337/87-90

48.24 We do not accept that Private R heard incoming fire. The evidence of those soldiers who preceded him into the Rossville Flats car park does not suggest that at this time there was such fire. It is possible, though in our view unlikely, that he heard either Lieutenant N's shots up the Eden Place alleyway, or those fired by Corporal P in Sector 3, which we discuss in our consideration of the events of that sector.

Private 006

48.25 This soldier gave no evidence about whether and if so when he cocked his rifle.

Private U

48.26 In his RMP account Private U stated that he cocked his rifle as he jumped out of Sergeant O's vehicle in Rossville Street.¹ However, according to his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² he did not cock his rifle until after he had arrested a man and taken him back to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. On his way back down Rossville Street, Private U saw soldiers at the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats firing at a gunman in its far corner, and it was at that point that he cocked his rifle. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ Private U again stated that he cocked his rifle while moving back down Rossville Street after handing over the arrested man. In this account, he said that he cocked his weapon because he had seen the fall of shots on the waste ground between Eden Place and Pilot Row, and that he had not seen any of the soldiers in the area of the car park firing.

² B767

48.27 In his written account to this Inquiry,¹ Private U stated only that he could not remember whether he had cocked his weapon before the incident, which we consider below, in which he opened fire, although he thought that he probably had. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private U said that he could not explain the difference between his RMP statement and the evidence that he gave to the Widgery Inquiry on this point. He said that he did not recall whether he had cocked his weapon as he jumped out of Sergeant O's vehicle, but that he would have had no reason to lie to the RMP about the matter.³

² Day 369/45-46

48.28 In our view Private U's RMP account is to be preferred to what he said later and accordingly it seems to us that at the latest he had cocked his weapon as he disembarked from Sergeant O's APC.

Sergeant O

48.29 In his first RMP statement¹ Sergeant O recorded that his own rifle "had been cocked on moving forward from my position". It is not clear from this statement to what position he was referring, but in his written account for the Widgery Inquiry,² he stated that he was "told we could cock our weapons" during a quick briefing that he received from Lieutenant N before deployment. He had his own weapon cocked and ready, but with the safety catch on, from the time he left Little James Street. He said that if his men had heard or seen him cock his weapon, they would have done the same without further orders.

48.30 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O confirmed that evidence, adding that although he did not tell his men to cock their weapons, he heard them doing it inside the APC after he had cocked his rifle. His oral evidence to this Inquiry² was to the same effect, although he explained that he could not say that each of his soldiers had cocked his weapon in the APC, "but I would imagine the people who seen me cock my weapon ... would have cocked theirs as a natural response".

² Day 335/20-21; Day 336/6-10

Private T

48.31 Private T gave no evidence about the cocking of his weapon.

Private INQ 1579

48.32 In his written account to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1579 stated that when he disembarked from Sergeant O's APC he cocked his weapon with the safety catch on. He said that this was "standard procedure ... in this sort of situation".

48.33 From the foregoing it will be seen that many of the soldiers from Mortar Platoon, including Lieutenant N, ignored or contravened the provisions of the Yellow Card as to when they were permitted to cock their weapons.

The relevance of when soldiers cocked their rifles

48.34 It was submitted that the evidence of when the soldiers cocked their weapons demonstrated their willingness and eagerness to fire live rounds on Bloody Sunday.¹

48.35 We do not accept this submission as a general proposition. In our view on its own the cocking of weapons at an early stage indicates only that soldiers prepared themselves to shoot without delay. Without instructions this was contrary to the Yellow Card, but the soldiers had been told that they were going into an area in which paramilitaries were known to operate. To our minds the cocking of weapons alone does not, even with hindsight, show that soldiers were willing and eager to fire live rounds, but only that they prepared themselves to fire without delay should they come up against paramilitary attack. We accept Sergeant O's denial that he cocked his weapon so as to be ready to shoot people. "Not ready to shoot people; I cocked my weapon so that I could defend myself if the need arose."¹ We have found no assistance in reaching conclusions on why the soldiers fired from what they said about cocking their weapons.

Consideration of the evidence of incoming gunfire	49.82

49.1 Earlier in this report¹ we concluded that the evidence of the soldiers who disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC did not persuade us that any of them came, or might have come, under fire as – or soon after – they got out of the vehicle.

- 49.2 We now address the rest of the evidence of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon relating to incoming fire. We first consider their evidence relating to incoming fire generally and then, in the context of examining the evidence of firing by the soldiers, what they said in some cases about firing by their targets.

Evidence of the soldiers from Lieutenant N's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Lieutenant N

- 49.3 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N recorded that during the period in which he was occupied around Eden Place he was aware of firing, but that none of it affected him directly and he could not say exactly when it began or ceased. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Lieutenant N said that he had heard no other shots at the stage when he had fired up the Eden Place alleyway or when a little later he had shot at a man he said was a nail bomber at the southern end of the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ he also recorded that in the period after his vehicle had been used to retrieve the bodies from the rubble barricade (an event that occurred after the main firing in Sectors 2, 3, 4 and 5 and which we consider hereafter), he heard several shots that appeared to be fired towards Army vehicles standing outside the Rossville Flats. For reasons given when considering the later events of Sector 3, we are sure that soldiers fired the shots that Lieutenant N heard at this stage.

² WT12.67-69

- 49.4 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N also said that the shots fired at the vehicles after the collection of the bodies were the first that he had heard, other than the shot that hit the drainpipe on the Presbyterian church, which we discussed when considering the events of Sector 1.

- 49.5 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that he no longer recalled the shots fired at the vehicles after the collection of the bodies. He told us that he had "no aural memory at all of that day".²

² Day 323/29

- 49.6 On any view there was very substantial rifle fire by soldiers after Mortar Platoon had come into the Bogside and before bodies had been retrieved from the rubble barricade. It is difficult to understand how Lieutenant N could have failed to hear at least some of the firing by the soldiers. We considered whether the accounts that he gave at the time of hearing no gunfire were intended by him to relate exclusively to incoming fire, as opposed to firing by soldiers, but though this is a possibility, his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry is couched in terms that would seem to refer to firing from any source.

Corporal 162

- 49.7 As we have observed above, Corporal 162 made no reference in his RMP statement to incoming fire as he ran from the APC towards the Eden Place alleyway.¹ He made no reference to any such gunfire in the rest of that statement, in which he described taking an arrested person from Sergeant O near the southern end of the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, bringing him back to Lieutenant N's APC and then driving that vehicle to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. We have described the circumstances of this arrest, which was of William John Doherty, earlier in this report.²

² Chapter 40

- 49.8 We have already considered¹ Corporal 162's evidence to this Inquiry of hearing what he believed to be automatic fire on disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC. In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ he described what he then heard as follows:

"I cannot recall hearing any more shots of automatic fire. There were certainly no other specific shots which made me look up or look in any particular direction. I never saw any particular individuals shooting and neither did I see anyone shooting at me. I just remember hearing noises in the background. I heard a number of weapons being fired but I do not know whether they were rubber bullet guns or other weapons."

Lance Corporal V

- 49.9 We have considered earlier in this report¹ Lance Corporal V's RMP statement of hearing the sound of shots as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC.² However, as already noted, Lance Corporal V, in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, seems to have altered his account, as he told that Inquiry that as he was running forward behind Private S he heard the sound of single shots and saw bullets hitting the ground somewhere to his right, which as far as he could judge were high velocity and had come from the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. He also told the Widgery Inquiry that when Private S was firing towards the passageway between Blocks 1 and 2 (an incident we consider later in this report), he could see flashes coming from that direction, but could not hear shots.³

² B788

49.10 In his RMP statement,¹ Lance Corporal V recorded: “Firing was taking place at us from several positions with several different types of weapons.” After giving a description of firing at a man whom he stated he had seen throw a bottle with a fuse attached (another incident we consider later in this report²), he stated: “The firing still continued from the flats area.”³

² Paragraphs 51.80–100

49.11 Lance Corporal V also told the Widgery Inquiry¹ that at a later stage, after Sergeant O’s APC had been moved back to the “other side of the road” and his snatch squad commander was conducting an ammunition check, “There was still occasional firing of single high velocity shots from the right hand side of the flats”. It is clear from Lance Corporal V’s oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² that by “other side of the road”, he meant the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

49.12 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V told us that after disembarkation from the APC he heard a burst of machine gun fire and saw bullets hit a wall between him and a soldier who was in front of him. He believed that the gunfire came from the area of the Rossville Flats and that it was directed at him. It is not entirely clear from his account when this is said to have happened. However, he had in this account previously described getting out of the APC and approaching a man in uniform who was by a wall. Earlier in this report,² we have considered that incident, which involved the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle and also Private S; and which took place close to the wire fence that ran along the edge of the Eden Place waste ground. It may be that Lance Corporal V was intending to refer to a time after that incident.

49.13 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that he had no present recollection of hearing single shots and seeing the spurt of bullets hitting the ground, as described in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry. He also said that he did not now have

“an actual clear-cut memory” of automatic fire hitting a wall, as described in his written statement to this Inquiry, but that “what stands out in my mind is the fact that, if the memory is correct, it was orange brick dust that was being bounced out of the walls the round was hitting”. As to why he did not refer to automatic fire hitting a wall in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, he accepted that it was possible that his memory was deceiving him, but said that “there was a lot of fire coming at us and maybe I have only just remembered that bit”. He said that he now had no clear recollection of seeing flashes coming from the direction of the Rossville Flats while Private S was firing.² He was unable to explain why the account given in his RMP statement of incoming fire from several different positions and weapons was not repeated in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.³

³ Day 333/109-114

² Day 333/80

Private S

49.14 As we have described above, in his first RMP statement¹ Private S made no mention of coming under fire as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC. He described taking up what he called a defensive position at the back of the last-but-one house at the Rossville Flats end of Chamberlain Street. He made no mention in this or later statements of the incident with the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle, in which he and Lance Corporal V were involved and which took place close to this location. He did, however, give an account of incoming fire at the time when he fired shots, to which we return later in this report.²

² Paragraphs 51.44–74

49.15 We have also considered above the accounts that Private S gave in this statement and in his second RMP statement¹ of seeing nail bombs thrown from the Rossville Flats, which he retracted as “not really correct” in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.²

49.16 In his second RMP statement,¹ Private S recorded that he had seen a gunman fire about six shots from a ground floor window in Block 1 at soldiers deployed around Sergeant O's APC. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private S said that we should not rely on this account as accurate. When questioned further about this, he accepted the suggestion that this account was untrue. He told us, as he had about his account of seeing nail bombs, that this part of his RMP statement had probably been inserted for him by the RMP. Again, we have found no evidence to support this assertion, and indeed were left in doubt whether or not Private S was in fact saying that the RMP had done this.³ We return to this part of Private S's evidence later in this report,⁴ when we consider the evidence he gave of his own firing.

³ Day 332/16-20; Day 332/65-74

² Day 331/73-77

⁴ Paragraphs 51.44–74

49.17 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his oral evidence to that Inquiry,² Private S said that he had seen Sergeant O fire one or two shots towards the south-east corner of the car park. Shortly before this happened, Private S had shouted to Sergeant O that the latter was under fire. Private S indicated on the model used at the Widgery Inquiry the direction from which the incoming fire had come, but his transcribed answer that “some fire came from somewhere over this region here” does not make clear which direction it was. Private S thought that this incident had taken place in the interval between the final two series of shots he stated he had exchanged with a gunman in the passage between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.

49.18 In his evidence to this Inquiry, in addition to stating that he recalled incoming rounds as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC (which we have considered earlier in this report), Private S referred to incoming fire in the context of the incident in which he opened fire himself and which we return to consider later in this report. He also told us that he remembered seeing Sergeant O apparently engaging a target. He confirmed this in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ where he said that he had a vague memory of Sergeant O being under fire. Private S said that he did not think that Sergeant O had been aware that he was under fire.

Lance Corporal INQ 768

49.19 We have already observed that Lance Corporal INQ 768 gave no evidence in 1972 and have considered his evidence of hearing automatic fire when he was at the back of an APC. For the reasons we have given earlier¹ we believe that he mistakenly identified the APC as that of Sergeant O. He told us² that he did not recall hearing any other incoming fire, apart from the shot that had hit the Presbyterian church, which we have considered in our discussion of the events of Sector 1.

Private Q

49.20 We have described earlier in this report¹ the evidence that Private Q gave in 1972, of disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC, following a baton gunner who was running towards what he described as the forecourt of the Rossville Flats and hearing "four or five single low velocity shots" when he and the baton gunner had reached the north end of the Rossville Flats. He described this firing as taking place about 45 seconds or a minute after he had disembarked from the APC, but said that he could not locate the source of the gunfire and that during the whole of the operation in the Bogside he was not aware of any firing being directed at him or the other soldiers from his APC.²

² B624; B636; WT12.86; WT12.93-95

49.21 We have already rejected the account that Private Q gave us of incoming fire as he ran forward.

49.22 Private 013 was the baton gunner whom Private Q followed towards the Rossville Flats.

49.23 As we have noted earlier in this report,¹ in his RMP statement² Private 013 recorded that when he moved into the car park of the Rossville Flats he heard gunfire and saw two or three bullets strike the ground behind him on his right. He could not say from which block of flats the shots came.

49.24 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private 013 told us that after he disembarked he could hear "bangs going off all around me", but he did not know their source and said that they "could have been from us". Later in the statement he told us: "I cannot say we were shot at but my senses told me that it was a gun battle."¹

49.25 Private 013 did not give oral evidence.

Private 019

49.26 Private 019 was the other baton gunner from Lieutenant N's APC. We have already concluded, for the reasons we have given earlier,¹ that we should place no reliance on either the account that he gave at the time or his evidence to us of hearing shots when he was at the Eden Place alleyway. He gave no evidence of hearing incoming shots at any other stage during the events of Sector 2.

49.27 Private INQ 1918 was Lieutenant N's radio operator. We have discussed earlier¹ the incident at the Eden Place alleyway in which he arrested Duncan Clark and took him back with Lieutenant N to their APC. We have also considered² his evidence to us of hearing high velocity gunfire when he was with Lieutenant N at the Eden Place alleyway and of hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire at some stage, and concluded that it would be unwise to rely upon his recollections of firing. He himself acknowledged that so far as the Thompson sub-machine gun fire was concerned, his memory could well have been derived from another occasion,³ while we formed the view that his recollection of high velocity shots was probably of those fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway.

¹ Paragraphs 30.13–35

³ Day 342/99-102

² Paragraphs 26.6–9

49.28 We now turn to the evidence relating to incoming fire of those in Sergeant O's APC.

Evidence of the soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier

49.29 For the reasons we have given earlier in this report,¹ we consider that the six soldiers who disembarked from Sergeant O's APC when it stopped briefly in Rossville Street were probably Corporal P, Private 017, Private R, Private U, Private 112 and Private 006.

49.30 As we have described above,¹ Corporal P and Private 017 went to the western side of Rossville Street, near Kells Walk, after they disembarked from Sergeant O's APC.

49.31 In his first RMP statement,¹ Corporal P described then coming under “heavy stoning and bottling” after which the baton gunner with him fired a number of rubber bullets. He then gave an account of firing two shots himself at a nail bomber. He referred to incoming fire only in the context of his account of what happened after these incidents, stating that he and the baton gunner came under fire as they advanced towards the rubble barricade, when he fired four shots at a man behind the barricade who appeared to be holding a pistol. We return to Corporal P’s account when discussing the events of Sector 3.

49.32 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal P described incoming fire at an earlier stage. He said that he and the baton gunner he was with came under fire “from roughly the direction of the barricade” when they first reached the wall to the south of Kells Walk. Two shots appeared to pass overhead. He thought that these were high velocity shots. He gave a similar account in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.²

² B597; WT13.46

49.33 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Corporal P told us that he could no longer remember hearing any weapons being fired. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he did not know why the incoming fire at the earlier stage was not described in his RMP statement, and denied that he had embellished his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry on this point.

² Day 353/32

Private 017

49.34 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private 017 referred to incoming fire only in the context of his account of an incident in which he fired his baton gun at a man alleged to have been carrying a pistol or revolver, who approached him from the alley between Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park North. Private 017 stated that after firing a baton round at the man, he turned and ran, and as he did so he heard two small calibre weapon shots behind him, as if the man had fired twice at Private 017 or other soldiers. We return to this incident when considering the events of Sector 3.

49.35 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private 017 recorded that soon after he and Corporal P had taken up position at the wall south of Kells Walk, he heard two high velocity shots. He believed that these might have come from around the area of the Rossville Flats, but was not sure of the direction of fire. He then again described the two small calibre shots fired after he turned away from the man at whom he had fired a baton round.²

² B1483

49.36 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 017 told us that he thought that he had heard shots while at the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. However, he also described his position as being at about the point he marked E on a plan,² ie on the east side of Rossville Street at the turning leading into the car park. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he said that in fact he had been near the point marked F on the plan, ie on the west side of Rossville Street near the wall south of Kells Walk, and that he thought that the shots had been high velocity. He could not recall how many shots he had heard. He again referred to hearing shots while in this position in his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ in which he told us that he did not know where the shots were coming from, did not think that they were aimed at him, and could not say whether they were high velocity. He told us that he could not be certain whether the man with the pistol had fired at him, but thought that he had.⁵ He stated that by the time he returned to his vehicle at the north end of the Rossville Flats he had heard shots, but did not know from where they had come or at whom they had been fired.⁶

⁶ B1484.005

49.37 In his supplementary written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 017 told us that he heard a lot of shooting during the day, the source of which he could not locate, and that he believed that the man with the pistol had fired at him. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he was not sure whether the man with the pistol had fired at him, and did not remember hearing shots behind him as he moved away.

² Day 358/79-80

Private R

49.38 We have already described how, according to his first RMP statement, Private R had been detailed to cover the APC, so that when it was driven on after he had got out, he “moved through the crowd to the vehicle”.¹ In that statement he recorded that when he disembarked, he heard the sound of shots from the flats area. He also stated that as he reached Sergeant O's APC, "I again heard the sound of shots. There were many shots both high velocity and low velocity from about 6 different weapons."

49.39 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R recorded that he heard firing as he was running to catch up with the vehicle, and that after he reached it – but before he fired at a man whom he stated was throwing a smoking object – he could hear "weapons being fired from our side of the flats, and I heard our SLR's [self-loading rifles] firing". We consider the firing by Private R later in this report.²

² Paragraphs 51.165–195

49.40 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he heard low calibre and high calibre weapons being fired as he ran after the APC. When asked from which direction the gunfire was coming, he used the model of the area available to that Inquiry to illustrate what he was saying, with the result that the transcribed answer is only partially intelligible: "I am quite certain, I think there was somebody shooting down from this direction towards the men and from the flats area down about here in the gaps of the flats." He appeared to say that he had run about 50 yards when the shooting started,² and that the shooting began "Half way along as I came into the open space of the actual flats itself". He was asked to confirm that the firing was coming from the Rossville Flats and replied: *"Yes, and also there were people shooting from the alleyways along there. There were one or two people with pistols firing down there."*³

² WT13.79

49.41 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he heard both high and low velocity incoming fire when he disembarked from Sergeant O's vehicle. The firing sounded "roughly as if it was coming from the area of the Rossville Flats". The high velocity shooting had a high-pitched crack suggestive of an M1 carbine or Armalite. In addition, there was a thumping noise, suggestive of a Thompson sub-machine gun, and continuous firing from what sounded like a starting pistol. Private R stated that he could still hear both high and low velocity incoming fire when he had caught up with the vehicle and taken up a position at its rear, and that high velocity fire still seemed to be coming from the vicinity of the Rossville Flats at the time when he fired at the man who was throwing a smoking object. There was a series of short bursts fired close together, but he could not be sure that it was automatic fire.² He also told us that he was still under the impression that incoming fire was taking place at the stage when he was receiving treatment for acid burns near Major Loden's vehicle (a matter we consider later in this report³), although the shooting was not at the same intensity as before.⁴

³ Chapter 51

² B691.003

⁴ B691.004

49.42 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private R said that his current recollection was that he heard incoming fire after disembarking from Sergeant O's vehicle in Rossville Street and before it moved off.

49.43 We have already expressed the view that we cannot rely on Private U's evidence of hearing automatic fire as the APC drove into the Bogside.¹ As we have also described above,² according to his RMP statement,³ Private U arrested a man about 15 yards up Eden Place and took him back to an Army vehicle parked on Rossville Street. He was with a baton gunner, Private 112. This was the arrest of Charles Canning, which we have discussed above.⁴ According to this statement, Private U then went to the north-west corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats:

"I then came under fire from the waste ground at the far end of Rossville Flats. Between myself and this waste ground there was a barricade across Rossville Street. It was about three feet high and formed of rubble. The rioters were gathered around and behind this barricade but they were beginning to thin out by this time. I heard about thirty gunshots while I was in this position but could not tell where they were coming from."

³ B748-749

² Paragraphs 34.4–8

⁴ Chapter 35

49.44 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private U recorded that as he moved towards the Rossville Flats after disembarking in Rossville Street, he heard four or five low velocity automatic shots. He did not see where this gunfire had come from or where it went. As he was taking an arrested civilian back to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, three or four low velocity automatic shots were fired from behind him and landed near him on the open ground. After handing over the civilian, he went back up Rossville Street towards the Rossville Flats, and saw soldiers at the entrance to the car park firing at a gunman in its far corner. As he was running, he saw four or five automatic shots landing near Major Loden's vehicle ahead of him. He stated that during the time he was at the north-west corner of Block 1, he heard "sporadic firing from behind me in the direction of the forecourt of the Rossville Flats".²

49.45

In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private U said that he could not remember whether he had heard firing between disembarkation and the arrest of the civilian, but said that when he made the arrest he heard shots fired and saw them fall about 9ft away from him. He said that he believed that the first shots that he heard after disembarkation came "from the area of Glenfada Park".² He told the Widgery Inquiry that after handing the man over, he returned to Eden Place and saw the fall of shots in the waste ground between there and Pilot Row.³ He also said that he had heard small calibre gunfire in the car park that and could see a man firing from the area for the Rossville Flats.⁴ He did not say at what stage this occurred, but said that he had included this in his statement, which presumably means that it is a reference to the gunman in the corner of the car park he had described in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.⁵ He said that as he was running to the Rossville Flats he saw three or four shots fall by Major Loden's vehicle, but did not see from where they had come.⁶ The answers he gave the Widgery Inquiry⁷ suggest that he was saying that there were three sets of shots: one as Private U arrested a man; another as he returned to the corner of Eden Place; and a third (involving the shots that came close to the command vehicle) as he ran across open ground. He said that by the time he reached the north-west corner of Block 1, most of the firing had died down but also that while he was there, he heard about 15 to 20 low and high velocity shots fired from the area of the car park.⁸

In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ having referred to incoming fire before disembarkation from the APC (evidence that we have considered earlier in this report²), Private U stated that he thought that it was as he was escorting the civilian that a second burst of gunfire rang out. This was low velocity fire. He thought that there were about four or five shots, which hit the ground, and seemed to have been fired from an elevated position to the south, possibly in Block 2 or Block 3. He stated that he did not now remember an additional burst of gunfire between disembarkation and the arrest of the civilian, nor did he now recall seeing soldiers in the entrance to the car park firing at a gunman, or automatic fire landing near Major Loden's vehicle.³ Private U also stated that while at the north-west corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, he could hear shooting coming from the car park “and further south from there”⁴ but could not tell what type of shooting it was. He thought that he could also hear high velocity fire coming from the area of Glenfada Park North.⁵ He told us that he thought that the 30 shots mentioned in his first RMP statements were probably these shots from the car park and Glenfada Park North.⁶

49.47 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private U was unable to explain the differences between his first RMP statement, his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry and his oral evidence to that Inquiry on the question as to whether he heard incoming fire after disembarkation and before he arrested the civilian, and on his alleged sighting of a gunman in the area of the car park. He said that he could not remember whether he was aware of gunfire in the area at the time when he effected the arrest.² He also said that he did not know why he had not mentioned to the RMP the firing that occurred while he was escorting the civilian, and although he told us that he was told to deal with what he had done as opposed to what he had seen and heard,³ this is difficult to reconcile with the fact that he did describe other firing in his RMP statement. In contrast to his written statement to this Inquiry, in which he told us that he did not recall coming under fire as he moved to the north-west corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats,⁴ Private U said that he did remember hearing gunfire as he moved to that corner, but could not say what type of gunfire it was.⁵ He said that while at the north-west corner of Block 1, he heard gunfire from several directions. He told us his present recollection was that some of this gunfire came from “towards Glenfada Park” and some from the car park area.⁶

49.48 Private 112 was a baton gunner of Mortar Platoon who had disembarked from Sergeant O’s APC when it stopped briefly in Rossville Street. 49.49 We have referred to Private 112's RMP statement¹ earlier in this report.² As we observed, in that statement he made no mention of arresting anyone, though for the reasons we have given, we are sure that he was involved with Private U in the arrest of Charles Canning.

49.50 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 112 gave this account:

"About 1610 hrs I was deployed on the waste ground off Rossville St. From this position I could hear shots being fired which were coming from the area of the Flats. These shots I would say was of low velocity, Thompson Sub Machine Gun. At the same time rioting was in progress on the waste ground off Pilot Row and I heard shots passing over my head, again these shots were low velocity and came from the direction of Rossville Flats the exact position I do not know as everything happened so fast."

49.51 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 112 told us that he heard low velocity gunfire, which he stated might well have been Thompson sub-machine gun fire, although he did not think that he would have specified the type of weapon to the RMP. In the same statement,² Private 112 recorded that he heard sporadic gunfire while he was trying to disperse the crowd on the waste ground. He could not tell from which direction it was coming, but it sounded like a gun battle. He said: "By this, I mean that I heard a shot and then a split second later another shot and I assumed that somebody was firing from one direction and that shots were being returned from a different direction." He told us that it seemed to him that he was hearing both high and low velocity weapons.

- 49.53 It is unclear from the evidence of Private 112 where on the waste ground he was when, according to his RMP statement, he heard automatic fire. On the basis of his accounts this was at the stage when, as he put it, rioting was in progress on the Eden Place waste ground, and there was firing from different directions. However, at the stage when people were on the Eden Place waste ground in any numbers, there was in our view no exchange of firing of that kind. It seems to us, especially since he accepted in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that he could have been mistaken about hearing low velocity fire, that it would be unwise to rely upon Private 112's evidence that he heard low velocity automatic gunfire or indeed any incoming fire.

Private 006

- 49.54 We have earlier described¹ how, according to Private 006's RMP statement,² Private 006 and Private 037 (the driver of Major Loden's command vehicle) arrested William John Dillon and took him back to an APC in Rossville Street. In his RMP statement, after dealing with this arrest, Private 006 continued:

"I heard shooting break out and took cover. I was not able to locate where the shots came from – I was separated from the vehicle and members of the squad and saw that the vehicle had moved to a position about ten yards from Block 1 of the flats. As I ran to rejoin the Squad as the crowd had moved to the rear of the flats."

- 49.55 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 006 told us that all that he could remember hearing was the sound of self-loading rifles (SLRs). Apart from the shot that hit the drainpipe on the side of the Presbyterian church (which we have considered in the context of Sector 1), he did not describe incoming fire anywhere else in his evidence.

- 49.56 We now turn to consider the evidence of the soldiers who disembarked when Sergeant O's APC stopped in the Rossville Flats car park.

Sergeant O

- 49.57 In his first RMP statement,¹ Sergeant O recorded that after arrests had been made, he was by the rear of his APC when he heard shots and saw rounds strike the side of 36 Chamberlain Street and the ground between the house and his APC. There were four to five weapons of mixed calibre firing. He said that during the subsequent incidents, in which he fired his rifle, he and his section were under constant small arms fire from several positions in the Rossville Flats area.² We return to the firing by Sergeant O later in this report.³

³ Chapter 51

² B441

49.58 Sergeant O appeared in the Thames Television This Week programme Northern Ireland – Two Sides of the Story, broadcast on 3rd February 1972. He said in this programme that as the soldiers of his section started to move arrested civilians back to the APC, they came under fairly heavy fire from the Rossville Flats.¹ He thought that the firing came from at least four or five positions and from a multiplicity of different types of weapon. The soldiers put the civilians into the back of the APC and then took up firing positions. They started to locate the gunmen and return the gunfire.

49.59 Sergeant O told the interviewer that there was a lot of firing going on around him as he fired at three gunmen. As well as seeing people firing, he saw the strikes of their rounds, particularly against one soldier in his platoon, who “took quite a bit of stick at one time, but came through it”.

49.60 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O recorded that the initial burst of firing occurred after he had arrested a man and handed him to a lance corporal, and was following them both back to his APC. This was the arrest of William John Doherty, which we have discussed earlier in this report.²

² Chapter 40

49.61 According to this statement, Sergeant O thought that some of the firing was low velocity. He described seeing “only one fall of shot ... on the back corner of 36 Chamberlain Street” during the initial firing, but he also described “another fall of shot, between the pig and the Chamberlain Street wall” at a later stage, after he had engaged his first target. He stated that by the time he had fired at his second target, the firing was “beginning to slacken off” and that there was “no sustained fire at us now, just pot shots at us”.¹

49.62 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O described the initial incoming fire as “low velocity and possibly some high velocity”, and said that he saw it hit the corner of the wall at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street. He said that the incoming fire that followed was the most intense in a short space of time that he had seen in Northern Ireland. On other occasions more rounds had been fired, but over a far longer period.² He also said that there would have been about 20 or 30 shots in the initial burst of gunfire, and that there was then continuous gunfire for about two or three minutes, at the end of which about 80 to 100 shots had been fired.³

² B482

49.63 Sergeant O was interviewed, probably in 1989, as part of the research that resulted in the Channel 4 Secret History documentary Bloody Sunday made by Praxis Films Ltd. He is recorded as having said in his first Praxis interview¹ that he was escorting one of the rioters back to the APC when the shooting began. He was armed only with a baton. The soldiers came under “very heavy fire”. He was standing in the middle of it. The snatch operation became a “watch and shoot operation. It was a gun battle.” Individual engagements were taking place, in which soldiers were spotting gunmen, firing back, having fire returned, and “taking him out”. The soldiers “took out” the gunmen fairly quickly. The shooting could not have lasted for more than four or five minutes. He said that he did not think that it lasted much longer than three or four minutes.²

49.64 A further interview of Sergeant O was conducted for the same programme on 14th May 1991 by John Goddard, Tony Stark and Neil Davies. Sergeant O is recorded as having said in this interview¹ that he had arrested a man and passed him to another soldier to be put into the APC, and as he turned round the firing started. The incoming fire was hitting a wall beside him, “banging up to the back end of Chamberlain Street”. Another soldier was there as well as Sergeant O. The gunfire was coming from above ground in the Rossville Flats. It was the heaviest fire that he had heard in Northern Ireland, but that did not mean that it had been particularly heavy. A burst of ten rounds would have been heavy. It was automatic fire. He did not want to discuss any gunmen he might have seen, but said that he did not fire at anyone who did not have a weapon in his hand.

49.65 Peter Taylor interviewed Sergeant O on 28th November 1991 for the BBC Inside Story documentary Remember Bloody Sunday. Sergeant O is recorded as having said in this interview that firing began from the area of the Rossville Flats as he brought a civilian to the back of his vehicle.¹ The gunfire was coming from three or four weapons. It was the highest concentration of gunfire that he had heard in Northern Ireland. This was “a quick sort of burst of maybe 20, 30 rounds from various weapons”. There was a strike on the ground between him and the wall on his left. He passed the civilian to a lance corporal and moved to the front of his vehicle, where he was “opposite one of the people who was armed”. The soldiers now started to look for targets and return fire.

49.66 Sergeant O said that there was a strike of a number of rounds on the ground in front of him and another strike of three or four rounds on the corner of the wall at the end of Chamberlain Street.¹ The incoming fire was not sporadic. There were “quite a few shots fired over a very short space of time into the area where we were standing”. He estimated that the initial burst of gunfire, before any of the soldiers returned fire, consisted of “20–30 rounds, maybe less, maybe more I don’t really know”.

49.67 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us that the initial incoming fire consisted of about 20 to 30 rounds fired in bursts from what appeared to be four or five, or perhaps three, positions around the Rossville Flats. It was a mixture of high and low velocity fire, and was the heaviest that he had yet heard in Northern Ireland. He saw bullets strike the ground to his left and the rear wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. Further on in his statement,² he indicated that the shots that struck the ground had been fired at a later stage, when, according to his account, Private S was engaging a gunman in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. (This was also the upshot of his oral evidence to this Inquiry.³) He stated that it had been his “ball park guess” that about 80 incoming shots had been fired in all, but that there could have been 60 or 120.⁴

49.68 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant O said that he was next to the nearside front wheel of his APC when the firing started. When it was pointed out to him that he had told the RMP that at this time he had been at the rear of the vehicle, he said that the vehicle was very small and that he “obviously” could not give his exact position.¹ He also told us that he had not been aware of any automatic fire, and that all or most of the incoming shots had been low velocity. He said that the answer in which he told the Praxis interviewers that he had heard automatic fire was wrong, and that he did not remember giving that answer.² He denied that he had overestimated the number of shots because of the echo effect reverberating around the three blocks of the Rossville Flats; and he also told us that when the incoming fire started, there were still people trying to get out through the two alleyways.³

³ Day 335/54

² Day 335/48-49

49.69 Sergeant O was asked about the shots that Lieutenant N had fired up the Eden Place alleyway:¹

“Q. Were you aware of the firing by Lieutenant N?

A. Was I, what, sorry?

Q. Aware of the firing by Lieutenant N?

A. No, I was not.

Q. Were you aware Lieutenant N had fired shots further down the wasteground?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you not hear them?

A. Not to my knowledge, no.

Q. If you did not hear him firing, could it be the firing you heard was in fact his firing?

A. I doubt it very much because an SLR has got a very distinctive crack and the stuff that was initially fired at me was not an SLR that was firing.

Q. You are aware, as an experienced soldier, the distorting effect in a built-up area of high buildings?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you not able to accept that the shots that were fired by Lieutenant N could have been misinterpreted by you?

A. No, I would not accept that.

Q. How can you explain, then, that you did not hear Lieutenant N's shots?

A. Because Lieutenant N was down behind me and I believe – I could be wrong on this – but I believe he was firing up an alleyway, which was in an entirely different direction from where I was facing.

Q. He was standing at the corner of a building on the wasteground?

A. He was firing down an alleyway, therefore the sound, the main sound would have went down the alley, away from me. Therefore it is perfectly logical that I would not have heard it.

Q. You did not hear any of that?

49.70

In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O was asked how it was that while according to him some 80 to 100 shots had been fired at the Army in the space of two or three minutes, no soldier had been wounded or touched by that gunfire.¹

“Q. Round about 80 to 100 shots fired in this few minutes?

A. Yes.

Q. At soldiers who were actually engaged in an arrest operation?

A. Yes.

Q. Whoever was firing, they must have been very bad shots, must they not?

A. And also very stupid.

Q. Very stupid and very bad shots?

A. Yes.

Q. Because firing from those positions, in the positions you have described, it would have been like shooting a goldfish in a barrel, would it not?

A. Those are your words; not mine.

Q. Would you not agree that one could hardly miss from those positions?

A. I would agree that a trained man could not miss from those positions.

Q. Or, I suggest, a blind man could not have missed from these positions, firing those number of shots.

LORD WIDGERY: You need not answer that.”

49.71 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us:

“The firing was not controlled, not the usual type of deliberately aimed sniper fire. If it had been more controlled, then I am sure me and some of my men would have been hit. We were very lucky that we were not, and my impression is that it was inexperienced people in the Rossville Flats who had control of these weapons and that is why we avoided any serious casualties. I am fairly sure that there were no hard IRA men there when we first entered the Bogside. Those that did have the weapons were not particularly good at using them.”

49.72 Later in this statement Sergeant O added:¹

“On this day, however, we were not faced with a sniping incident. My Pig arrived in the courtyard of the Rossville Flats as a total surprise to the local people and I think that they took the view that they were being invaded by the army. I became aware that the IRA had agreed to stay out of the area well after the event when speaking with a television journalist, Peter Taylor. I think that it is probably true that the IRA had kept their hard men out of the area, up in the Creggan estate, and I believe that ‘dicks’ or second rate men got hold of low quality weapons which were in the Rossville Flats ready for use and disobeyed the IRA and opened fire on us. If experienced IRA snipers had been firing the weapons, there is no doubt that the paras [paratroopers] would have lost a number of men. If any of us had been killed, my guess is that there would have been no inquiry in 1972 or now. I think that better gunmen arrived on the scene later and various other shooting incidents took place.”

49.73 When Sergeant O was asked, during his oral evidence to this Inquiry, about this passage in his written statement, there was this exchange:¹

“Q. ...That is put forward, is it not, as a hypothesis to explain why, despite your recollection that a large number of shots were fired, none of them hit a single soldier even though there were scores of soldiers on the ground?

A. No, that is not correct, it is not I am putting forward that type of hypothesis. That is just my feelings of how the thing developed in Londonderry on that day. That is how the whole thing built. I think they were completely shocked that we had went so far into their no-go area. McGuinness may have did the thing and kept his men out of the area, I do not – I have no reason to doubt that, but I think the wrong people got the wrong weapons and I think they walked into it.

Q. That is your –

A. That is my opinion, that is just how I feel about it.

Q. One hypothesis which the Tribunal will have to consider is that the reason why no single soldier was hit was either because there was no firing at the soldiers at all, or nothing like the fire that you and others have described. Is that, in truth, the position?

A. Is that, what, sorry?

Q. In truth the position?

A. No, it is not the position: we were fired upon; we returned fire. There is no doubt in my mind whatsoever about that.”

49.74 Later in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that no soldiers were hit, “I think because the people who had the weapons were low grade”. He also told us that he did not know whether his APC had been hit.

Private T

49.75 We have already referred to Private T’s RMP statement¹ earlier in this report.² This statement was principally concerned with this soldier’s account of bottles containing acid and other missiles being dropped from the balconies of the Rossville Flats and of his firing two shots at a man on the balcony above him, to which we return later in this report.³

³ Chapter 51

² Paragraphs 37.17–18

49.76 Private T made no mention in that statement of any incoming fire.

49.77 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T recorded that after the soldiers disembarked from the APC, the civilians in the car park of the Rossville Flats began to throw stones and other missiles. At about this time he heard a burst of low velocity fire coming from inside the car park, but could not see from where it was coming or in which direction it was going. He stated that he subsequently heard a lot of shooting of all types in the area.²

49.78 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T said that the initial firing came about 30 to 45 seconds after disembarkation, and that it could have been either a burst of gunfire or a semi-automatic rifle being fired very quickly. The sound came from “Somewhere actually inside the area of the Rossville Flats, inside the centre”. He said: “After the main burst of firing had died down we were just fired at in ones and twos.”² He told the Widgery Inquiry that he was in the car park throughout the whole of the operation, but had seen no-one firing at the troops.³

² WT13.91

49.79 As we have already noted, Private T is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

Private INQ 1579

49.80 As we have described above,¹ Private INQ 1579 was the driver of Sergeant O’s APC. He gave no evidence in 1972.

49.81 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1579 told us that firing began almost immediately after he disembarked. He heard several shots. He stated: “The easy thing to say now is that it was high velocity fire that I heard, since civilians had such capability at the time.” He was certain that the fire was incoming, because he heard bullets strike the ground “and I would have seen them at the time but I cannot remember seeing this for sure now”. He told us that he also heard bullets hitting metal. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private INQ 1579 said that he presumed that this “could have been the vehicle being hit”. He also said that he was sure that the gunfire was incoming because “I seen it in and around the vehicle”.² He was asked why he was now saying positively that he had seen the strike of bullets around his position, and said that he “must have remembered it”.³

³ Day 336/199-203

² Day 336/169-170

Consideration of the evidence of incoming gunfire

49.82 We have already considered and rejected, for the reasons given earlier in this report,¹ the evidence suggesting that the Mortar Platoon APCs were fired on as they drove into the Bogside and that gunfire was directed at the soldiers from Lieutenant N’s APC as, or soon after, they disembarked.

¹ Paragraphs 24.38–40 and 26.44–57

49.83 So far as the soldiers of Mortar Platoon from Lieutenant N's APC are concerned, there is no evidence from Lieutenant N of hearing any incoming fire until after all the casualties in all the sectors had occurred, and for reasons we give later in this report¹ we are of the view that the shots at that late stage that he attributed to paramilitaries firing at Army vehicles were in fact fired by soldiers. Corporal 162 gave no evidence in 1972 of hearing paramilitary fire. Lance Corporal V gave inconsistent accounts of hearing incoming fire, and in view of this and what we regard as the untruthful accounts he gave of his own firing, we place no reliance on his evidence. Private S gave evidence of incoming fire as he disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC, which we do not accept for the reasons given earlier in this report;² his remaining accounts of incoming fire relate to the stage at which he was firing himself, which we consider later in this report.³ Lance Corporal INQ 768 told this Inquiry that he had heard incoming automatic fire while he was at the back of his vehicle, but this is unsupported by the accounts given at the time by the other soldiers in the area and we place no reliance on it.

² Chapter 24

49.84 Private Q gave evidence to the Widgery Inquiry of hearing four or five low velocity shots at the time when he took cover at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. It seems to us that he might have heard handgun shots fired in Rossville Street, which we discuss elsewhere in this report.¹ Apart from this, he did not in the evidence that he gave in 1972, describe hearing any incoming shots as he made his way from Lieutenant N's APC to the north end of Block 1. We have earlier in this report² given our reasons for not relying on the evidence of Private 019 or Private INQ 1918 of hearing incoming fire. In view of Private 013's evidence to us, we place no reliance on his 1972 account of incoming fire.

² Chapter 30 and paragraphs 26.6–9

49.85 As to the soldiers from Sergeant O's APC, Corporal P gave evidence of hearing two high velocity shots soon after disembarking from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street. Private 017 gave a similar account. For reasons given when discussing the events of Sector 3, we are of the view that these were two of the shots fired by Lieutenant N at the entrance to the Eden Place alleyway. Private 017 also gave evidence of a man firing a pistol from the alley between Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park North, which we also discuss in the context of Sector 3.

49.86 Private R gave accounts of hearing incoming fire from low and high calibre weapons when he disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and as he ran after that APC as it went into the car park of the Rossville Flats. We do not accept that this was the case. At the stage when he was running after the APC, there were still many civilians in the area and, as we have said previously, it seems to us unlikely that any paramilitary would fire in those circumstances, given the risk to those civilians. Furthermore, we have found no other acceptable evidence to support Private R's accounts. As will be noted, Sergeant O did not suggest that there was any incoming fire until some time after he had disembarked in the car park.

49.87 Private U gave confused and conflicting evidence about incoming fire. In addition, as we describe elsewhere in this report,¹ he gave in our view untruthful evidence about his own firing. We take the view that it would be unwise to rely upon his evidence of incoming fire.

49.88 Private 112 gave an account of hearing low velocity Thompson sub-machine gun and other fire, but accepted in his evidence to us that it was possible that he might have been wrong because of all the other noise going on. We have already expressed the view that it would be unwise to rely on this soldier's evidence of incoming gunfire.¹

49.89 Private 006 gave no evidence of hearing incoming fire.

49.90 Sergeant O gave evidence of a great deal of incoming fire, which started after he had arrested William John Doherty, but which did not include automatic fire. Later in this report¹ we express our views of this evidence and for the reasons we give there reject the account he gave of incoming fire.

49.91 Private T described incoming fire at what appears to be an earlier stage. He had made no mention of this in his RMP statement.

49.92 Private INQ 1579 (the driver of Sergeant O's APC) told us that there was incoming fire almost immediately after he disembarked. We formed the view that Private INQ 1579 had no real or independent recollection of events.

49.93 In these circumstances we are unpersuaded by their evidence that there was any gunfire directed at the Mortar Platoon soldiers as they drove into the Bogside, as they disembarked from their APCs or as they took up their respective positions. We consider below their evidence of incoming fire after the soldiers themselves started firing in the area of the car park of the Rossville Flats. Save for Private 017 (whose evidence of a man with a handgun on the other side of Rossville Street we consider elsewhere in this report¹), and Private Q, who might have heard handgun shots fired in Rossville Street, we are also unpersuaded by their evidence of hearing incoming fire, whether or not directed at them.

49.94 We should note at this point that the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers relied upon the evidence of the civilians Julian Daly and Danny Deehan as showing that shots were directed at the soldiers as the APCs arrived.¹ Julian Daly told us that he was near the eastern side of Kells Walk as the soldiers jumped out of Lieutenant N's APC and almost immediately "bullets hit the pavement perhaps two feet away from me to my right".² He said that these could not have been rubber bullets.³ Danny Deehan told us that he recalled hearing firing while he was running down Chamberlain Street or across the Rossville Flats car park before the APCs came to a halt.⁴

⁴ Day 102/27-28

49.95 We are not persuaded by the evidence of either of these witnesses that they heard or saw firing directed at the soldiers. Julian Daly's account seemed to be to the effect that shots were being fired by soldiers in his direction, not at soldiers as they disembarked. In our view, his memory was playing tricks on him; no soldier fired at this time and it seems to us unlikely that any paramilitary would have fired shots close to civilians. As we have explained earlier in this report, at the stage when the soldiers disembarked, there were numbers of civilians in the area and a photographer (Robert White) not far from where Julian Daly told us he was. In our view, Danny Deehan muddled the sequence of events. He had recorded nothing in his Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association statement about hearing shots before the APCs arrived,¹ and like Julian Daly, his evidence was to the effect that what he had heard was firing by soldiers.²

49.96 The same representatives also relied on the evidence of Simon Winchester, who told the Widgery Inquiry that as he was running away towards the Rossville Flats from the Army vehicles coming into the Bogside, he heard a number of shots ("less than ten") that he thought were from behind him; and that he was convinced that these were not the sound of baton guns.¹ In our view, these were not shots directed at the soldiers, since according to Simon Winchester, they were from behind him, ie from the north, from where the vehicles had come. Despite what Simon Winchester said, we consider that what he heard was firing of baton guns immediately after the soldiers in Lieutenant N's APC disembarked.

49.97 There was other evidence from some of those who travelled in Major Loden's command vehicle of incoming low velocity gunfire. We now turn to that evidence.

The evidence

50.1 Earlier in this report we have referred to Major Loden's Diary of Operations¹ dated 31st January 1972, in which an account was given of various events of the previous day in chronological order. The entries for 1612 hours, 1617 hours and 1618–1635 hours were as follows:

"1612 The Coy was ordered to deploy down Little James to arrest rioters in William St. Due to the regrouping of the Coy, the Coy did not move until 1615. On arrival at Barrier 12 there was a delay while the barrier was opened. The rioters anticipated the ensuing action and began to withdraw towards Rossville Flats. The company followed them on to the open ground east of Rossville St and north of Rossville Flats. The leading pl, the Mor PI, finally stopped in the car park area east of the northern most block of flats.

1617 Three rounds struck the second pig of the Mor PI. My veh stopped on Rossville St/Pilot Row junction in the close vicinity of two rioters. The crew of my veh debussed to arrest these men. At this time a burst of approx 15 rounds of .45 calibre SMG were fired at my crew, but the rounds struck the ground 20m in front of the soldiers.

1618–1635 By this time the Coy had all debussed and were arresting rioters. The Anti Tk Pl was West of Rossville St and the Composite Pl was either side of Rossville and Behind the leading pls. A total of 28 arrests were made over a period of a few minutes. During the arrest phase the two forward pls were subjected to SA fire from the area of Rossville Flats and Glenshada Park [sic]. Two gelignite bombs exploded in the Car Park 20 m from the leading soldier of the Mor Pl. Acid bombs were also thrown from the top storey of the flats, striking two soldiers on the legs. During the next 10 minutes or so, the engagements listed at Annex A took place. The stone throwing rioters had withdrawn from view except those beyond the Flats numbering some 300. During this phase 51 rubber bullets were fired at rioters, apart from those aimed 7.62mm rounds fired at gunmen, nail-bombers, and petrol bombers. The apparent disregard for the use of cover by these terrorists was very surprising.”

50.2 The reference to Annex A is a reference to the list that we have called Major Loden’s List of Engagements, which we examine elsewhere in this report.¹ “SMG” is an abbreviation for sub-machine gun. “SA” is an abbreviation for small arms.

50.3 We have already observed that it appears that while some of the incidents recorded in this Diary of Operations were what Major Loden said that he had witnessed himself, the bulk of the entries came from what he said he had been told by others. For example, Major Loden told the Widgery Inquiry¹ that he was not convinced that the vehicles had been fired upon, although he had received a report that this “could have happened”, and he confirmed, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² that he had not seen three rounds strike the second Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) of Mortar Platoon. For reasons given earlier, that is something that we are sure did not happen. As will be seen below, Major Loden also told the Widgery Inquiry that at no stage had he seen any civilian with a firearm or throwing a bomb.³

² Day 342/49-50

50.4 The entry for 1617 hours refers to a burst of approximately 15 rounds of .45 calibre sub-machine gun fire that hit the ground 20m in front of the soldiers.

50.5 Major Loden was in his command vehicle, which followed the two APCs of Mortar Platoon through Barrier 12 and along Rossville Street, stopping near the junction with Pilot Row.

50.6 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 17th February 1972, Major Loden gave this account:¹

“The Company drove through the barrier into the rioting crowd and outflanked a considerable number of them. We drove rapidly in order to split them up and to effect arrests. The Mortar Platoon which was leading, stopped with one vehicle near the East end of Eden Place and the other about 10 behind the southern-most house in Chamberlain Street just beyond the line of the Northern end of Block 1. My vehicle stopped at the junction of Pilot Row and Rossville Street in the close vicinity of two young men who had been throwing stones. The remaining vehicles all stopped on Rossville Street, between Eden Place and William Street, where the Anti-tank Platoon and Mortar Platoon debussed.

The crew of my vehicle debussed and we arrested the two young men. As we were carrying out these arrests, I heard a burst of about 15 rounds LV [low velocity] automatic fire. My signaller shouted at me that we were under fire. These were the first live rounds that I heard fired after we had gone through the barrier.

We had gone as far as the open ground immediately North of the Rossville Flats because this was where the majority of the rioters had run to and the object was to arrest as many of them as possible. In all we travelled about 250m from our start point. Had we not gone beyond William Street, we would not have made any arrests. Our tactic was to cut off those whom we were trying to arrest. It was my intention to carry out arrests and go firm in the general area where we had debussed i.e. the open ground North of Rossville Flats. As soon as we came under fire, the situation changed and the priority shifted from making arrests, to taking cover and defending ourselves from the attack of the gunmen and bombers. At this stage the half platoons and individual soldiers acted independently. I say half platoons because this represents a vehicle load. One of the two vehicles is commanded by the Platoon Commander and the other by the Platoon Sgt although the Platoon Commander retains overall command of both.

I returned to my vehicle with my crew and ordered the driver to move the vehicle forward to a position of cover against the Northern Wall of Block 1 Rossville Flats.”

50.7 In Major Loden's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry there was this exchange:¹

"Q. At any rate, that gives the position. When you got your vehicles into that position, what happened?

A. Well, the soldiers de-bussed from the vehicles and started to make arrests.

Q. Did you see any arrests made?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. Well, there were two in the case of my own vehicle.

Q. Who arrested those?

A. My driver arrested one chap and the other person, I do not know. It was another soldier from behind me. I do not know who it was.

Q. Very close to your vehicle?

A. Yes, very close to my vehicle.

Q. Did anything happen then?

A. Well, as we got out of our vehicle and as these arrests were taking place a burst of about fifteen rounds of low velocity fire was directed at us. I heard it but I didn't see the strike of the shot and my signallers shouted to me, 'We are under fire' and they told me that they had seen the rounds strike the ground close to them, in fact, in front of them.

Q. You heard it, can you say from which direction?

A. From the direction of the Rossville Flats.

Q. Could you say high or low, or from the courtyard, or where?

A. I could not say at all.

Q. What happened then?

A. Well, I told my crew to get back into their vehicle. I moved my vehicle forward to a position of cover just north of No. 1 block of the Rossville Flats. In other words, there. (Indicating)

Q. Can you tell us, did you hear any more firing?

A. Yes, I heard continuous firing for about the next ten minutes.

Q. And were your men firing back?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. From your position could you see what they were firing at?

A. No, I couldn't."

50.8 Later in his oral evidence Major Loden told the Widgery Inquiry that the period from when he disembarked from the command vehicle and heard the low velocity shots until the subsequent shooting ended was "about ten minutes" and that there was firing going on all the time.¹ He also agreed that the low velocity firing he had described occurred very soon after he had disembarked, which was after the second Mortar Platoon APC (Sergeant O's APC) had reached the car park of the Rossville Flats and when people were running into the car park with soldiers behind them.²

² WT12.37-WT12.38

50.9 He also agreed that at no stage had he seen any civilian with a gun, shooting, or throwing a nail or petrol bomb.¹

50.10 Major Loden, when asked about the low velocity gunfire, said that he had not been able to identify the weapon:¹

"Q. Did you think this was a Thompson machine gun?

A. No, I said low velocity automatic fire.

Q. Let us get it clear. Are you saying you did not say it was a Thompson machine gun or you do not know whether it was a Thompson machine gun, or which?

A. All I am saying is that it was low velocity automatic fire.

Q. Could you not tell what sort of gun it was?

A. No, certainly not.

Q. Are you absolutely clear in your own mind that you could not identify what type of a gun it was which fired the low velocity automatic fire?

A. No, I would not be so presumptuous, because I have heard a large number of weapons fired in my career, both at me and by people on my side. People who rush around and say they have heard a Thompson machine gun are being presumptuous. All I can say is that it was low velocity automatic fire. I could not identify the weapon because I did not see it."

50.11 A little later, however, Major Loden agreed that he had described the low velocity gunfire as Thompson sub-machine gun fire in an interview for Radio Telefís Éireann (RTÉ), though he explained that he had done so because the interviewer did not know very much about Army matters, and since a Thompson sub-machine gun was a weapon often described in Ireland, "it was the best way of telling him it was low velocity fire".¹ He had told RTÉ that "I myself, my own party of myself and two signallers, were clearly fired upon with a burst of Thompson sub-machine gun fire from the Rossville Flats which hit the ground about 25 yards in front of my men".²

50.12 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Major Loden told us:¹

"34. I am not certain of the precise order of events when I got out of my vehicle. I recall grappling with a man, at least one man being arrested and incoming automatic gunfire. These events all happened relatively quickly and my best recollection now is that they were in the following order. When my vehicle came to a stop on Rossville Street, I got out along with my signallers and possibly driver. I was immediately confronted by a group of young men. I cannot remember how many: it was not more than 10, but at least 4. It seemed to me that they were deciding whether to attack. As they were sizing us up, I decided to take the initiative and to attempt to effect an arrest. In doing so I hit one of them with my baton, which broke. Two other soldiers joined me to help with arrests.

35. I cannot now remember how many of these young men we arrested certainly there was one. I became aware of a burst of automatic fire from a low velocity weapon. It seemed to come from the area of the Rossville Flats. I did not see the fall of shot, but one of my signallers (either Corporal 033 or Lance Corporal INQ 627) said to me that he had seen the bullets hit the ground about 20 yards in front of us (to the south).

36. As soon as we came under fire, the nature of the operation changed. I think now that I got my immediate team (of about four, as described above) into the command vehicle again and I ordered the driver to move the vehicle to the north gable wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. This position provided some cover and meant that we were not exposed to any windows from the Rossville Flats from which we might have been fired on, as that is where I thought the firing had come from.”

50.13 Major Loden also told us that he did not think that he heard any more automatic fire after this.¹

50.14 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Major Loden agreed that, very quickly after he had disembarked, he and his crew started to try and arrest at least two people and it was at that stage that he heard the burst of low velocity fire.¹ He also said in his oral evidence that he only ever heard this one burst of automatic fire.² He then gave the following answers to the Chairman:

“LORD SAVILLE: Colonel Loden, I wonder if I could intervene to make sure I understand the evidence you are giving: first of all you use the word ‘exceptional’. I understood that to mean ... the gunfire you heard incoming was exceptional because your experience in Belfast was that when your troops went in in force, paramilitaries tended to melt away.

A. That is correct, sir.

LORD SAVILLE: So that if we take the low velocity gunfire you heard, that was exceptional and no doubt surprised you because it did not seem to be what had happened in Belfast; is that right?

A. That is correct, sir.”

² Day 344/74-75

50.15 As we have described earlier in this report, apart from Major Loden, the others in his command vehicle were the driver (Private 037) and Warrant Officer Class II Lewis (the Company Sergeant Major of Support Company), together with Lance Corporal 033 and Lance Corporal INQ 627, who were radio operators.

- 50.16 The driver, Private 037, gave a Royal Military Police (RMP) statement, but recorded nothing about seeing, hearing or reporting automatic gunfire at any stage. As we have described earlier in this report,¹ he was involved in the arrest of William John Dillon, and in our view he cannot have been far from the command vehicle at the time described by Major Loden.

- 50.17 Warrant Officer Class II Lewis made an RMP statement,¹ but this was concerned exclusively with the issuing of ammunition and with the ammunition counts that he and others conducted. He also appeared in the BBC documentary Remember Bloody Sunday, broadcast in 1992.² Peter Taylor interviewed him for that programme, and also quoted him in his book Provos.³

¹ B2030

² B2039

- 50.18 In his first written statement to this Inquiry, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis gave the following account of what he witnessed when he disembarked from the command vehicle:¹

“93. We then got out of the Pig and I distinctly remember that on getting out of the command vehicle on Rossville Street, I heard two shots, ‘bang, bang’ which were from a high velocity weapon and which I believed were incoming. It was definitely not the sound of rubber bullets. The shots were in the area, but not close to us. I had no sense of where they came from or went to; the area itself was susceptible to echoes and sounds could be distorted because of the echo from the flats. As I have said I would swear that the two bangs I heard were incoming shots, but they could be open to interpretation.

94. The crowd were running around on the waste ground there was a flurry of activity with soldiers and civilians. It was confusing and chaotic. I have been told that Lieutenant N fired shots above the heads of the crowd at the junction of Eden Place and Chamberlain Street. I am not aware of bangs coming from the area where Lieutenant N must have been i.e. to my left (east).

95. I saw that one of the Pigs in front of us had deployed to the left (east) and I saw other Pigs deploying to more forward positions. At least one other went forwards on the main road ie Rossville Street, towards an area where there were civilians by the Rossville Flats and towards a pile of rubble. I cannot recall whether any vehicles overtook us to reach those positions. I now know that it was Lieutenant N’s Pig that swung off to the left and Sergeant O’s Pig that went a bit further down the main road. I have been asked if I recall seeing someone knocked over by a Pig, but I do not.

96. Soldiers on foot were coming down passing our position on either side going down towards housing to the west of the Rossville Flats.

97. As I went round to the back of the vehicle I saw Corporal 33 pointing his rifle up at the Rossville Flats. He was one of Major Loden's signallers who had been in the command Pig with me. The driver may have been there too. I think the OC [Officer Commanding] was still inside with the other signaller.

98. I was slightly concerned when I saw Corporal 33. I went up to him and asked him what he was aiming at. He told me that he could see a gunman on a balcony. I stood behind him, placed my hand on his shoulder and looked up the barrel of his rifle. On a balcony there were people moving around, but I could not identify a weapon or a gunman. I think he saw that I was concerned by his actions and this relaxed him a little bit. My concern when I saw him was that he was aiming. I don't think he had any intention of firing and he was convincing to me that he had seen something, but I was able to calm him down. Corporal 33 did not fire but brought his rifle back down.

99. Contrary to what I am reported as saying at one stage in an interview with Peter Taylor I did not see two incoming low velocity rounds hitting the ground a short distance in front of our position at this stage. I don't know whether this is just wrongly recorded on the transcript or whether I was mistaken or confused. Mr Taylor was putting me under some pressure about the rounds I heard when we first deployed and the interview jumped around talking about different firing incidents. I am quite sure that I did not witness two low velocity rounds strike in front of Corporal 33. The two shots I did hear were those I have described in paragraph 93.

100. I should add that by this stage, Corporal 33 was wearing his respirator. Someone had used CS gas and it was strong enough for those around me to put their respirators on. I remember wearing my own respirator this day, although I cannot remember at exactly what stage I did this and at what stage I removed it."

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis accepted that it was possible that the two shots he said he had heard could have been fired by Lieutenant N at the entrance to the Eden Place alleyway, only some 50 yards from Warrant Officer Class II Lewis's position, though he remained unsure about this and expressed himself as "still rather convinced" that he had not heard Lieutenant N's shots.¹ In our view, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis is likely to have heard two of Lieutenant N's shots, which we have described earlier in this report.² It should be noted that Private 005, the driver of one of the vehicles that drew up behind the command vehicle, also told us that he heard high velocity shots at about this time, which he agreed could have been those fired by Lieutenant N at the entrance to the Eden Place alleyway.³

³ Day 338/134

² Paragraphs 30.36-128

50.20 Warrant Officer Class II Lewis agreed that he was the tall figure shown standing next to the command vehicle in the photograph we have shown earlier in this report (and also reproduced below) when describing the arrest of William John Dillon.¹

50.21 As to Lance Corporal 033, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis told this Inquiry that he had said to this soldier “I do not think there is anything there” and that Lance Corporal 033 had not said anything about the weapon he thought the gunman on the balcony was holding. When reminded that when interviewed by Peter Taylor he had said that Lance Corporal 033 had told him that the man had a pistol, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that he would “go along” with what he had recalled in that interview.¹ The evidence of Warrant Officer Class II Lewis suggests that Lance Corporal 033 was aiming at the top balcony of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.²

² Day 373/50-52

50.22 When he was told that Lance Corporal 033 had denied in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry (which we consider below¹) that he was the soldier whom Warrant Officer Class II Lewis had described, the latter said that he was positive that it was Lance

Corporal 033.² He also said that this incident occurred within two or three minutes of his disembarking from the command vehicle and after he had heard the two high velocity shots.³

In relation to the further account Warrant Officer Class II Lewis had given to Peter Taylor about seeing the strikes of two low velocity rounds on the ground, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis gave the following answers in the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry:¹

“Q. Thank you. If we then go on again to I597, we have read up to the part in which you recalled 033 saying that he had seen a man with a pistol up on the balcony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went on to say to Mr Taylor:

‘And as I, as I said that or as he said that to me, there was two clear indications of rounds hitting the ground – I would say less than five or ten yards from where I was standing. Two clear spots on the dead ground in the front of Rossville Flats.’

Mr Taylor asked:

‘Question: Are you sure of that?’

You said:

‘Answer: I am positive of that.

Question: Could not have been making it up?

Answer: No, I have no reason to make it up.

Question: High velocity rounds?’

You said:

‘Answer: No, I would say they were low velocity, now people have implicated they may have been rocks – er they were similar to the – the mark a rock would make when it is bouncing off – off loose soil, but these, these were clearly low velocity rounds hitting the ground, not too far away from where that soldier was standing.

Question: Could you tell from which direction they were coming?

Answer: They were coming from forward of where we were.’

Could we keep 598 on the screen, please.

Were you not very clearly saying to Mr Taylor that as you were speaking to this soldier, 033, about the gunman in the flats, two low velocity rounds hit the ground not too far away from where you were standing?

A. Yes, sir, that is how I recalled it in 1992, sir.

Q. What is your recollection today?

A. That the two shots there were being confused with two later shots that I saw from the position behind Kells Walk.

Q. The two later shots that you saw –

A. From the position behind Kells Walk, sir.

Q. You have said in your statement to this Inquiry that you are quite sure that you did not witness two low velocity rounds strike in front of Corporal 33?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you quite sure of that?

A. As sure as I can be, sir.

Q. But it does appear that when you spoke to Mr Taylor, you were quite sure that the two rounds had struck close to you when you were talking to 033?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is there anything in particular that has made you change your mind about that?

A. No, only my own judgment, sir. I, I thought about it quite a bit. I thought well those two rounds could have been confused with the two rounds I later saw from the back end of Kells Walk, sir.”

We deal elsewhere in this report¹ with Warrant Officer Class II Lewis’s evidence about what he heard and saw at Kells Walk, when at a later stage there was firing from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp by members of Composite Platoon.

50.25 At the end of Warrant Officer Class II Lewis's evidence, Counsel for the Tribunal came back to the question of what rounds this witness had observed after disembarking from the command vehicle and when he was with Lance Corporal 033:¹

"Q. Let us just see if we can avoid confusion by looking at what you did say to Mr Taylor. First of all, can we look at page I596, please. There were three distinct matters that you dealt with. First of all, you referred to Mr Taylor, as you have referred in your evidence today, to the shots that you heard upon disembarking from the command vehicle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said in relation to them:

'I heard – I heard two positive high velocity shots the minute I deployed from my command vehicle.'

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 'I commanded – I deployed off the rear of the command vehicle and I heard clearly two high velocity shots.'

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you were telling Mr Taylor that those shots that you heard on deployment were high velocity shots?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that not right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that still your recollection?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You then went on in your interview with Mr Taylor to refer to the soldier who you have identified as 033, who was aiming towards the Rossville Flats?

A. Yes.

Q. And you described what happened in relation to him and Mr Taylor asked you some questions and if we go on to the next page, 597, you describe the question that you asked, 'What are you firing at?' and his reply:

'I have seen a man with a pistol up on that balcony'?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you go on to say:

‘As I said that or as he said that to me there was two clear indications of rounds hitting the ground – I would say less than five or ten yards from where I was standing. Two clear spots on the dead ground in front of Rossville Flats.’

If we go on to the next page, 598, there were some more questions and Mr Taylor asked you in relation to those rounds:

‘High velocity rounds?’

Answer: No, I would say they were low velocity. Now people have implicated they may have been rocks’ and so on ‘but these were clearly low velocity rounds hitting the ground.’

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Again, when you spoke to Mr Taylor it was clear enough, was it not, that you were telling him that the shots that hit the ground close to you and Corporal 033 were low velocity rounds?

A. Yes, sir, or, or rocks, or implicated they could have been rocks, yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any recollection today of that incident?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do have a recollection of something hitting the ground close to 033?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember earlier on today saying that you did not have a recollection of that?

A. Yes, sir, this is where the confusion comes in, because I, I misread those two and then I recall the high velocity shots at Kells Walk and I thought maybe I could have been confusing those two, the two shots at Kells Walk.

Q. This is really our last chance to get this straight: is your evidence to this Tribunal today that there were two different sets of shots that you remember?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One set of two shots that hit the ground near you and 033 and another set of two shots that hit the ground on the pavement in front of Kells Walk?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in relation to the shots that hit the ground near 033, you say it is possible that those were not in fact bullets but the strike of rocks?

A. It could have been, it could have been the strike of rocks, sir, because ground there was pretty dry and there was like a puff of dust.

Q. If we then go on to the shots that hit the pavement in front of Kells Walk at I606 – perhaps we should go back to I605. You said to Mr Taylor:

‘Answer: ... at that – at that stage I can remember seeing dust spots, as we call them. A dust spot is a, is a spot that a bullet makes when it hits the ground, on the ground about 150 yards forward of the barricades. There was two or three spots I do – I can distinctly see them – I remember seeing them.’

If we go on to the next page, I607, Mr Taylor asked the question:

‘Question: Dust spots that you thought were being made by bullets?

Answer: Bullets, yes, I would say that they were clearly bullet – high velocity dust spots.’

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So in relation to those shots you were telling Mr Taylor that they were high velocity; is that not right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is that your present recollection?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you ever, so far as you recall, suggested that the shots that hit the ground on the pavement in front of Kells Walk were anything other than high velocity shots?

A. No, sir.”

50.27 In his RMP statement, Lance Corporal 033 gave the following account:¹

“I am a member of Sup Coy 1 PARA, at present stationed at Palace Bks Holywood. At Londonderry on the 30 January 1972 about 1615 hours I was with my company as we advanced from the junction with William St, down Rossville St towards the flats. I was carrying an A41 radio set and an SLR [self-loading rifle] with a magazine of 20 rounds attached. As we came into contact with the rioters I made an arrest and returned to the ACV [armoured command vehicle] with my prisoner. After delivering my prisoner to the arrest team at the corner of Eden Place/Rossville St, I began to return to the flats forecourt where we were advancing towards. The OC was with me and a soldier at this time. As we reached Grid 43311688 we came under automatic fire from about the junction of blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. The weapon was quite distinctive, a Thompson Machine Gun. I did not see the muzzle flash or sight the gunman, and so did not return fire. About 20–25 shots were fired at us and struck the ground around us. We then ran forward to the end of the Flats ...”

¹ B1617

50.28 The soldier referred to in this statement was Lance Corporal INQ 627, the other signaller, to whose evidence we refer below.¹ The grid reference was to the Eden Place waste ground, roughly halfway between Eden Place and Pilot Row, and roughly two-thirds of the way from Rossville Street to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses.

50.29 Lance Corporal 033 did not give evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, but did give written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

50.30 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 033 told us:¹

“The street opened up into what I can best describe as an area of waste ground. The vehicle halted and we deployed from the back of the vehicle. I pulled on my A41 radio and I jumped out of the back. I could see rioters throwing bricks, bottles and other missiles and running it seemed in all directions. It was the first time that day I had seen the rioters. Troops were already running and grabbing people. I could see people being arrested and prisoners struggling and fighting. I cannot remember specific incidents now, nor do I have any idea of how many people there were in the crowd. I still had my gas mask on at that stage, which limited what I could see. Although I could see clearly straight ahead of me, the gas mask cut off what I could see to either side. To the west of me I remember there were buildings. They were modern houses as opposed to the more common terraced houses. I know by that stage I had not taken in the fact there were these big buildings nearby (the Rossville Flats.)

My next recollection is being with a prisoner. I have no recollection of how I came to have a prisoner. I recall taking this male prisoner back to one of the arrest teams, who was immediately behind me. I cannot remember what the prisoner looked like or whether he was young or old. I remember being quite shocked that I had ended up with a prisoner. I was a signaller and arresting rioters was the job of a rifleman.

I have been asked by Eversheds [solicitors acting for this Inquiry] if I saw any excessive force used during the arrest operation. Generally, if people struggled, force had to be used to make arrests, but I did not see any excessive force. The usual procedure once prisoners were arrested, was that they were given to the arrest team and ultimately to the Royal Military Police (RMPs) or the RUC. The RMPs had would have reported any excessive force if they had seen it. We did not do things like that. I remember seeing soldiers making arrests and running the prisoners back out of the area. I ran forward to be near to the OC.

I have been asked what sounds I recall hearing at this point in time. Whilst I am quite sure that baton rounds would have been fired during this time; I do not now recall hearing any. I also do not recall hearing any bombs i.e. nail or blast bombs at any point during the day.

I was moving south across the waste ground. I heard a Thompson machine gun fire. I have absolutely no doubt that this was the first firing I heard that day and it was a Thompson machine gun. It was a long burst of about 15 to 20 rounds as if the magazine was let off in one go. It seemed very quick 2 to 3 seconds. I saw strike of bullets on the ground to the front and left of me, maybe about 8 to 10 feet away. The gunfire caused me to stop. I can only describe it as being like something you might see in a film. I was conscious that I was more of a target because I was carrying a radio – in a conflict it is usually the signallers who are shot first by the other side as then the communications system is brought down. I recall running for cover towards a tall building that was almost immediately in front of me (which I now can identify as the north gable end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats on the map attached). I went there to take cover as the firing had come from the flats. The firing came out of the blue. We were carrying out an arrest operation for rioting and then, all of a sudden, there was Thompson fire.

A Thompson has a very distinctive slow ‘thud, thud, thud’ sound. We were trained in identifying the sound of specific weapons. This is very important, because there are certain rules of engagement depending on the weapons faced. For example, if a four man patrol came under fire from an automatic weapon it would be extremely foolish of the commander to take on such weapon with only four rifles. We could identify weapons such as the Thompson and the M1 Carbine. They both sounded very different to an SLR or a Sterling sub machine gun.

From the direction the dust kicked up, I thought that the shooting was coming towards me from the far side (the east or southeast side) of the Rossville Flats car park. It was very unusual to see a strike. Normally fire directed at us went over our heads when it missed, but I could see the shots hitting the ground. To me it suggested that the fire was coming down from a height towards me. As I took cover by the wall, I was aware of SLR shots being fired around me, but I have no idea where from. At that time, I was still wearing my gas mask which limited my peripheral, but not my forward, vision.

I remember the OC being at the gable end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. My job was to remain close to him, so he was never far away.

I sent a contact report back, saying that we had come under fire. It would have been little more than 'contact, wait out'. Often when that happened, people from above would be shouting to us asking what had happened, but we were too busy trying to keep alive to send detailed reports. Everyone listening would have understood that we were engaging gunfire and were too busy to provide details. They knew we would get back to them as soon as we could, be it 5 minutes or half an hour."

50.31 Later in this statement Lance Corporal 033 told us that the Army vehicles moved forward to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at some stage after the Thompson fire had stopped.¹

50.32 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 033 told us that he was the battalion rear radio operator, working on the battalion (as opposed to the company) radio net.¹

50.33 When asked to point out where he recalled the strike of the bullets on the ground, Lance Corporal 033 marked the area circled in red on the following photograph, making clear that it was a very approximate area.¹

¹ Day 324/60; B1621.18. The line at the top of the photograph marked ① is of no relevance in the present context.

50.34 Corporal 033 described in the following terms the direction from which he thought the bullets had come:¹

“Q. ... Can you recall from which direction, or from approximately which direction the shot appeared to be coming?

A. It appeared to be coming from what here would be the south, from those three large apartment blocks there, sir. And it – because of the strike into the ground, I believe it would have to have come from above. Normally when we have been shot at in the past you hear the crack of something going overhead, that kind of thing. On this occasion it hit the ground in front, and that is – I did not see where it came from; I do not know where it came from; I did not wait around to see where it did come from, sir.

Q. But from the south and from above is the best –

A. That is my best guess, sir.”

50.35 As we have already noted, Lance Corporal 033 denied that he was the soldier whom Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said he had seen pointing his rifle up at the Rossville Flats.¹

50.36 Elsewhere in this report¹ we consider whether Lance Corporal 033 arrested PIRA 1, with whom he was photographed at Fort George. In his oral evidence he said that he did,² but for reasons we give when considering the arrest of PIRA 1 (who was one of a number of men arrested at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North), we have concluded that this was not the case. Whom, if anyone, Lance Corporal 033 arrested, or helped to arrest, remains unclear, though since James Charles Doherty (whose arrest we considered earlier in this report³) always maintained that two soldiers were involved in his arrest, it is just possible that Lance Corporal 033 was one of the two, the other being, as we have previously explained, the signaller Lance Corporal INQ 627.

50.37 Lance Corporal 033 told this Inquiry that he had moved up to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats before the command vehicle moved to that position.¹ He also told us that it was shortly after he had heard the automatic fire that he had run forwards to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and had seen two people at the rubble barricade, one of whom was waving.² We consider this part of Lance Corporal 033's evidence elsewhere in this report,³ when examining the question of whether a man with a handgun fired from the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and if so, whether he hit Alexander Nash, who was the person seen waving at the rubble barricade. This incident occurred after all the other casualties had been sustained at the rubble barricade and all – or virtually all – the firing in Sector 2 had ended.

³ Paragraphs 86.573–80

² Day 324/103-104

50.38 In this connection Lance Corporal 033 gave the following answers in his oral evidence to this Inquiry:¹

“Q. One of the difficulties that exist in relation to your claiming to have heard the first – absolutely certain that the first fire you heard that day was automatic fire from a Thompson sub-machine-gun. If that occurred just before or shortly before you arrived at this gable wall to witness Alex Nash, you say being shot or potentially shot, that before that happened there were six people who had been killed behind that barricade by SLRs; there were three people shot in Rossville Flats; one dead and two seriously injured by SLRs, and you did not hear it?

A. The first gunfire I heard was the Thompson, sir, and then I heard rifle fire.

Q. But it is the sequence. Just as you say you arrested a person at the bottom of Rossville Street or shortly after getting out; you have identified that person as PIRA 1. You are still satisfied today he is the person you arrested?

A. I am, sir.

Q. And you would have gone to Court and you would have sworn that in front of a judge?

A. I would have, sir, yes.

Q. And you are as certain of that today as you are that you heard automatic fire?

A. Sir, I am as certain as I can be after 30 years.”

50.39 Lance Corporal 033 told us that he did not hear or see the shots fired by soldiers in the area of the Eden Place waste ground or the car park of the Rossville Flats.¹

50.40 Sergeant INQ 720 was a Signals Sergeant in the Gin Palace, the vehicle used as the tactical headquarters of 1 PARA, which we have described elsewhere in this report.¹ He gave written but not oral evidence to this Inquiry, in the course of which he told us:²

“The only thing I remember of any note happening on the day, save for me tapping into the Foyle College telephone line, was one particular report which came in to the Gin Palace as I was doing one of my regular checks. The message was sent by Lance Corporal Soldier 033 whose voice I recognised well. His message was ‘contact, wait, over’. This message ‘contact’ and ‘wait’ means that some sort of incident is happening or is about to happen and on which he will report shortly. ‘Contact’ messages were regular occurrences in Northern Ireland at the time and, as such, nobody ever over-reacted but I appreciated that, having received a contact report, the officers in the Gin Palace would not want extra bodies hanging around to get in the way so I left the area immediately after that. I could not say what time of day it was when I heard Soldier 033 report and at the time had no idea what sort of contact had been made.”

50.41 Lance Corporal INQ 627 was the other signaller who travelled in Major Loden’s command vehicle. He made no statement in 1972, but he gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. He told us that he was manning the company radio net.¹

50.42 As we have described earlier in this report,¹ Lance Corporal INQ 627 took part in the arrest of James Charles Doherty, and acknowledged to us that this must have been so, though he had no recollection of it.²

² Day 338/65-68

50.43 In the course of his oral evidence, Lance Corporal INQ 627 was asked about what he had told us in his written statement:¹

“Q. Let us have paragraph 23 on the screen alone, please.

You say in paragraph 23:

‘After I de-bussed from the vehicle, I heard shots being fired from the Rossville Flats. I did not see who was firing and I was not sure precisely where the shooting was coming from, whether it was from ground level or from inside the Rossville Flats. I assume, however, that the shots were fired from Block 2 of the Rossville Flats because that would have been the perfect spot to fire from ...’

Can you help us with this: this was the first gunfire that you recall hearing on that day; is that right, other than the –

A. The church.

Q. Other than the church shots, this was the first gunfire you had heard after you had gone into the Bogside?

A. Well, I presume so, my memory is not that great after all these years.

Q. If you can help us with how soon after you de-bussed that you heard these shots?

A. As soon as we de-bussed.

Q. Do you recall where you were in relation to the command vehicle at this point?

A. I do not.

Q. Could we look at the next page and paragraphs 24 to 25, please? What you say about the gunfire that you heard was:

‘There was definitely a mixture of rifle fire and pistol fire, although I cannot say specifically what weapons were being used. I think the pistol fire came first. I think that only one handgun and a couple of rifles were fired. A few shots were fired in total, possibly a magazine full (8 to 13 shots). Some shots seemed to be fired by a pump action weapon. With such a weapon, you can automatically fire round after round, whereas with a rifle you have to cock it first. I could hear the cracks of shots being fired followed by the thumps of the bullets striking the ground and walls around me, so I knew the shooting was incoming rather than outgoing. My colleagues had changed from snatch squad mode to trying to locate the gunmen who were firing. I cannot say precisely where all my colleagues were, but I think some were standing or kneeling near brick walls and others were sheltering near garden walls. I did hear quite a few SLR shots being fired; they have quite a distinctive sound. My colleagues must have seen targets and returned fire. The civilians scattered out of the car park when the gunfire started and the stone throwing and petrol bombing stopped; it was complete panic. The gunfire seemed to continue for five to ten minutes.'

The first question that arises out of this part of your statement is: given that you say your colleagues changed from snatch squad mode to trying to locate the gunmen, does it follow that this gunfire must have occurred after people had begun to arrest civilians?

A. My recollection, yes.

Q. When you say 'colleagues', who are you referring to?

A. Well, it is like, um, everyone is a colleague, ain't they?

Q. It is just the other members of Support Company?

A. Correct.

Q. You say that you could hear the cracks of shots and the thump of the bullets striking the grounds and walls around you. You did not actually see any bullets striking the ground or striking walls; did you?

A. I saw rounds hitting the ground, which should be in my statement.

Q. You say what should be in your statement is that you also saw –

A. It tells you there, thumps of bullets striking the ground.

Q. Do you have any recollection of hearing baton rounds being fired?

A. I do not.

Q. Can you assist with the sequence of the gunfire that you heard?

A. Not after all this time.

Q. Would it be fair to say that what you heard was a mix of gunfire which included pistol fire and also SLR fire?

A. Too long ago.

Q. But one weapon you could clearly distinguish was SLR fire; is that right?

A. Yes, because there is a different crack, thump.

Q. You say:

'I did hear quite a few SLR shots being fired ...'

A. I have not said that in my statement.

Q. It is just here?

A. Where?

Q. 'I did hear quite a few ...'?

A. Yes, all right, I correct myself, yes.

Q. Can you help at all with how many SLR shots that you heard?

A. I would not remember after all this time.

Q. What you say is:

'My colleagues must have seen targets and returned fire.'

Can you help us in which direction the SLRs were being fired?

A. I cannot.

Q. Do you have a recollection at this time of getting contact reports over the company net?

A. I cannot remember nothing.

Q. When you heard this gunfire, do you have a recollection of shouting a warning to Major Loden at all about gunfire?

A. No.

Q. Is that what you would have done?

A. Not really, no. He is under attack and all, ain't he?

Q. It would not have been necessary for you to alert him?

¹ C627.4; Day 338/72-76

50.44 Later in Lance Corporal INQ 627's oral evidence to this Inquiry he gave the following answers:¹

"Q. So as soon as you de-bussed you heard gunfire; is that right?

A. That is right, yes.

Q. You saw it?

A. I did not see it, I could hear it.

Q. You could actually see it striking the ground?

A. At one stage it was striking the ground.

Q. At one stage. Let us go back to when you first de-bussed; did you hear and see gunfire when you first de-bussed?

A. I heard the gunfire.

Q. You heard gunfire. When you say you saw gunfire, that was at a later stage?

A. That was a different part of the conflict.

Q. What sort of gunfire was it that you heard when you first de-bussed?

A. Rounds coming down.

Q. Coming in?

A. In, in-fire.

Q. You have also given evidence this morning and in your statement that in fact you definitely heard SLR fire; was that immediately after you first heard gunfire?

A. Gunfire and then intermingled with SLR fire.

Q. Immediately followed by SLR fire?

50.45 Lance Corporal INQ 627 told us that he did not remember being ordered to get back into the vehicle.¹

50.46 In our view, Lance Corporal INQ 627 had very little clear or independent recollection of events. He told us that he saw the black plume of smoke from exploding petrol bombs, though we are sure that no petrol bombs were thrown on Bloody Sunday.¹ He also told us that he heard eight to 13 incoming paramilitary shots, in response to which soldiers fired “a couple”.² We took the view that his evidence was unreliable, and concluded that there was nothing in it that supported Lance Corporal 033’s account of witnessing Thompson sub-machine gun fire.

Consideration of the foregoing evidence

50.47 According to the accounts given in 1972 by Major Loden, the low velocity automatic gunfire that he said that he had heard occurred very soon after he had arrived in Rossville Street and disembarked from his command vehicle; after Sergeant O’s APC had reached the car park of the Rossville Flats; as two young men nearby were being arrested by soldiers who had travelled with him in his command vehicle; and as people were running into the car park of the Rossville Flats with soldiers behind them. The gunfire was directed at him and those with him. His signallers shouted that they were under fire. This firing came from the direction of the Rossville Flats and caused him to return to his vehicle with his crew and get the driver to move the vehicle to a position of cover against the northern wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. After he had reached that area, he heard continuous gunfire for about ten minutes.

50.48 We are doubtful of the accuracy of these accounts of Major Loden.

50.49 In the first place, in our view it is unlikely that any paramilitary would fire at or towards soldiers engaged in arresting civilians, in view of the risk to those civilians.

50.50 In the second place, for the reasons we give elsewhere in this report,¹ we are sure that Major Loden did not move his command vehicle up to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats until after virtually all the firing in Sectors 2 and 3 was over. There is no other evidence from any source that his reason for the move was the automatic fire that he said that he had heard. Neither of his signallers supported his account that he had ordered them back to the vehicle in order to get themselves in the vehicle and into a position of cover. Major Loden eventually accepted in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that it was possible that his and the other vehicles had not moved until a later stage.²

² Day 343/20

- 50.51 In the third place, neither the driver of the command vehicle (Private 037) nor Warrant Officer Class II Lewis gave any evidence at any time of seeing, hearing or reporting automatic gunfire of the kind Major Loden said that he had heard, either soon after the vehicle had arrived, or at any stage thereafter. On the contrary, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis described hearing two high velocity shots on disembarking, which he somewhat reluctantly accepted could have been those fired by Lieutenant N, as we consider is likely to have been the case. Major Loden made no mention of hearing these shots, though according to his account he must have been close to Warrant Officer Class II Lewis.
- 50.52 We take the view that the accounts given by Lance Corporal 033, one of the two signallers who disembarked from the command vehicle, neither support Major Loden's accounts nor are in themselves reliable.
- 50.53 We have already expressed the view that there is nothing in the evidence given by Lance Corporal INQ 627 (the other signaller) that supports Lance Corporal 033's account of witnessing incoming fire. We also consider that Lance Corporal INQ 627's evidence lends no support to Major Loden's accounts of hearing incoming fire.
- 50.54 According to his RMP statement,¹ Lance Corporal 033 had delivered his arrestee and was beginning "to return" to the flats forecourt with Major Loden and Lance Corporal INQ 627, when they came under fire from the junction of Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. He stated that he did not see the muzzle flash or sight the gunman, but that about 20 to 25 shots were fired at them and struck the ground around them. In his RMP statement, Lance Corporal 033 recorded that after witnessing the Thompson sub-machine gun fire, "we [in context, he, Lance Corporal INQ 627 and Major Loden] ran forward to the end of the Flats". This account is inconsistent with that of Major Loden, whose evidence was that he and his crew returned to the command vehicle.
- ¹ B1617
- 50.55 Lance Corporal 033 was wearing his respirator, which impeded his peripheral vision.¹ He was, according to his own account, using his radio, and though he told us that he kept one ear free when using his headset,² we consider it likely that when using his radio, his hearing was also somewhat impeded.

50.56 The evidence of Warrant Officer Class II Lewis was that soon after disembarking, he saw Lance Corporal 033 pointing his rifle up at a balcony, but that when he looked himself, although he could see people, he could not identify a weapon or a gunman. He told us that Lance Corporal 033 was “convincing ... that he had seen something”,¹ but Lance Corporal 033 did not fire and brought his rifle down.

50.57 Although Lance Corporal 033 denied that he was the soldier described by Warrant Officer Class II Lewis, we are of the view that he was. As Company Sergeant Major, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis could reasonably be expected to know the men in his company. He had travelled into the Bogside with Lance Corporal 033. It is unlikely that he could have misidentified this soldier and there is nothing to suggest that he had any motive for doing so. We consider that the fact that Warrant Officer Class II Lewis was wearing his respirator would not have affected his ability to identify one of his soldiers at close range.

50.58 Lance Corporal 033 recorded in his RMP statement that the firing came from between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. We do not accept this, for by his own account he saw neither the gunman nor muzzle flashes; and the distance between the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats and his position as indicated in his RMP statement,¹ at grid reference 43311688, was about 150 yards. Perhaps more importantly, Sergeant O, the Commander of the APC that had been driven into the car park of the Rossville Flats, was much closer to Blocks 2 and 3. Although he gave evidence about incoming fire, he told us that he did not witness any automatic fire and that what he was recorded as having told Praxis Films Ltd about automatic fire was incorrect. Had there been automatic fire from Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, we consider it unlikely that Sergeant O would have failed to observe and remember it.

50.59 We have no doubt that Lance Corporal 033 did radio a contact report. However, the fact that he did so does not of itself indicate more than that (as Sergeant INQ 720 told us) Lance Corporal 033 was reporting that some sort of incident was happening or about to happen. This could have been incoming fire, but equally it could have been fire by soldiers, which would have justified a contact report.

50.60 The contact report described by Lance Corporal 033 might have been the report “Gunman. Pistol. Returned fire” recorded in the 1 PARA log¹ at 1615 hours. Lance Corporal 033 said not,² because the log entry is attributed to call sign B5, which was the call sign of the command vehicle, whereas he was on foot and would have used call sign B59. However, in our view it is possible that the log-keeper made an error or chose not to record the extra digit to distinguish between the radio in the vehicle and the man-pack radio, especially since the evidence indicates that none of the soldiers remained in the vehicle operating a radio. If so, then the terms of the message suggest the possibility that it refers to the later incident described by Lance Corporal 033, in which he said that he saw a handgun fired at soldiers on the west side of Rossville Street who returned fire, and that he was wrong in recalling that he made a contact report in relation to incoming automatic fire.

50.61 As we have already noted, by the time Major Loden had arrived in Rossville Street, Corporal P and Private 017 had disembarked from Sergeant O's APC and moved to the western side of that street. They gave no evidence suggesting that either of them had heard automatic gunfire at this stage, though they were quite close to the command vehicle. As we have already mentioned, Sergeant O, who was much closer to the Rossville Flats, told us that he heard no such fire.

50.62 For the reasons given above, we are not persuaded that the evidence of soldiers of Mortar Platoon establishes that there was incoming fire, automatic or otherwise, at any stage before the soldiers themselves started shooting in the car park of the Rossville Flats. Equally, we have found nothing in the evidence of Mortar Platoon soldiers that to our minds supports the evidence presently under consideration. On the contrary, it seems to us that the weight of the Mortar Platoon evidence militates against the suggestion that there was automatic gunfire at the stage under discussion.

Other evidence

50.63 We now turn to the evidence of Captain 200, the Commander of Composite Platoon, whose soldiers came into the Bogside in vehicles behind the APCs of Mortar Platoon, Major Loden's command vehicle, the Ferret scout car and the APCs of Machine Gun Platoon, as we describe later in this report.¹

50.64 In his statement dated 5th February 1972, typed up on an RMP statement form,¹ Captain 200 recorded that as he was deciding to direct some of his soldiers along the right-hand side of Rossville Street, "I heard the burst of automatic gunfire and one or two single shots fired in our general direction".

50.65 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 recorded that after he had disembarked from his vehicle he went up to Major Loden, whose vehicles had stopped at the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street, and asked what Major Loden wanted the Composite Platoon to do. According to this account, Major Loden told Captain 200 to assist the Mortar Platoon and it was at about this time that Captain 200 heard automatic fire. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Captain 200 said that he heard automatic gunfire after he had returned from speaking to Major Loden. He described it as a “rat-a-tat”. When he was asked whether he could tell from which direction the rat-a-tat was coming, he gave this answer:²

“By then we had – I heard the Mortar Platoon. In fact, I saw the Mortar Platoon opening fire with their riot guns on to the crowd, which I saw were about 300 strong. Most of them were fleeing towards the direction of Glenfada Park. In the gap of all this firing I remember distinctly this automatic fire. I could not say where it came from or what it was or where it was from.”

50.66 Captain 200 also told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not see or identify the fall of shot.¹ He said nothing in either his written statement or his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about hearing single shots at the same time as hearing automatic fire.

50.67 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 said that he did not believe that it was possible that what he heard was the sound of several SLRs being fired, either at the same time or in very close proximity.

50.68 Private M was a member of Composite Platoon. In his second RMP statement,¹ he recorded that he was positioned about halfway along the east wall of a block of flats, west of the junction of Rossville Street and Eden Place. He heard gunfire and saw about three bullets strike the ground at the junction of Rossville Street and Eden Place. He saw the gunman on the “top floor balcony” of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. Another soldier engaged the gunman from a position 2m south of the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street. The other soldier was wearing a respirator. Private M did not know who he was. Private M saw no “strikes from the Military firer” but he saw the gunman run away.

50.69 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private M said that as he was running to the west side of Rossville Street after disembarking, he heard at least three or four shots of what he thought was automatic fire from one of the upper storeys of Block 2. The shots hit the road in front of the command vehicle where soldiers were running forward. One of these soldiers engaged the gunman in fire. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Private M gave a similar account. He said that the incident occurred after he “left the command vehicle” and that he saw the strikes of two rounds on the road.

50.70 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private M told us that he thought that he had heard two or three low velocity shots and seen them strike the road in an area north of Eden Place. He then saw a soldier who appeared to be firing towards Block 2. He told us² that he had no memory of seeing the gunman; and that it was quite possible that the incoming fire was automatic. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he could not explain why he had told the RMP that he had seen the gunman, and given a description of him, but had not made this claim in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

Conclusions

50.71 As will have been observed, the evidence about automatic gunfire is confused and conflicting.

50.72 In our view it is unlikely that Lance Corporal 033 heard or saw automatic fire, from a Thompson sub-machine gun or otherwise, though we cannot exclude the possibility that he did. He might simply have made up his account of automatic gunfire, or interpreted stones being thrown at the soldiers as rounds hitting the ground. It is also possible that he was confused, and thought that some of the substantial amount of Army firing taking place in the car park of the Rossville Flats as and after he reached the north end of the Rossville Flats was low velocity automatic fire. As we have already observed, we do not accept that, particularly in a built-up area with echoes, it is possible always to differentiate between high and low velocity fire, or automatic fire and a firearm being fired repeatedly. In our view the difficulty in differentiating between types of gunfire is likely to be accentuated in the case of someone wearing and using a radio headset.

- 50.73 We have also come to the conclusion that although Major Loden might have heard gunfire, if he did he was probably mistaken both in interpreting it as low velocity automatic gunfire and in his evidence as to when it occurred. He was clearly wrong in describing when and why he ordered his command vehicle to be moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats; and wrong in describing to the Widgery Inquiry how he heard continuous firing for about ten minutes after the vehicle had moved, since by the time the vehicle did move, the firing was nearly all over. In view of these matters it seems to us that Major Loden might have heard the substantial amount of firing that took place in the car park of the Rossville Flats before the command vehicle was moved, and might have attributed some of this to incoming low velocity fire. Where he was at this stage is unclear. When compiling his Diary of Operations the next day, he seems to have been relying upon what Lance Corporal 033 was saying (as he never suggested that he had himself seen rounds striking the ground) and, being muddled about the sequence of events, it seems to us that he probably came mistakenly to believe that he had heard what Lance Corporal 033 had described.
- 50.74 As to Captain 200, it is possible that he did hear automatic fire as he claimed, though to our minds it is equally possible, despite what he said to us, that he had mistakenly taken some of the substantial firing by soldiers in Sector 2 for automatic fire. We consider that the same applies to Private M, though in his case we have found no evidence to support his account of a soldier close to the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street firing back at a gunman in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, which to our minds casts doubt on the reliability of his evidence, as does his identification, in his second RMP statement but not in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, of the gunman on the top balcony of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, which would have been some 200 yards from where he said he was.
- 50.75 In all the circumstances, while we cannot wholly eliminate the possibility that there was some incoming automatic fire, it is our view that it is unlikely that there was. Had there been a long burst of automatic gunfire (about 15 rounds according to Major Loden, and about 20–25 according to Lance Corporal 033) in our view many more soldiers would be likely to have heard and reported it. Thus we consider that if there was any automatic gunfire, it could only have been a very short burst; and when and from where it could have come remains quite uncertain.

The significance of the evidence of incoming fire

50.76 We have dealt at some length with the question of incoming fire in Sector 2. However, none of the soldiers whom we consider to be responsible for killing or wounding the casualties in that sector fired in the belief that his target or targets had fired or was about to fire at him or his colleagues. So far as automatic gunfire is concerned, not one of the soldiers whose firing on Bloody Sunday in our view resulted in the deaths and woundings of that day at any stage claimed that he had fired at a target in response to what he believed was automatic gunfire directed at him or his colleagues by that target; or suggested that what he believed was incoming automatic fire had in any way influenced him into opening fire. Nor did those representing soldiers suggest otherwise to this Inquiry.

51.1 We have considered earlier in this report¹ the firing of three shots by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway. We have accepted Lieutenant N’s evidence, supported by evidence from civilians, that he fired over the heads of the people in the alleyway and in Chamberlain Street and that his shots in this location injured no-one.²

- 51.2 According to Lieutenant N, he subsequently fired a further shot. We consider first his account of this shot and then the accounts of the shots that other members of Mortar Platoon say that they fired. In the course of doing so, we describe the evidence that soldiers gave of firing or the throwing of bombs by their targets at the time they engaged them.
- 51.3 In the course of considering these matters, we draw attention to the marked maps which accompanied the Royal Military Police (RMP) statements of the soldiers who said that they had fired and to the trajectory photographs that were prepared later. As we have observed elsewhere in this report,¹ it appears that the former were probably prepared by the RMP after the statements had been taken and not by or with the assistance of the soldiers themselves, while the latter were prepared as part of the evidence for the Widgery Inquiry.

- 51.4 We also draw attention to the Loden List of Engagements,¹ which we have discussed elsewhere in this report² and which was a list of engagements prepared by Major Loden from information provided by soldiers soon after they had withdrawn from the Bogside. The list sets out brief details of 15 “engagements” and, while it does not identify the soldiers concerned, from the accounts they gave later it is possible in some cases to match the listed engagements with the accounts of particular soldiers. In other cases, either there is nothing in the list that seems to relate to the account of a firing soldier (Sergeant O being an example) or the position is not clear.

² Chapter 165

- 51.5 The first six entries in the list appear to relate to soldiers’ accounts of firing in Sector 2. These are:¹

- “1. One nail bomber at GR 43291683 shot from GR 43321684. Hit in thigh (Back of houses in Chamberlain St).
2. One petrol bomber at GR 43281679 shot from GR 43291683. Apparently killed (Car Park).
3. One bomber at GR 43261683 (top floor of flats) shot from GR 43281684. Apparently killed.
4. One gunman with pistol at GR 43321678 behind barricade at end of Chamberlain St shot from GR 43271686. Hit.

5. One nail bomber (bomb had lighted fuse) at GR 43281683 (Car Park) shot from GR 43271686. Hit.

6. One nail bomber at GR 43281675 (Car Park) shot from GR 43271686. Hit.”

51.6 In the course of considering the accounts of firing given by members of Mortar Platoon, we examine and discuss which soldier might be referred to in each of these entries; we also consider why it is that some of the firing by members of Mortar Platoon was not recorded in the list.

51.7 The Loden List of Engagements appears to be the first recorded account of some of the shooting in Sector 2 by members of Mortar Platoon, but since the identification of particular soldiers with the listed engagements depends upon their later accounts, in this part of the report we consider the list in relation to each soldier after summarising the other accounts that he gave in 1972.

The soldiers from Lieutenant N's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Lieutenant N

51.8 As we have already described,¹ after firing three shots up the Eden Place alleyway, Lieutenant N returned to his Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) with Duncan Clark and Private INQ 1918. We are sure that one of Colman Doyle's photographs shows Lieutenant N assisting Private INQ 1918 with Duncan Clark, while another shows Lieutenant N back at the APC.²

¹ Paragraphs 30.36–47 and 45.5–6

² Day 322/87

The account of his firing given by Lieutenant N to the Royal Military Police

- 51.9 In his first RMP statement timed at 0045 hours on 31st January 1972,¹ Lieutenant N, after describing his first three shots, did not record that he had taken Duncan Clark back to the APC but merely that he moved back into the car park in front of the Rossville Flats. His statement continued:

“I took up a position about 10 yards from a garden wall which I think would be at the rear of number 24 Chamberlain St. I had been in this position for about five minutes when I saw a man, aged about 24 years, dressed in a blue anorak, come around the corner of the wall at the rear of number 36 Chamberlain St.

The man vanished behind the wall and then reappeared holding something in his right hand. I saw smoke coming from the object he was holding and he drew his arm back to throw it at one of my vehicles which was about twenty yards north of his position.

I assumed this object to be a nail bomb and fired one aimed shot 7.62 mm at the man. The man staggered, clutched at his right thigh and then fell back out of sight behind the wall from which he had originally appeared. Due to the situation I was unable to carry out any follow-up action to arrest the man.”

- 51.10 24 Chamberlain Street is approximately 40 yards from the southern end of the houses on the side of Chamberlain Street that backed onto the waste ground. 36 Chamberlain Street is the southernmost house on the same side.

- 51.11 Lieutenant N's second and third RMP statements dealt respectively with recovering bodies from the rubble barricade in Rossville Street¹ and with ejecting a live round.² We dealt with the second of these matters earlier in this report³ and will deal with the first in our consideration of later events in Sector 3.⁴

¹ B384. Lieutenant N's fourth RMP statement (B394) also dealt with the collection of the bodies.

³ Paragraphs 30.38, 30.45 and 30.53

⁴ Chapter 122

Lieutenant N's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his firing, and Lieutenant N's trajectory photograph and Royal Military Police map

51.12 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N gave an account of going back to his APC with an arrestee before he fired again:

"10. My signaler had arrested a man and I went with him to my pig which was still in the middle of the open space and put the prisoner in it, the corporal there taking charge. I then moved straight to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses again to get cover. As I was moving up towards my men a civilian stepped out beyond the end house. He came out in a throwing attitude with his right arm back in the attitude of someone about to bow. He was about 30 or 40 yards away and appeared to me about to throw the object in his hand at my platoon sergeant's pig.

11. The object in his hand seemed to me to be a nail bomb. His throwing attitude was the attitude of a bomber and not a stone thrower. I thought too that I saw smoke coming from the object. I fired one shot at him from the shoulder and aimed. I think that I hit him in the right thigh. He put his hands down towards his right thigh and staggered off as if his leg was not working properly. I saw no explosion."

51.13 The reference to "my signaler" must be a reference to Private INQ 1918.

51.14 Lieutenant N then stated that he went across to his Sergeant's APC to find out what had been happening. According to this account, by the time he reached that APC "firing had ceased from my men".

51.15 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Lieutenant N described the man he saw as "a fairly young man, about 20-odd. He came out, ducked back briefly, and came out again in a nail bomb throwing position", which Lieutenant N said was a sort of bowling position.¹ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lieutenant N explained that by this he meant a position in which the man was about to bowl overarm, as in the game of cricket.² He told the Widgery Inquiry that the object in the man's hand was smoking and that he had seen nail bombs before in Belfast.³

² Day 323/54-55

51.16 Lieutenant N then gave an account, similar to the one given in his written statement, of shooting at the man and thinking that he had hit him in the right thigh. He then confirmed that his trajectory photograph showed with a cross his position and with the number 3 the position of the man he said he shot.¹

51.17 We set out below the map that accompanied Lieutenant N's first RMP statement.¹ It will be noted that arrows on the map indicate that there were bombers in two positions, one at the position marked on the trajectory photograph, and the other on the south side of the Eden Place alleyway at its junction with Chamberlain Street. There was nothing in

Lieutenant N's RMP account to suggest that he fired at or towards a bomber in the latter position and we have no doubt that the compiler of the map was in error in marking the map in this way.

51.18 In contrast to his first RMP statement, Lieutenant N said nothing in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about having spent a number of minutes, before firing the shot, in the position from which he said that he fired at the man with the smoking object.

The first entry in the Loden List of Engagements

51.19 The first entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

51.20 This entry refers to a soldier shooting a nail bomber in the thigh. According to the grid references given (which are the same as those given in Lieutenant N’s first RMP statement¹) the nail bomber was in the mouth of the car park, close to the back of the two most southerly houses on Chamberlain Street. The soldier was further north and either in Chamberlain Street, or inside one of the houses or gardens on the western side of Chamberlain Street. However, as we have already noted, in his first RMP statement, Lieutenant N had described his position as “about 10 yards from a garden wall which I think would be at the rear of number 24 Chamberlain St”. As we have pointed out in our discussion elsewhere in this report of the Loden List of Engagements,² we consider that in view of the circumstances in which the list was made, the grid references should be treated as approximations rather than precise positions, and there may well be errors in them. In our view the grid reference for Lieutenant N was incorrect, putting him further east than he said he was. The positions according to the grid references have been marked on the following map, prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families.³

³ OS2.46 (extract)

² Chapter 165

- 51.21 We are satisfied that the first entry reflects an account that Lieutenant N gave to Major Loden of the fourth shot that he said he fired. Both in the entry in the list and in Lieutenant N's later evidence, the target was described as a nail bomber at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses who was shot in the thigh. This does not correspond with any account given by any of the soldiers other than Lieutenant N.
- 51.22 Although Major Loden's list includes a reference to Lieutenant N's final shot, there is no equivalent entry concerning the warning shots that he fired into the Eden Place alleyway. This may be because the document was, as its preface makes clear, a list of "engagements" in a "gunbattle",¹ whereas Lieutenant N's evidence was that he fired his first three shots in order to ward off a hostile crowd, rather than at a gunman or bomber. It thus seems possible that it was for this reason that either he chose not to mention, or Major Loden chose not to record, the incident as the latter compiled his list.
- ¹ ED49.12
- 51.23 To our minds the fact that the first entry on the list refers to a shot fired by Lieutenant N does not provide evidence that this was the first shot to be fired at a human target in Sector 2, though for reasons given earlier in this report,¹ it seems likely that Lieutenant N's shots fired up the Eden Place alleyway over the heads of people there were the first shots to be fired by a soldier in Sector 2. As the only officer who said that he had fired, it is possible either that he would have been the first to report to Major Loden, or that his entry was put at the top of the list because he was the officer.

Lieutenant N's evidence to this Inquiry about his firing

51.24 Lieutenant N gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

51.25 In his written statement¹ Lieutenant N told us that while he recollected shooting a man in the act of throwing a nail bomb, the best evidence he could give was to refer to what he had said in 1972: *"In fact, I now have no faith in my current memory of events before, during or after that day."*² In the same statement, Lieutenant N told us that the incident had bothered him for years: *"This was an expression of self doubt which I first experienced several years later when learning that the forensic evidence was flawed."*³ He also stated:

"Whatever doubts I have had over the years about shooting that man and I have thought a lot about this incident, I am now and have always been convinced that at the moment that I fired I thought he was in the act of throwing a nail bomb."

³ B438.011

² B438.012

51.26 Lieutenant N repeated this when he gave his oral evidence.¹ He also told us that his position, as shown in his trajectory photograph, which is reproduced above, was "more like" where he was than the position shown on the map that accompanied his first RMP statement,² which placed him close up against the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses.³ He said that he had made no attempt to arrest the man because he was too far away from him and "I had no idea of what had been going on in that area or what was going on further round that corner".⁴

³ Day 322/92

⁴ Day 322/95

51.27 Asked how confident he was in the recollection in his written statement,¹ that the man had been wearing what looked like an old-fashioned tweed jacket, he replied that he was not confident at all and that the account he gave in his first RMP statement of the man wearing a blue anorak was likely to be a much more accurate description.²

² Day 322/95-96

Lieutenant N's evidence about whether he sheltered in an Armoured Personnel Carrier

51.28 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lieutenant N was also asked about evidence that Warrant Officer Class I INQ 2037, the Regimental Sergeant Major of 1 PARA, had given of going to an APC and finding Lieutenant N “sheltering there because he was scared”.¹ Lieutenant N denied that any such incident had taken place. He also denied that he had been in that APC or that he had retreated to it in shock because he had realised he had shot Margaret Deery, who was wounded in the left thigh in Sector 2: “I did not shoot a woman.”²

² Day 322/103-104; Day 323/16-17

Lieutenant N's use of his respirator

51.29 Later in his oral evidence to this Inquiry Lieutenant N was asked about his respirator.

51.30 It appears from Lieutenant N's statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and from his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² that he put on his respirator while waiting for Barrier 12 to be opened to allow his vehicle to pass down Little James Street. He did so because he could see a cloud of CS gas on the far side of the barrier.

² WT12.63

51.31 Neither in his statement for nor in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry did he say when he removed his respirator. However, it appears from his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry¹ that he was still wearing it during his confrontation with the man he said threw lumps of concrete at him.

51.32 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N told us that he thought that he and his men had removed their respirators as soon as they had passed through the cloud of CS gas. But he said that he was not certain about this, and acknowledged that his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry suggested otherwise. Later in his written statement to this Inquiry,² he cast further doubt on the reliability of his current recollection, pointing out that his signaller Private INQ 1918 was still wearing his gas mask when Jeffrey Morris took the photograph showing this soldier and Duncan Clark close to the Eden Place alleyway.³

³ Paragraph 26.7

² B438.009

51.33 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N was disposed to accept that he was the soldier seen wearing a respirator on the left in the two photographs we have displayed above.² Those photographs show Duncan Clark being escorted back to Lieutenant N's vehicle, which occurred after Lieutenant N had fired his shots from Eden Place. As we have observed earlier, we are sure that these photographs show Lieutenant N.

² Paragraph 51.8

51.34 Later in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that he recalled that after the second of these photographs had been taken, he removed his respirator, repaired the broken strap of his helmet and put his helmet back on. Later he repeated that he had taken off his respirator at that stage, although on this occasion he said that he could not recollect what headgear he then put on.² He stated clearly that he was not wearing his respirator when he fired at the man he believed to be a nail bomber. Later still he again said that he had removed his respirator while he was beside his vehicle after bringing Duncan Clark back to it.³

³ Day 323/47-48

² Day 323/17-18

51.35 Taken as a whole, Lieutenant N's evidence seems to be to the effect that he put on his respirator at Barrier 12, was still wearing it when he fired his shots from Eden Place and while escorting Duncan Clark back to his vehicle, but that he then removed it and was not wearing it when he fired at the alleged nail bomber or at any later stage.

Lieutenant N's evidence about delay before he fired his final shot

51.36 Lieutenant N told us that he had no idea why in his first RMP statement he had recorded that he had been at the position from which he fired at the nail bomber "for about five minutes" before he saw the man at whom he fired: "... it does not make sense."¹ He then gave the following evidence:²

“Q. It does not make sense, but it must have come from you; is that correct? You see, Lieutenant N, can I suggest to you it is perfectly understandable that the RMP investigator may have been trying to put a smoking nail bomb into the hand of the person whom you shot, but it is really quite impossible to understand why the RMP investigator should be trying to establish that while your men were firing some 28-odd shots at civilians at Rossville Flats, that you were standing rooted to the spot for five minutes, apparently incapable of taking any of it in?

A. No, that is not true.

Q. Then why is it that you said that you stood at this spot, in the middle of the wasteground, for a period of five minutes, during which five minutes it appears that the bulk of your soldiers' shots were fired?

A. I have absolutely no idea.

Q. There is no sensible explanation that you can give for it, other than that is actually what happened; is that fair?

A. Other than there has been some mistake in the taking, delivering, and recording of this statement.

Q. And presumably the signing up to it as well, because it is signed by you?

A. Is it?

Q. Well, certainly the typed copy discloses that there was a signature, if one looks at 375, towards the bottom, dated 31st January 1972, signed Soldier N, taken at 0045?

A. Then I must not have read it properly, because it does not make sense, it bears no resemblance to what I recall.

Q. But what has happened is that somehow or other the person who took the statement has gained the notion that you stood rooted to the same spot for five minutes while this firing was going on and you then, having seen that, signed up to it. Presumably, like any person signing a statement, but in particular as an officer signing a statement, one does at least ensure that its contents are accurate?

A. I have got no explanation, I am sorry.

Q. If you had reached the position X [this is a reference to the position marked on Lieutenant N's trajectory photograph], then certainly both your Treasury statement [Lieutenant N's written statement for the Widgery Inquiry] and Widgery evidence indicate that your purpose in getting to X would have been to establish what was going on and what your soldiers were doing and what their position was; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. What ought to have been happening is that you ought to have been making your way up to where the shots were being discharged, where the engagement was apparently taking place?

A. Yes.

Q. Does this statement not suggest that what in fact happened was that, having seen the engagement, that you were incapable of moving forward to it?

A. No.

Q. Can you think of any reason why the investigator may have succumbed to the notion that you stayed at this particular location for a period of five minutes?

A. No.

Q. Is it possible that that is why you were troubled about Bloody Sunday?

A. What is?

Q. Because you were incapable of taking part in this engagement with your men?

A. No."

51.37

There is a handwritten copy of Lieutenant N's first RMP statement, which we have examined. Each page appears to have been signed by Lieutenant N. The handwritten version was not put to him when he gave oral evidence. In response to questioning by his counsel, Lieutenant N said that he had no recollection of making his first RMP statement and no recollection of signing it, but in our view it was signed by him.¹

Lieutenant N's evidence about whether he could have shot Michael Bridge

51.38 Lieutenant N was shown a photograph of Michael Bridge standing in the car park. Michael Bridge was shot in the left thigh. We consider this photograph and the circumstances of his injury later in this report.¹ Lieutenant N said that it was not possible that Michael Bridge was the person he shot, because “the person I shot was much nearer the corner”.² He also said that it was not possible that he had hit someone other than the person he was aiming at or that he had hit more than one person.³

² Day 323/118

Lieutenant N's evidence about firing by other soldiers

51.39 Throughout his evidence Lieutenant N was adamant that he had not seen any of his soldiers fire.

Summary of Lieutenant N's accounts of his shots

51.40 According to Lieutenant N, he fired three shots up the Eden Place alleyway and then, after returning to his APC, went forward to a position close to Pilot Row, fired at and believed he had hit in the thigh a man he described as about to throw a bomb, who was at the corner of the southernmost house on Chamberlain Street.

Evidence of other soldiers about Lieutenant N's firing

51.41 We have considered earlier in this report¹ the shots fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway. Apart from Private 019, no other soldier gave evidence of hearing shots that he identified as those fired by Lieutenant N at Eden Place.

¹ Paragraphs 30.36–128

51.42 Sergeant O told us that he was not aware of Lieutenant N's shots at the Eden Place alleyway, nor of any shots other than his own being fired towards the south-east corner of the car park.¹ Private S told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not see any other soldier fire apart from Sergeant O.² Private Q told the Widgery Inquiry that the shooting by Private T was the only shooting he saw apart from his own.³ Private T told the Widgery Inquiry that he only saw Sergeant O firing.⁴ Lance Corporal V told the Widgery Inquiry that he had only seen Private S firing.⁵ Private 006 told us that he did not hear the shots fired by

Lieutenant N.⁶ Corporal P told us that he did not see Lieutenant N firing.⁷ Private INQ 1918 told us that he had no recollection of the shots fired by Lieutenant N from Eden Place.⁸

51.43 No other soldier gave evidence of seeing Lieutenant N fire the shot that he said that he fired at a man who was about to throw a bomb.

Private S

51.44 We have already referred to the accounts Private S gave of disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC and moving up to a position against the wall at the back of the last-but-one house on the west side of Chamberlain Street.¹ Although Private S told us he had no recollection of an incident with the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle, and made no mention of this in the accounts that he gave in 1972, we have no doubt, for the reasons we have given, that he was one of the two soldiers involved in this incident, the other being Lance Corporal V.²

² Paragraphs 31.1–14

The account of his firing given by Private S to the Royal Military Police

51.45 In his first RMP statement, Private S, after describing the throwing of bottles and stones at the soldiers and giving an account of nail bombs being thrown from the top of the Rossville Flats¹ (which he repeated in his second RMP statement² but, as noted above,³ retracted in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry⁴), gave the following account:⁵

"I had been in my position for about five minutes when a gap appeared in the crowd. I saw a man standing in the gap between blocks one and two of the flats. The man went down into a kneeling position facing towards me. I heard the sound of gunfire. About four single shots were fired in my direction. They passed about five to ten metres from me and struck the walls of derelict houses behind me about fifty metres away. I saw the man move and I think he was attempting to stand up. As he moved I saw he was holding a long metallic object which appeared to be a rifle.

I fired three aimed shots 7.62 mm at the man. I do not think I hit him but before I could fire again the crowd moved and closed the gap.

About thirty seconds later the crowd opened up and made a similar gap.

I saw a man in a kneeling position in the gap between blocks 1 and 2 of the flats. The man was facing my way and I saw two muzzle flashes coming from his shoulder position. I fired three aimed shots at the man and I saw his body jerk backwards. I believe I hit him. The crowd closed the gap again so I was unable to fire any more.

The gap opened again after about thirty seconds and I saw a man in a kneeling position. I saw three muzzle flashes from his shoulder position.

I fired three aimed shots at the man before the gap in the crowd closed again. I do not think I hit him.

About thirty seconds later the gap opened again and once more I saw a man in a kneeling position. This time I saw four muzzle flashes come from his shoulder position. I saw these shots strike the water in a pond about fifty metres to my rear.

I fired three aimed shots at the man and saw his body jerk backwards as if my rounds had hit him.

I cannot say if it was the same man firing at me each time.

Altogether I fired 12 rounds 7.62 mm.”

51.46 In the map that accompanied this RMP statement, the position of Private S and his target was depicted as follows.¹

¹ B695

The account of firing by Sergeant O given by Private S to the Royal Military Police

51.47 We have already referred¹ to Private S's second RMP statement² when discussing the evidence of the soldiers relating to nail and blast bombs and his account of incoming fire from a gunman at "a ground floor window, about three windows in from the South East corner of Block 1 of the flats". This statement continued:

"[Sergeant] 'O' who was positioned at the side of the APC nearest to my position, engaged the gunman and fired I believe two shots in return. I was unable to determine whether the shots had hit the gunman as I was heavily committed with my own position. I was not able to observe the gunman long enough to give an accurate description of him."

¹ Paragraphs 47.7–8 and 49.15–16

² B703

51.48 As we have already noted, Private S told us that his account of this gunman was untrue.¹

Private S's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his and Sergeant O's firing, and Private S's trajectory photograph

51.49 In his written evidence for the Widgery Inquiry, Private S gave this account:¹

"5. I remained in position by the back wall of No. 34 Chamberlain Street and kept a look out over the court yard. There was firing going on at this time. Through a gap in the crowd I saw a man kneeling in a gap in the court yard shown marked oo ... on my photograph. I heard the sound of firing from that direction and could hear that the rounds passed me and hit the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses between 5 and 10 metres behind me. About 4 shots were fired. I judged that it was an M1 or similar weapon which was firing. I could not at that time distinguish muzzle flashes and I was not perfectly certain that the shots were being fired by the kneeling man. I kept watching him but did not immediately fire back. Then the man moved as if to stand up and as he did so he moved the weapon from his shoulder and I could see positively that it was a rifle of some sort. Although there were civilians milling about in the area there was still a clear line of sight between me and the man with the gun. As soon as I had identified the weapon clearly I fired 3 aimed shots at him, but I think I missed. At that point people moved between me and him for a short time and I lost sight of him."

6. After a very short time, about 30 seconds later, I caught sight of him again. I think he had moved his position slightly, but he was still in the same corner of the courtyard. He was kneeling and facing me. I heard the sound of firing again and this time I saw muzzle flashes coming from the weapon at his shoulder. I immediately fired 3 aimed shots and I believe I hit him. I could not however fire any further rounds because once more other people came into the line of fire.

7. While I was engaging this gunman with fire I was aware of the scattered movement of the crowd on the far side of the car park. I believe they were thinning out all the time and probably trying to get out of the openings between the blocks. By this time I was looking out for a gunman in the corner very carefully and was able to pick one out if the crowd's movement left a clear line of sight for only a short time.

8. I saw a gunman in this position twice more. I do not know if it was the same man each time.

9. The third time I saw him he fired 3 shots at me, and I fired 3 at him, but do not think I hit him. The fourth time, which again followed after an interval of about half a minute, I remember he fired 4 shots. These did not go near me but passed on my right and I looked round to see what he was shooting at. I saw splashes of water on the pond where my pig was stopped, but I did not see any shots hit the pig. I fired 3 shots at the man and this time I believe I hit him, because I saw his body jerk backwards. I went on looking in his direction, but other people got in the way and I did not see him again.

10. At some time, I think between the 3rd and the 4th occasion when I engaged the gunman, I saw [Sergeant] O, who was by his pig on my right, fire shots at the other corner of the car park. I shouted at him just before this that he was under fire. I could not see what his target was, as it was behind the wall I was standing against. While my own engagement was going on, I was aware that bottles and other missiles, including acid bombs, were being thrown from block 1 at the troops below.

11. After my last exchange of fire the platoon commander called us back to our vehicles and we moved off."

51.50 The reference in this account to a photograph appears to be to Private S's trajectory photograph.¹

¹ There is another version of the trajectory photograph in which Private S's targets are shown as four small "o"s instead of one large "O", but in the same position as the large "O".

51.51 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private S said that he had no recollection of how this photograph came to be prepared.¹

51.52 As can be seen, on this photograph the position of Private S is marked as further away from the southern corner of the Chamberlain Street houses than it was on his RMP map, though in his first RMP statement Private S described being in the position shown on his trajectory photograph. The position marked on the RMP statement seems therefore to have been incorrect.¹

51.53 It was, as noted above, in his written account for the Widgery Inquiry that Private S retracted what he had recorded in his RMP statements about seeing nail bombs.

51.54 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private S said that when he had reached his position at the back of one of the houses in Chamberlain Street, he stayed there all the time.¹ He told the Widgery Inquiry that after he saw a man kneeling in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, he heard and counted four shots:²

“Q. Did you know where those shots struck?

A. The shots passed me, the rounds passed me and went on past me, must have struck somewhere to my rear.

Q. How far to your rear do you think they landed?

A. Could have been –

Q. Did you hear them land actually?

A. Not really; I just heard the shots coming past me closely.

Q. Could you tell or form any view about what sort of weapon was firing?

A. I would say a medium calibre, an M.1; it could have been an M.16.

Q. Could you see any muzzle flashes at that stage?

A. Not at that stage.

Q. At that stage could you tell for sure from whom the shots were coming?

A. I knew the direction the shots were coming.

Q. Did you keep watching towards that kneeling man?

A. I did.”

² WT12.103

51.55 Private S continued by telling the Widgery Inquiry that the man stood up and he could see his rifle at his shoulder: “As soon as I saw him, as soon as I identified him as the gunman, I fired three aimed shots at him.” Private S said that he did not think that he had hit the man. He also said that some people then came between him and the gunman but he caught sight of him again about 30 or 40 seconds later. The man was roughly in the same position. He heard the man fire and saw his muzzle flashes: “He was still in a sort of kneeling crouched position ... I fired three aimed shots at him.”¹

51.56 Private S said that he thought he had hit the man this time, but that he could not fire any more shots then because his line of sight was obstructed. Asked how many people were in the car park at this time he said: *"There were quite a few ... They were milling about; they were more or less going through the gaps of the flats."*¹

51.57 Private S told the Widgery Inquiry that he then saw a gunman in the same position twice more. The gunman fired several rounds in his direction, and he fired three shots back. Private S said that he did not think that he had hit the gunman, who fired three or four more shots, which passed by to his right and landed in the region of his APC. From the transcript it appears that Private S was referring to the APC parked by Pilot Row, ie Lieutenant N's APC.¹

51.58 Private S said that he fired three more shots and this time thought he had hit the gunman as "His body jerked backwards", but he could not see the man after that as people obstructed his view. He told the Widgery Inquiry that he could not be sure whether it was the same man he had shot at on each occasion that he fired.¹

51.59 Private S also said that during the period in which he was firing Sergeant O was on the forward left side of Sergeant O's APC, and that he shouted to Sergeant O that Sergeant O was under fire because some shots fell in front of Sergeant O that Sergeant O had not seen. *"I could not see what he was engaging."*¹

51.60 Asked whether he could see any other hostile activity towards the troops while he was firing, Private S replied that there was a hail of bottles, he guessed 40 to 50 in number, thrown down from the flats.¹

51.61 Later in his oral evidence Private S said that he saw one person lying on the ground to his front before he had discharged all his shots, when there were still people milling about in the car park. Asked whether he had fired any shots before he saw the body, Private S replied: *"I may have, sir, but I don't think so."*¹

51.62 Private S said that Sergeant O was the only other soldier he saw fire.¹

The absence of reference to Private S's firing in the Loden List of Engagements

51.63 There is no reference to any of Private S's claimed shots in the Loden List of Engagements.¹ It is not clear why this is so. There is no evidence to suggest that Private S was one of the soldiers tasked, alongside Sergeant O and Corporal P, with taking the bodies of those killed at the rubble barricade to Altnagelvin Hospital. Nor is there any other obvious explanation as to why Private S either was not interviewed by Major Loden, or was interviewed without the relevant information being recorded. Private S told this Inquiry that he did not recall speaking to Major Loden, after Support Company's withdrawal from the Bogside, about his firing.² There is no evidence from Major Loden on this point. It might be that Private S was occupied on other duties. It is also possible that at this stage Private S was not claiming to have hit anyone, and thus his shots did not appear on the list for the same reason as the first three fired by Lieutenant N. These possibilities are, however, no more than speculation.

² Day 332/75

Private S's evidence to this Inquiry about his and Sergeant O's firing

51.64 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Private S stated:¹

"18. I moved forward and I have a general recollection of my platoon sergeant, soldier O being to my right and beside his Pig and I was looking for gunmen. I remember at some stage focusing on the alleyway between two blocks of the flats, this was a good place for a gunman as it offered cover and an escape route. I was then engaged in exchanges of fire with a gunman or gunmen. My only recollection now is that the exchange was over quickly, I do not recall how many rounds I fired, or were fired at me or whether or not I hit any of the men who were firing at me – I use the term in the plural as it was possibly more than one person who fired at me from the same position.

19. The only other memory I have of the time I was in this area is that I was near to a wall, soldier O was to my right and at the front left hand side of his vehicle, I think near the passenger door. I recall that he appeared to be engaging a target, although I cannot now remember any more than that."

51.65 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private S told us that he now had no recollection of what had caused him to fire the first time.¹ He then made the following comment about his RMP statements:²

“Now, I would ask the Tribunal to bear with me for a moment, that when I actually made the first statement, which I believe was quite late at night, I mean, that was made to the RMPs, which – making a statement to the RMP is, is – can be quite a frightening affair in itself and, basically, there is a lot of things in there that I concede, even though I have signed the statement – yes, I have signed it, but I am not actually condoning some of the inaccuracies in the statement and in the statement that I made on the 4th.

Now, having said that, I would reiterate, I know I signed them, but I am basically – I regret the fact that I have signed a statement in 1972 that is basically inaccurate; it is not wholly inaccurate, but there are bits in there that – that have been added by the RMPs that are not wholly accurate, that I want to say that.”

² Day 331/61-62

51.66 Counsel to the Inquiry accordingly took Private S through these statements in some detail. The first material inaccuracy identified by Private S related to his account of nail bombs being thrown from the Rossville Flats, which we have considered earlier in this report.¹ He told us that the account in his first RMP statement of his firing was the truth,² though a little later in his evidence there was the following exchange:³

“Q. It is correct, is it, that you have now no actual recollection at all of the rather dramatic incident which is described in this statement, of firing twelve shots in all, four bursts of three at 30-second intervals, injuring one man twice or two men once?

A. No, I have no recollection of it now, no.”

¹ Paragraphs 47.8–9 and 49.15–16

³ Day 331/73

² Day 331/69-70

51.67 Private S then told us that his account in his second RMP statement of seeing a gunman firing from a ground floor window should not be relied upon as an accurate statement, though he did not withdraw his account of seeing the bullets hit the ground about 10m short of the APC or his account of seeing Sergeant O fired at and returning fire.¹

51.68 Private S was unable to explain why in his first RMP statement he had described shots fired at him that had struck the walls of derelict houses about 50m behind him, in his written account for the Widgery Inquiry he had described them hitting the back wall of Chamberlain Street between 5m and 10m behind him and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he had said that he had not really heard them land.¹

51.69 Later in his oral evidence Private S was asked to explain how he knew that parts of his RMP statements were inaccurate, having just told this Inquiry that at the time he made them, he believed them to be true.¹ There was then the following exchange:²

“A. I do not remember making, I have said that on several occasions, sir – I do not remember making these statements, I do not even remember the people that interviewed me in the statements, I do not.

Q. You do not remember anything about the way in which the statements were taken?

A. I do not remember, sir. If I did, I would tell you so.

Q. If you do not remember anything about the way the statements were taken, how could you possibly, in fairness, place any blame on the RMPs who took the statements?

A. Because when you make a statement to the RMP, they are, shall we say, they are intimidating, to say the least and –

Q. Were they intimidating on this occasion?

A. Well, they can –

Q. On these two occasions when you made your statements to them?

A. They can be intimidating to an 18-year-old.

Q. Were they in fact intimidating on the two occasions you made your statements to them in respect of Bloody Sunday?

A. You are asking me now to commute the – I can see what you are doing. You are asking me now to commute the whole blame of the responsibility, to shift it over to the RMP. I am not going to say that they were intimidating in that way. I am sorry, sir, I am not going to say that.

LORD SAVILLE: I interrupt, it is the chairman, Soldier S. I do not think Mr Macdonald is doing that. What Mr Macdonald is doing, and he will correct me if I am wrong, is trying to get your assistance as to why you are now saying that parts of these statements are wrong; am I right in that, Mr Macdonald?

MR MACDONALD: Yes, sir.

LORD SAVILLE: Perhaps you could put the question again.

You have told us that some parts of these statements are unreliable. An example you took was that you could not have been facing northwest?

A. That is right, sir.

LORD SAVILLE: That is actually a minor example which I do not think anyone is going to blame anyone about, subject to correction from Mr Macdonald, but there are other parts of these statements that you told us yesterday you regarded as unreliable.

What Mr Macdonald is seeking to do is to discover why you take that view of those parts of the statement that are unreliable and in order to do that he is exploring with you the circumstances in which the statements were made. You have told us more than once that you cannot remember the details of the statement-taking process. You have made the point more than once that, in the ordinary course of things, an 18-year-old soldier is likely to be intimidated by the RMP, in general terms.

But concentrate, please, on what Mr Macdonald is trying to get from you, which is why certain parts of these statements you now say are unreliable; that is the point we are getting at.

Mr Macdonald.

MR MACDONALD: Do you remember, in fact, being intimidated by these RMPs who took these statements?

A. No, I do not, sir.

Q. Do you remember in fact them putting words into your statements that you did not give to them?

A. No, I do not remember them putting words into my statements that I gave to them.

Q. You cannot say that anything that appears in these statements came from the RMPs as opposed to from yourself?

A. No, I cannot remember that.

Q. So you cannot properly say that you signed statements that were effectively written by other people, can you?

A. Well, by the logic that I follow you, yes, no, I cannot.

Q. In fact what you are doing is trying to transfer the blame for the inaccuracies to the RMPs?

A. I am sorry, I have said that, no –

Q. Why do you persist in saying that there were things in the statement that were not really written by you and that you regret signing them and you must have been intimidated? Where does the intimidation come into it?

A. The statements are inaccurate in the respect that they do not accurately reflect probably what I actually quoted to the RMPs on the day.

Q. Why are you suggesting that the RMPs put things into your statement that you did not give to them? The sort of terms that you used were that they may have collated material that may have come from a number of people?

A. Well, I think they, they would have collated some of this, I mean, that would have been common sense for them to do that at the time, would it not?

Q. No, it would not, Soldier S, because these statements purport to be an account of your recollection of the events. Now, to get to the point very simply: I am suggesting to you that the reason why you are now – the reason, first of all, why the account appears in your statement in the way that it does, is that you were telling lies about your account?

A. No, I was not, sir.

Q. The inaccuracies are attributable to you trying to tell lies and not to the RMPs telling lies for you?

A. No.

Q. Or could it be that it is a combination of you telling lies and the RMPs helping you to tell lies?

A. No.

Q. How do you know?

A. No.

Q. How do you know?

A. I would not do that.

Q. But you do not remember doing that or not doing that, do you?

A. No, I do not.

Q. You claim to have no recollection of this at all?

A. I do not, that is correct, that is correct, but I would not do that.”

² Day 332/16-21

51.70

Private S was asked much the same later in his oral evidence, when he was asked to explain how he had come to change the account given in his second RMP statement¹ of Sergeant O firing at a gunman at a ground floor window at the south-east corner of Block 1 to the account given in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry² of Sergeant O firing into “the other corner of the car park”:³

MR MACDONALD: B724.016.

LORD SAVILLE: Look at that paragraph. It describes you saying that you saw a gunman open fire from a ground floor window, about three windows in from the southeast corner of Block 1, he fired about six shots direct at members of the company, who were: ‘... employed around one of our APCs, positioned about 15 metres west of my position. I saw the gunman’s bullets strike the ground about 10 metres short of the APC. [Sergeant] O, who was positioned at the side of the APC nearest my position engaged the gunman and fired, I believe, two shots in return.’

You have told this Tribunal and in reply to Mr Macdonald’s questions, you have repeated, that that is inaccurate?

A. Yes.

LORD SAVILLE: What Mr Macdonald has been trying to ascertain from you is: how are you able to say that that paragraph is inaccurate? You tell us you do not remember the incident, so how do you know that that paragraph is inaccurate?

A. Because it was probably inserted there for me, probably.

MR MACDONALD: By the RMP who took the statement?

A. Probably, yes, sir.

Q. And you went along with it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you could only say that that probably happened because you have a recollection to that effect; is that not right?

A. I have very, very little recollections of the incidents and the statements I have made, as I have said I have – I wish I had more.

Q. Do you have some vague recollection to that effect, that that is what happened: that this was put in your statement by an RMP and you went along with it because you were only 18 and felt intimidated?

A. Yes, that is probably more to the truth. I am not proud of that.

LORD SAVILLE: Is there another possibility, that some of your colleagues suggested to you that you should tell that to the RMP; is that a possibility?

A. I, I would not think that that would have been a possibility, because that would have been sort of – it would amount to sort of colluding and – I think every man on the day would have had to make his own – would have had to account for his own actions, really. I think that by the time we made these statements, I think everybody, I think, fully realised the gravity of the situation, I would say.

No, I would not, I would not go along with that, sir, with respect.

LORD SAVILLE: Tell me if I am wrong in summarising it this way, but your evidence to the Tribunal is that this paragraph is untrue and you witnessed no such event as is described in that paragraph; is that right?

A. Yes, I would agree with that."

² B708

³ Day 332/71-74

51.71 At the end of his oral evidence Private S denied that any of his firing was from the hip or from his waist.¹

Private S's use of his respirator

51.72 In his written statement for and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private S stated that he put on his respirator before moving off from Queen's Street. He did not say for how long he wore it. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Private S told us that he could not remember whether he was wearing a respirator.

51.73 Both soldiers shown in the enlargement of the photograph taken by Colman Doyle that we have reproduced in our discussion of the incident involving the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle¹ can be seen to be wearing respirators. For reasons given earlier, we consider that Private S is one of these soldiers, the other being Lance Corporal V. Thus we consider that Private S was still wearing his respirator as he moved south after the incident involving Charles McMonagle.

Summary of Private S's account of his shots

51.74 According to the accounts given by Private S, therefore, about five minutes after he reached a position near the back wall of the last-but-one house in Chamberlain Street and from that position, he fired four groups of three shots at a man who was firing a rifle in his direction from the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. He said that he believed he missed the man with his first group of shots but hit him when he fired his second group. Similarly, he said he believed he missed the man when he fired his third group of three shots but hit him when he fired his fourth group. His evidence was that there was a gap of about 30 seconds between each of his groups of shots, and that on each occasion after he had fired a group of shots, the crowd came between him and the man he was seeking to shoot. He did not know whether each group of shots was fired at the same man.

Summary of Sergeant O's account of firing by Private S

51.75 We deal in detail with Sergeant O's evidence of firing later in this chapter.¹ So far as Private S is concerned Sergeant O's evidence was to the effect that Private S was the only soldier whom he had seen firing, and that he saw Private S firing from the back wall of a house near the end of Chamberlain Street towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. Sergeant O said that he caught one glimpse of a man kneeling down in that location firing a weapon from the shoulder. The man was in a small gap by himself but there were people moving about that area. According to Sergeant O, it was after he had himself fired at a man on a walkway between Blocks 2 and 3, or on a balcony in Block 3, and some three to four minutes before he shot at a man on the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3, that he saw Private S firing.

51.76 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant O said that he could not now recall Private S firing.¹

Summary of Lance Corporal V's account of firing by Private S

51.77 Lance Corporal V gave an account of firing by Private S. We examine Lance Corporal V's evidence below. As will be seen, according to his accounts, after he had fired a shot from a position near to the wire fence that ran across the southern edge of the Eden Place waste ground, he went towards Private S, whom he described as standing on the corner at the end of the houses in Chamberlain Street. He said he saw Private S returning fire towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 and saw flashes in that area but did not hear the sound of shots. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry Lance Corporal V said that he had no recollection of Private S firing and "no clear recollection" of seeing flashes.¹

The evidence of Corporal INQ 444

51.78 We consider later in this report¹ whether an account given by Corporal INQ 444 of a soldier firing a large number of shots relates to Private S.

Lance Corporal V

51.79 We have described earlier in this report¹ the account that Lance Corporal V gave of disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC and going forward to cover Private S who was ahead of him. We have also discussed the incident with the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle,² which involved Private S and which took place at the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses close to the wire fence running across the southern edge of the Eden Place waste ground.

² Paragraphs 31.1–14

The account of his firing given by Lance Corporal V to the Royal Military Police

51.80 In his RMP statement¹ Lance Corporal V gave an account of hearing the sound of shots as he disembarked and two explosions, and of rioters throwing petrol and acid bombs. In this account Lance Corporal V made no mention of the position he was in when he fired. He stated:²

“Firing was taking place at us from several positions with several different types of weapons.

I then saw a male person wearing a dark suit, white shirt, he was a young man. He had dark hair. He was standing in a crowd I saw him draw back his right arm. I saw him throw a bottle with a fuse attached at the end. It hit the ground but did not explode. He moved from the crowd. I fired 1 x 7.62 rd, aimed at him. He was thrown to the ground. The crowd scattered but 4–5 persons returned. I saw them waving white handkerchiefs and attending to the person I had fired at.

The firing still continued from the flats area. I observed that location. I didn't see the man I'd shot again.”

² B788-B789

The account of his firing given by Lance Corporal V to John Heritage

51.81 In a note dated 5th March 1972 John Heritage, a senior legal assistant in the Treasury Solicitor's department who interviewed a number of witnesses on behalf of the Widgery Inquiry, recorded the following.¹

5 March 1972

NOTE

V

In the course of my preliminary interview with ~~the~~ ^{him}, before recording his statement, I invited ^{him} to tell me his account of what happened. He told me that he saw a man throw a bottle with a lighted fuse at its end. The bottle landed near S, but the fuse came out in the air and the bottle did not explode. He said he kept an eye on the man who had thrown it, as he moved back in the crowd. As soon as the movement of the crowd gave him a clear sight of the man he shot at him and believed that he had hit him. In answer to Major Bailey he said he thought the man might have been stooping just before he shot. I asked him if he could see anything in ~~the~~ the man's hand. He replied "No sir I can't honestly say that I did". Major Bailey then intervened and said he wished to discuss the position of this witness with Colonel Overbury before we proceeded. I agreed.

Colonel Overbury requested that this interview with V be held over until he had had an opportunity to discuss the matter with Counsel. I agreed.

JMA
5.iii.72

Major Bailey confirms that this is a fair & accurate record of what
V said in our presence.

JMA
5.iii.

After discussing the matter with Mr. G. Hume, Col. Overbury told me that he proposed to order V to make a statement. I said that if V made a statement, ~~but~~ I would read it but before doing so I would warn V that his evidence might incriminate him. Col. Overbury said that if such a warning were to be given, he would order/advice V not to make a statement.

JMA
5.iii.

51.82

The handwriting on this note is that of John Heritage. Major Bailey, to whom the note refers, is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry. As may be seen from a memorandum dated 3rd February 1972 and signed on behalf of the Director of Military Operations in the Ministry of Defence,¹ Major Bailey was an officer of Army Legal Services who worked, under Colonel Colin Overbury, in the Army Tribunal Team, which was responsible for the preparation of Army evidence for the Widgery Inquiry.²

² In our ruling on claims for legal professional privilege dated 20th July 1999, we determined that Colonel Overbury and Major Bailey acted for the Ministry of Defence, in the interests of the Army, and did not represent individual soldiers at the Widgery Inquiry. Colonel Overbury confirmed that this was the case in his oral evidence to this Inquiry (Day 243/88; Day 243/123-125).

51.83 We are of the view that this note accurately records what Lance Corporal V told John Heritage, and give our reasons for this when we return to consider this note again later in this chapter.¹ We first examine the rest of Lance Corporal V's evidence.

Lance Corporal V's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his firing

51.84 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry (which, as we explain below, was not taken by John Heritage),¹ Lance Corporal V gave an account of disembarking from his vehicle and following Private S, hearing single shots as he did so and seeing bullets hitting the ground somewhere to his right as he was running up to the entrance "to the forecourt". He continued:²

"By the time I had run up to the entrance to the forecourt there was a large crowd on the left in front of me around the end of Chamberlain Street who were throwing stones and bottles and there were bottles being thrown from the block of flats on my right which contained liquid.

My attention was then drawn to a young man with longish dark hair who was wearing a dark suit and a light shirt. He was of medium height. He was at the front of the crowd and his right hand was drawn back in a throwing position. He was holding in his right hand a bottle with a cotton-waste fuse in it which was lit. I took aim at this man but my view of him was obscured for a fraction of a second probably by someone running in front of him. I kept my sights on this man and fired immediately I had a clear aim. I fired one aimed shot. The man was thrown backwards onto the ground. All these events took place almost instantaneously [sic]. There was a lot of glass and debris about but I do remember seeing a smoking fuse although there had been no noise of a petrol bomb going off. I then realised that he had thrown the bomb before I had shot him.

After this had happened four or five male persons came towards the body with their hands in the air waving white handkerchiefs. At this time, realising that they were unarmed, I moved over behind [Private] S who was standing at the corner of the buildings at the end of Chamberlain Street. [Private] S was taking aim and returning fire in the direction towards the gap between the centre and right hand blocks of Rossville Flats. I saw flashes coming from that direction but I did not hear shots. There was still bottles coming down from the flats and there was a lot of noise and people running about in the forecourt of the flats. I then covered the general area of the right hand block of Rossville Flats in case any bombs were thrown from there or any snipers opened fire.

I then sent [Private] S, who had finished firing, back to the armoured vehicle and I moved over to [Sergeant] O's armoured vehicle which was parked on the opposite side of the entrance to the forecourt."

² B801-802

51.85 At the end of this written statement Lance Corporal V made these observations:¹

"In the sixth paragraph of the statement which I made on 31 January 1972 at 0025 hours I stated 'Rioters also threw petrol and acid bombs'. I should like to make it clear that at the time I was describing no petrol bombs were being thrown.

In addition in the eighth paragraph of my statement of 31 January 1972 the sequence of events given in this statement is incorrect but I am satisfied that my description of events in my present statement is correct. I should like to make it clear that the events described from my taking aim to firing took place within a matter of a second."

51.86 The reference to the eighth paragraph of his RMP statement must be a reference to the account he gave in that statement about his firing.

51.87 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, which he gave on 8th March 1972, Lance Corporal V said that the man he fired at was about 50m to 60m away from him.¹ He gave the Widgery Inquiry much the same account of the circumstances in which he had fired as that contained in his written account for that Inquiry, and also gave a similar account of moving over to join Private S who "was returning fire into the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2".² The transcript of Lance Corporal V's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry records him as having said that the man whom he had shot had been wearing a "white-collared shirt”.³ Lance Corporal V told us, and we accept, that this should have read a “white coloured shirt”.⁴ When he was cross-examined by counsel acting on behalf of the families and the injured at the Widgery Inquiry, he gave the following answers:⁵

“Q. And your impression now is, or your recollection now is, that he had thrown this petrol bomb before you fired at him?

A. I could not see that at the time, sir.

Q. But that is your reconstruction of the events?

A. Yes, sir, now.

Q. That was a petrol bomb which never exploded?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So something must have happened to the fuse between the time you saw it and the time it landed on the ground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you look to see where the petrol bomb might have landed?

A. When I saw that I had shot the fellow with a petrol bomb in his hand I looked to the area where he might have thrown it and saw a fuse still burning on the ground.

Q. Did you watch it?

A. No, sir. As soon as I saw the fuse I turned to go into the wall and cover of the area of the block of Rossville Flats.

Q. Did you shout a warning or anything like that?

A. When, sir?

Q. When you saw the fuse burning on the ground?

A. No, it was impracticable.

Q. It was impracticable to shout a warning to anyone when you saw this thing that was about to explode?

A. He still had the bomb in his hand.

Q. Did you not tell us a moment ago that after you saw this object on the ground you saw the object burning?

A. No, I saw the fuse burning.

Q. You saw the fuse detached from the bomb?

A. Possibly, sir. I did not see it alight.

Q. You saw something burning on the ground but you did not see the bomb?

A. No, sir.

LORD WIDGERY: I must try to get this straight. I thought you said he must have thrown the bomb in the moment when he was obscured from you and before you actually fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you are telling Counsel that he still had the bomb in his hand, or have I got it confused?

A. He said 'Did you give a warning?' and I said it was impracticable at the time because he was in a throwing position with the bomb.

Q. When you first gave your evidence I understood you to say you took aim. He was obscured for a second and then you fired. There was no explosion of the bomb, so you concluded he had thrown it in that split second when he was obscured from you?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, the bomb had left his hand?

A. I did not see that.

Q. That is your account of it as you wish me to accept it?

A. Yes, sir. May I point out that when I am aiming he is so close that my sight picture was filled with the part I was aiming at.

Q. I want to be sure I have your evidence right. If that is right it means the bomb did not remain in his hand after you shot him, or did it?

A. I presumed it had not because I did not see any flames about the area where I had shot him. The fuse would have been in the bottle when it hit the ground.

Mr. McSPARRAN: You made no attempt to retrieve this bomb, whatever kind of bomb it was?

A. Petrol bomb. I presume the fuse had smashed because it was lying there.

Q. You did not see any bottle?

A. No, it had smashed on impact.

Q. It was something you did not notice?

A. No, I did not notice.”

51.88 Lance Corporal V told the Widgery Inquiry that he thought that he had hit the man in the stomach and that one of the party of people who came to take him away had been a priest in clerical clothes.¹

Lance Corporal V’s Royal Military Police map and trajectory photograph

51.89 We reproduce below the marked map that accompanied Lance Corporal V’s RMP statement,¹ and his trajectory photograph.

¹ B790

51.90 Although in his RMP statement Lance Corporal V made no mention of where he was when he fired, the RMP map put him closer to the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses than the trajectory photograph. Similarly, his target was shown as much further south on the RMP map than on the trajectory photograph. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that the man at whom he fired was at the front of a crowd near the end of Chamberlain Street.

51.91 It seems to us that the compiler of the RMP map was likely to have used information supplied by Lance Corporal V, though since there is nothing in Lance Corporal V's RMP statement to indicate where he or his target was, it is not possible to tell whether or not the compiler correctly recorded on the RMP map what he had been told.

Comparison between the account of his firing given by Lance Corporal V to John Heritage and his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry

51.92 It will be observed that the account that Lance Corporal V gave the Widgery Inquiry in both his written statement and his oral evidence differed from the account that John Heritage had recorded of the circumstances in which he fired. The account recorded by John Heritage was to the effect that there was a gap in time between Lance Corporal V seeing the man throwing the petrol bomb and shooting the man when the crowd into which the man had gone parted and gave Lance Corporal V a clear line of sight. The account that Lance Corporal V gave the Widgery Inquiry was to the effect that everything happened more or less instantaneously and that it was not until after he had fired that he realised that the man had thrown the bomb.

The second entry in the Loden List of Engagements

51.93 The second entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

51.94 According to the grid references given in this entry, which are plotted on the map reproduced below (which was prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families), the firing soldier was in the mouth of the car park, close to the back of the second and third houses from the south end of Chamberlain Street; his target was close to the low wall on the south-western side of the car park.¹

51.95 We are sure that this entry was based on an account given to Major Loden by Lance Corporal V. No other soldier claimed to have shot at (and hit) a petrol bomber. Furthermore, the grid references correspond reasonably closely to the positions of the firer and his target that appear on Lance Corporal V's RMP map, though not with the positions shown on his trajectory photograph. However, given that the grid references in the Loden List of Engagements can only be treated as approximations, we cannot say more than that the possibility exists that when the trajectory photograph was prepared Lance Corporal V may have changed his mind on where he and his target were.

Lance Corporal V's evidence to this Inquiry about his firing

51.96 As already noted, Lance Corporal V gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

51.97 In his written statement,¹ Lance Corporal V told us that he did not remember the events of the day in any detail. So far as his firing was concerned, he stated: "I no longer actually recall the act of firing."² He also stated that he had no recollection of the interview on which John Heritage made the note to which we have referred above, or of giving a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.³ He described the oral evidence that he gave to the Widgery Inquiry as "The best evidence I can give".⁴

³ B821.004

² B821.004

⁴ B821.005

51.98 Lance Corporal V, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, told us that he had no recollection of the reason why in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he had retracted his RMP account of observing petrol bombs at a stage before he had fired.¹ He also told us that his RMP statement did not accurately reflect the fact that "the incident of me actually engaging the petrol bomber happened in a fraction of a second".²

² Day 333/65

51.99 Counsel to the Inquiry asked Lance Corporal V whether he recalled the preliminary interview with John Heritage and his answers to the questions asked by Major Bailey and by John Heritage. Lance Corporal V told us that he had no recollection at all either of this interview or of anything that then happened with regard to it. He said to us that it was his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry of which we should take note, as these were his words "not ... juggled around by other people taking statements for me".¹

51.100 It was pointed out to Lance Corporal V that on the basis of the accounts he had given in his RMP statement and to John Heritage, his shot did not comply with the Yellow Card, which only permitted firing after warning at a petrol bomber who was endangering life, since the man had already thrown a petrol bomb which had not exploded and so there was no longer such a danger. Lance Corporal V agreed that he had not shouted a warning. His answer in respect of the RMP statement was that he might have explained his account badly to the RMP; as to the note made by John Heritage he replied “I have no recollection of making that statement”. He insisted that he had engaged “a legal target”.¹

Lance Corporal V’s use of his respirator

51.101 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that he put on his respirator when he was in the yard of the Presbyterian Church. He said that he was still wearing it when Lieutenant N’s vehicle passed through Barrier 12. He did not say for how long he continued to wear it.

51.102 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that it was possible that he was still wearing his respirator when he fired a shot, but he could not remember. He said that if he had been wearing one, it would have restricted his view.

51.103 For reasons given earlier in this report,¹ we are sure that Lance Corporal V was one of the two soldiers photographed by Colman Doyle after the incident involving the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle, the other being Private S. This shows that Lance Corporal V was still wearing his respirator after this incident.

Lance Corporal V’s evidence about firing by other soldiers

51.104 Lance Corporal V said in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² that he did not see any other soldier fire apart from Private S. We have already summarised above Lance Corporal V’s account of firing by Private S.³

³ Paragraph 51.77

² Day 333/93

Lance Corporal V's evidence about whether he could have shot Jackie Duddy or Margaret Deery

51.105 Lance Corporal V denied that he had shot either Jackie Duddy or Margaret Deery (two of the Sector 2 casualties), pointing out that the person he had shot was wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and had long hair.¹

Summary of Lance Corporal V's accounts of his shot

51.106 On the basis of the evidence Lance Corporal V gave to the Widgery Inquiry, and his trajectory photograph, he was near the fence across the Eden Place waste ground when he observed a man with a petrol bomb quite close to the end of Chamberlain Street. If the compiler of the RMP map correctly recorded on it what Lance Corporal V had told him, Lance Corporal V's target was further south, close to the low wall running along the back of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, while Lance Corporal V himself was closer to the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses. Lance Corporal V gave differing accounts of the circumstances in which he fired at this man; in his first two accounts (his RMP statement and his preliminary interview with John Heritage) he said that he saw the man throw the petrol bomb and that it did not explode, after which he fired at the man. In his written statement for and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, he stated that it was only after he had fired that he realised that the man had thrown the petrol bomb. He insisted in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that his oral account to the Widgery Inquiry was to be preferred and that he had shot in accordance with the Yellow Card at a man who was posing a danger to life, though he agreed that he had shouted no warning.

51.107 John Heritage gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

51.108 In his written statement¹ John Heritage explained that in 1972 he was a senior legal assistant in the Treasury Solicitor's department. He had worked as a legal assistant for Lord Scarman's Inquiry into the civil disturbances that had occurred in Northern Ireland in 1969; he became the Legal Secretary to Sir Edmund Compton's Inquiry into allegations of brutality to detainees after the introduction of internment in 1971. He became involved in the Widgery Inquiry at the beginning of the second week of February 1972. Basil Hall was the Solicitor to the Widgery Inquiry.

- 51.109 In this statement John Heritage described travelling to Northern Ireland towards the end of February 1972 and then, with Chris Leonard (another senior legal assistant in the Treasury Solicitor's department), being charged with taking statements from both military and civilian witnesses to enable counsel to prepare for the hearings.
- 51.110 So far as military witnesses were concerned, John Heritage told us that all statements from ranks other than commissioned officers were taken in the presence of either a regimental officer or, more often, a member of the Directorate of Army Legal Services, or, on occasions, a member of the Treasury Solicitor's staff. Major Bailey was a member of the Directorate of Army Legal Services.¹
- 51.111 With regard to Lance Corporal V, John Heritage stated:¹

"Soldier V

21. I have been asked about my recollections of my preliminary interview with Soldier V and subsequent discussions which are recorded in my three file notes of 5 March 1972. A copy of these file notes with their covering note is attached as Appendix A to this statement. I confirm that my file notes are, to the best of my belief, true and correct.

22. I remember that during the course of my initial discussions with Soldier V, I invited him to tell me his account of what had occurred on Bloody Sunday. Soon after he began telling me his account, he replied to a question I asked in a way that appeared to me would incriminate him. I clearly recall this incident, as it is the only occasion in my career when I have had to consider the possibility of giving a warning to a witness that his evidence might incriminate him.

23. I recall that Lieutenant Colonel Overbury and I had a disagreement over whether or not a warning should be given to Soldier V that he might incriminate himself. In retrospect, I believe this was based on a misunderstanding. I now know from the present Inquiry's ruling on claims for professional privilege (paragraphs 20 et seq) and Mr Hall's note to the Treasury Solicitor of 16 March 1972, paragraph 7 (which at the time I would not have seen) that the army team were acting on advice that a statement made in compliance with military orders could not be used against its maker in subsequent proceedings. At the time, I do not believe that I was aware of this and I simply did not understand Lieutenant Colonel Overbury's approach. It seemed to me then that as the Inquiry had statutory powers of compulsion of witnesses and was given the powers of the High Court, any military order to give a statement would be redundant. For the same reason any such order not to give a statement could be regarded as a contempt of the Tribunal.

24. As can be seen from the covering note I referred this matter to Basil Hall, Solicitor to the Inquiry, as Lt Colonel Overbury and myself were not able to agree on the course of action that should be taken. I had no further involvement in recording Soldier V's evidence from that time onwards. I am unsure who took the final statement from Soldier V (ie SA34) but, by process of elimination, it is likely to have been Chris Leonard (or M.R. Hirst).

25. I did not discuss this matter with Mr Hall or with counsel and I do not know whether or not Lord Widgery was ever informed of it."

51.112 Chris Leonard was for medical reasons unable to give any evidence to this Inquiry. We were told in a letter dated 29th March 2000 from the Head of Public Law Group in the Treasury Solicitor's department, that Michael Hirst had been taken through the notes made at the time of the episode involving Lance Corporal V, and that Michael Hirst had said that he had no recollection of the episode, but that he would have been likely to have remembered had he been asked to resume an interview commenced by someone else.¹ We accept that Michael Hirst could not assist on the matter under discussion.

51.113 The file note to which John Heritage referred in his statement is the document¹ that we have reproduced above.² The covering note is reproduced below.³

51.114 Basil Hall (the Solicitor to the Widgery Inquiry) wrote the word “Confidential” and the words at the bottom of the covering note.¹ John Stocker QC was counsel to the Widgery Inquiry. Brian Gibbens QC was counsel for the Ministry of Defence at the Widgery Inquiry, but did not represent individual soldiers. Both are dead and neither gave evidence to this Inquiry.

51.115 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, John Heritage said that he had a recollection, independent of the documents, of interviewing Lance Corporal V.¹ He also told us that he did not take Lance Corporal V’s formal statement for the Widgery Inquiry, explaining that he had held the interview with Lance Corporal V on 5th March 1972 and had not been available to take further Army statements until 8th March.² The latter was the date on which Lance Corporal V gave oral evidence.

² Day 251/89-92

51.116 John Heritage gave some further details in his oral evidence of why Major Bailey had intervened and had said that he wished to discuss the matter with Colonel Overbury:¹

“Q. Then your note goes on to say that you asked him, that is [Lance Corporal] V: ‘... if he could see anything in the man’s hand. He replied, ‘No, sir, I cannot honestly say that I did’.”

At that point Major Bailey intervened and said he wished to discuss the position of this witness with Colonel Overbury before you proceeded.

What was your understanding of the reason why Major Bailey intervened at that point?

A. I am fairly sure that Major Bailey and I together realised that at that point it would be necessary to warn [Lance Corporal] V against self-incrimination. I recollect this part of the incident fairly clearly because it was unique and I think what happened after that sentence, ‘I cannot honestly say that I did,’ I think Major Bailey and I exchanged glances and he indicated that he would like a word with me.

We then spoke out of [Lance Corporal] V’s hearing and I confirmed that it was indeed my intention to give a warning.

I remember that Major Bailey did not disagree with me, but he asked for time to discuss the position with Colonel Overbury and I agreed to that.

This is not fully reflected in the note I wrote, but it is something which I believe is accurate, according to my recollection now.

Q. How did you manage to speak to Major Bailey out of [Lance Corporal] V’s hearing?

A. I think we went into the next room.”

51.117 There was the following exchange during the course of John Heritage’s oral evidence, about the circumstances in which Lance Corporal V’s written statement for the Widgery Inquiry came to take the form it did:¹

“Q. The reason I am asking these questions is to establish whether or not this was all done by arrangement, in other words, that Soldier V would change his account so as to withdraw the admission that he had made to you which caused you to give him a warning, or propose to give him a warning, and that he was then able to give his fresh account with impunity to the Inquiry, knowing that he was not going to be challenged about it?

A. Certainly I made no such arrangement.

Q. Sorry, Mr Heritage, I am not suggesting you did, but do you know whether or not such an arrangement was made?

- 51.118 Finally, at the end of his oral evidence, John Heritage was asked why he had decided to write the note about Major Bailey confirming the record he had made of his interview with Lance Corporal V:¹

“MR ROXBURGH: Would it be fair to say that when you decided to write the note that, ‘Major Bailey confirms that this is a fair and accurate record of what [Lance Corporal] V said in our presence,’ you would have had in mind that this was potentially a document that might go on to the record, in the sense of being a note used to prove what [Lance Corporal] V had said to you.

A. I would go so far as to say that I believed it to be a document that would go on the record. I had not contemplated later proceedings as it were, if that was the implication of your question.

Q. No. The implication of my question was simply that, you would not have written that note if in any way you had thought of your preliminary conversation with [Lance Corporal] V as being, as it were, an entirely off-the-record conversation that could not in any circumstances be used against him?

A. Yes. No, I would not have had that opinion.

Q. We have seen the statement that was finally taken from [Lance Corporal] V, that you believe was taken by one of your colleagues and not by you?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you say whether, before your colleague (whoever it was) conducted that formal interview with [Lance Corporal] V and took that final statement from him, you would have shown this note to your colleague so that he was aware of what had happened when you saw [Lance Corporal] V?

A. I cannot be sure of that because, as I have said earlier, I submitted this note to Sir Basil Hall and I believe that subsequently on the Tuesday and the Wednesday I was not at Coleraine. So I would not have been in a position to show the note to any other colleague.

LORD SAVILLE: When you say you submitted the note to Sir Basil Hall, would that be the note together with your handwritten additions to it?

A. Yes, there is a covering paper, I have clearly torn a piece of foolscap in half and I have written a note on it, saying:

'1. Mr Hall to see.

2. Mr Shepherd, please file.'

MR ROXBURGH: We have that at KH6.13.

LORD SAVILLE: Going back to the document we have just been looking at, your note, it is pretty clear – I think I had better ask you to confirm it is your recollection – that you actually showed the typewritten part, at least, to Major Bailey?

A. Oh, certainly.

MR ROXBURGH: Whilst you may have no recollection of, and indeed you may have been doing other things on the Tuesday, there was no reason that you were aware of, was there, why this note should not have been handed to whichever of your colleagues was going to conduct the final interview with [Lance Corporal] V?

A. I am not aware of any reason, no.

Q. Indeed, it might be thought rather important that your colleague should be aware of the history of the matter before conducting that final interview; is that fair?

A. Yes.

LORD SAVILLE: Would I be right in supposing that you would have expected that to have been done?

A. Yes."

51.119 Basil Hall, who was the Solicitor to the Widgery Inquiry, also gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement,¹ he told us that he had no recollection of the episode with Lance Corporal V, but he reconstructed from the documents reproduced above what he believed had happened. With regard to his own note on the covering note made by John Heritage he stated:²

“My note records that Mr Stocker QC discussed the matter with Mr Gibbens QC and it was agreed that a statement could be taken from Soldier V ‘without further warning’. Whether this was because Mr Gibbens thought that the statement would not be incriminating or because he shared the view which was held by DALs [Director of Army Legal Services] that a statement made in compliance with military orders could not be used in subsequent proceedings or for other reasons I do not know.”

² KH2.6

51.120 During the course of his oral evidence Basil Hall was asked by counsel for the majority of the families and the wounded to explain why, in their questioning of Lance Corporal V at the Widgery Inquiry, neither John Stocker QC nor Brian Gibbens QC had asked Lance Corporal V about what he had told John Heritage.¹ Basil Hall told us that he had not discussed with John Stocker QC why what was described by counsel as “this glaring and highly significant discrepancy” had not been put to Lance Corporal V.² He then gave the following answers:³

“Q. You had been involved in this controversy concerning Soldier V?

A. I think you are putting it too high, ‘involved in controversy’. What we had – Mr Heritage, very properly in my view, had realised that there was a possibility of soldier – the soldier incriminating himself, and that that –

Q. There was not a possibility. He had actually incriminated himself.

A. Well, that is your view. It was not a matter that really would concern – I mean, what he was saying is: if you make this statement you may incriminate yourself; it is a possibility. The oral statement of such you may regard as incriminating him. But at that stage it was clear that, if he were to give that evidence before the Tribunal, Widgery had made it clear he could plead self – he could plead that to give the evidence would incriminate himself, and he would not be required to give it.

That seemed to me a proper thing to refer to, I suppose, if I remember – I do not have the paper in front of me – possibly to the Lord Chief. In fact it was resolved between Stocker and Gibbens, and he must go on, and did it.

Now, you are saying he made a different statement. It may be so. That was not the point with which I was concerned. That was a point that was to be dealt with, if it was to be dealt with, by Counsel.

Q. You must have had a view about the importance of Soldier V's previous inconsistent statements?

A. You have no idea how much burden there was falling on me. I did not have time to think of all the individual statements and sort them out.

Q. The main burden that was falling on you was to discover the truth about Bloody Sunday.

A. The main burden that fell on me was to get as much information as I could that would lead to witnesses being called before the Tribunal, and to therefore establish what had happened on Bloody Sunday within the terms of reference given.

Q. Are you saying –

A. On this particular point my concern was that the evidence that he would give might be self-incriminatory, and how to deal with that. It was dealt with.

Now, why he phrased himself differently when he made the statement to Leonard, I have no idea; and which was the correct view, I also have no idea.”

³ Day 250/48-50

² Day 250/48

51.121 Counsel for the majority of the families and the wounded then suggested to Basil Hall that Brian Gibbens did not raise Lance Corporal V's previous inconsistent statements, “and I wonder whether or not he did not feel the need to deal with it because he knew in advance that Mr Stocker would not raise that either?”. Basil Hall's answer was: “Well, this is attributing almost a conspiracy to Counsel, and I do not believe those two respectful members of the bar would have done anything of the kind.”¹ He later said to us:²

“A. ... There is perhaps, you are saying – and I really am unable to comment on this – a conflict from what he [Lance Corporal V] had said to the SIB [Special Investigation Branch] and the final – the statement he made to Chris Leonard; and then you are saying that this – is there any explanation why this was not put by Mr Stocker?

Q. Other than the explanation I have suggested to you.

A. Which is?

Q. Which is: this was done by agreement.

A. Then you ask yourself: why were they agreeing this?

Q. In order to protect the Army.

A. If I may say so, I regard that as rubbish. I am sorry, I do not believe for a moment Stocker, who had a great – would set out to protect the Army. And it is not protecting the Army, either; it is protecting individual soldiers.

Q. Yes.

A. I simply do not accept that as a motive. It may have been better if it had been done.”

² Day 250/56-57

51.122 Counsel to this Inquiry, after Basil Hall had given his evidence about Lance Corporal V, pointed out that “It is perhaps appropriate to record, lest there be any misunderstanding, that the transcript of that inquiry shows that it was in fact Mr Underhill, rather than Mr Gibbens, who examined Soldier V in-chief. Mr Preston, rather than Mr Stocker then cross-examined on behalf of the Tribunal, and Mr Gibbens re-examined the witness.”¹

51.123 We take the view that John Heritage gave truthful evidence on which we can rely. We also take the view that the suggestion that counsel at the Widgery Inquiry made a deliberate decision not to question Lance Corporal V about what he had said to John Heritage is unlikely to have been the case. Brian Gibbens QC did not examine Lance Corporal V in chief, nor did John Stocker QC cross-examine him, and we have found nothing to suggest that Timothy Preston, who conducted the cross-examination on behalf of the Tribunal, was told or would have known about the interview with John Heritage, or that he would have had any motive, as Basil Hall pointed out, to protect an individual soldier.

51.124 Colonel Overbury also gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. He was a solicitor and Assistant Director of Army Legal Services, who arrived in Northern Ireland at the beginning of February 1972 to join the Army Tribunal Team preparing for the Widgery Inquiry. Part of his function was to liaise with counsel instructed to act on behalf of the Ministry of Defence. He told us that Major John Bailey (now deceased) was also made available to help the Army Tribunal Team and that he sat in on a number of the interviews of military witnesses conducted by members of the Treasury Solicitor's department for the Widgery Inquiry.¹

51.125 Colonel Overbury was asked about John Heritage's notes. In his second written statement to this Inquiry, he told us:¹

"59. This appears to relate to an incident which I remember well because I thought that it raised a serious difficulty concerning the basis on which the soldiers were to give their evidence. At this time the hearings had already started but the Tribunal staff were still re-interviewing Army witnesses and taking further statements. Although I believe that I did subsequently attend some of these interviews, I was not actually present when V was interviewed, apparently on 5 March 1972. It had, I believe been agreed that when any soldier was re-interviewed by the Tribunal staff, an officer would be present. This is normal procedure when a soldier is involved in any inquiry outside the military environment which concerns his action when on duty. As I recall, Major John Bailey ALS, the Army Legal Services officer on the staff of HQ Northern Ireland was present when V was interviewed and I certainly recall receiving a telephone call from him to tell me that the official of the Tribunal staff wished to caution V. I asked him to get the interview adjourned in order to consult with Mr Gibbens.

60. The problem which gave me concern was that I had been told that the Attorney General in London had agreed that the soldiers could not be prosecuted on the basis of any statement they made or evidence they gave to the Tribunal with regard to the events of 30 January 1972, provided that they had been ordered to give evidence. Since I had, in fact, ordered them all to give evidence, it seemed to me that a serious problem would arise if any soldier was subsequently cautioned. As a result I consulted with Mr Gibbens who said he would speak to Mr Stocker and to Mr Hall and it was agreed that I would speak to the official concerned and tell him that I intended to repeat my order to V that he was obliged to give evidence and that if he was still cautioned I would order him to stay silent. I subsequently contacted the official and

I accept his version of what was then said as recorded in his note. The manuscript notes on the previous page would seem to indicate that the matter was resolved by no warning being given.

61. The reason why I would have ordered him to remain silent was to ensure that he could not use the caution as a reason to refuse to make further statements or to answer questions when examined under oath before the Tribunal. The whole purpose of ordering the soldiers to speak was to ensure that they had nothing to fear from speaking the truth when giving evidence. In this case, soldier V was apparently to be cautioned because the official interviewing him thought that he might be admitting to firing after rather than before he said he saw a man throw a nail bomb. My concern lay not in the fact that the soldier might make an admission but that if he were cautioned, he would have the right to refuse to answer further questions on that subject and, if he acquired that right, then so might all the other soldiers who had fired. I do not believe that I was present at any time while he was being interviewed, nor do I recall talking to the soldier at that time. I certainly did not advise him as to what he should say to the Treasury Solicitor's official."

51.126 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Colonel Overbury agreed that he must have been informed of the upshot of this incident as set out in the covering note, namely that Lance Corporal V's statement would be taken without further warning.¹

51.127 Colonel Overbury told us that he did not think that he was present when Lance Corporal V's statement was taken, and though he said that "in principle" it was the practice for a member of the Army Tribunal Team to be present when a statement was taken, and that he expected that somebody would have been present, he did not know whether that had happened in the case of Lance Corporal V, though the likelihood was that Major Bailey would have been present.¹

¹ Day 243/45; Day 243/47-48

51.128 Colonel Overbury agreed that there was a marked difference between what was contained in Lance Corporal V's statement for the Widgery Inquiry and the account initially given to John Heritage. He told us that he did not know whether or not Lance Corporal V was given advice by somebody in the Army Tribunal Team before he came to give this statement. He said that it would have been “most incorrect” if Major Bailey had said to Lance Corporal V “You do realise that the account that you have given to Mr Heritage shows that you shot a man when he was not posing any threat to you”.¹

51.129 The written statement of Lance Corporal V for the Widgery Inquiry¹ is neither signed nor dated. However, the contents of the statement appear to be reflected in Lance Corporal V's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, which satisfies us that Lance Corporal V provided the information from which the statement was drafted. It seems to us that this statement must have been prepared after a further interview with Lance Corporal V, at some time before Lance Corporal V gave oral evidence.

51.130 In our view someone acting for the Widgery Inquiry probably took the statement, for it follows the form that those statement takers used. We cannot be sure who this was, though it may have been Chris Leonard. It seems likely that a member of the Army Tribunal Team was present and from Colonel Overbury's evidence this is likely to have been Major Bailey. There is nothing to suggest that Lance Corporal V was advised to change the account that he had given to John Heritage, as opposed to doing so of his own volition. Lance Corporal V told us that he had no recollection of either the interview with John Heritage or giving a later statement.

51.131 The representatives of Lance Corporal V submitted to us that the Tribunal should not rely upon John Heritage's note as reliable evidence of what was in Lance Corporal V's mind at the time he opened fire:¹

“In particular, before placing any reliance upon the note, the Tribunal must bear in mind its provenance. It was produced over 30 years ago. It carefully records the agreement of those present to its accuracy; all those present except, of course, Soldier V. It was not produced to the Widgery Inquiry and V was never asked whether it was an accurate record of the meeting, was never asked whether it recorded what he actually said, was never asked what he meant when he said what he is alleged to have said. Instead, Soldier V gave his account to the Widgery Inquiry, on oath, and was cross examined on it. Thirty years later, the memo surfaced. Soldier V has no recollection of the meeting, let alone of what was or was not said, or what he did or did not mean.”

- 51.132 These representatives drew attention to the fact that Lance Corporal V was not cautioned nor did he have legal representation when he spoke to John Heritage.¹ They submitted:²

“In the circumstances, the best evidence that the Tribunal has of Soldier V’s belief at the time of firing is his evidence to Lord Widgery. The evidence which appears to contradict Soldier V’s own account is too unreliable for the Tribunal to be sure that Soldier V did not hold an honest belief that he was under threat at the time he fired.”

² FS7.1512

- 51.133 We take the view that John Heritage accurately recorded what Lance Corporal V said. The note also records Major Bailey’s confirmation that this was the case. The fact that the note was made over 30 years ago does not in our view detract from its reliability as a record of what Lance Corporal V said; nor the fact that Lance Corporal V was not cautioned. He had previously been ordered to give a statement and told that nothing that he said would incriminate him.¹ He was not legally represented, but this was the case not only when he spoke to John Heritage but also when he gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry; and it is apparent from the fact that John Heritage raised the point he did that he had Lance Corporal V’s interests in mind.

- 51.134 We return later in this report¹ to make our assessment of the reliability of the accounts given by Lance Corporal V of the circumstances in which he fired. When doing so we treat John Heritage’s note as an accurate record of one of those accounts.

- 51.135 In view of the fact that Lance Corporal V’s evidence was to the effect that he shot at a petrol bomber, it is convenient at this point to consider the evidence that other members of Mortar Platoon gave relating to petrol bombs in Sector 2.

Evidence of other Mortar Platoon soldiers relating to petrol bombs

- 51.136 Lieutenant N said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that apart from the nail bomber whom he shot, he had seen no evidence of civilian firing, or nail bombing, or petrol bombing.¹ In his first RMP statement,² Sergeant O recorded that while in the area of the car park, he and his section had stones and bottles thrown at them, and also several acid bombs and petrol bombs. However, in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry³ he recorded that he did not notice any petrol bombs at the stage when shooting broke out, and his written evidence to this Inquiry⁴ was that he neither saw nor heard petrol bombs at any stage. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ he said that the reference to petrol bombs in his first RMP statement was based on information given to him by members of his platoon. Private S told us that he was not aware of any petrol bombs.⁶ Private U told us that he did not see any petrol bombs thrown.⁷ Private T gave accounts in 1972 of seeing bottles thrown down from the Rossville Flats that he originally thought were petrol bombs, but he said that none of them was alight, none exploded and (according to him) he then realised that they were acid bombs.⁸ Private 006 told us that he did not see or hear any petrol bombs while he was at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.⁹ The remaining members of Mortar Platoon gave no evidence about petrol bombs in Sector 2.

Evidence of other soldiers about Lance Corporal V's firing

51.137 No other soldiers gave evidence of seeing Lance Corporal V firing. Private R, whose evidence was that he disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and then ran across the waste ground to the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats, told us that he did not know about Lance Corporal V's firing.¹

Private Q

51.138 We have referred in an earlier chapter of this report¹ to the accounts Private Q has given of disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC, following a baton gunner, who we are sure was Private 013, and taking up position at the north-east corner of the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

The account of his firing given by Private Q to the Royal Military Police

51.139 In his statement to the RMP¹ Private Q gave this account of his firing:²

"I observed towards the junction of the two Flat blocks to the SE of my position. I saw that youths had gathered in the area between the two blocks and these youths were stoning us and throwing bottles. After a very short while someone amongst them started to throw explosive devices.

I was about 100 metres from the corner of the two blocks. There were other soldiers behind a halted APC and these men were about 50 yards or less from the corner. These men were being attacked by the bottles dropped from the flats. As I continued to observe I saw that the explosive devices were in fact nail bombs. These were being thrown so as to land near to the halted APC where the troops were sheltering.

I saw one nail bomb thrower in particular. He kept coming to the corner and then looking around the corner before he threw his nail bombs. I saw him throw one bomb which I followed and saw burst some 10 yards from the APC. This man was sheltering behind the middle block of Flats. The man was wearing a dark coloured windcheater. He was in his mid-twenties. I could not tell his build because of his clothing.

As the man again came into my view from around the corner of the block of flats I saw that he had an object in his hand. He drew his arm back as if to throw the object. He was about to bring his arm forward to throw the object when I fired 1 round from my SLR at the man's chest. I saw him fall to the ground. The object he had in his hand rolled away and I saw it was a cylindrical object. I did not see what happened to the object.

Another man came forward and pulled the man I had shot into cover behind the block of Flats. I did not see what happened to the man after that."

² B625-626

Private Q's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his firing

51.140 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q described what he had seen and done while at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats:

“During this period the stoning from the forecourt of the flats had not ceased. During this period my attention was drawn to one man in particular who was coming backwards and forwards round the corner between the two blocks of flats opposite me on the far side of the forecourt. I saw him throwing two or three objects towards the buildings at the end of Chamberlain Street where there were some soldiers taking cover. From their shape and size, bearing in mind my previous experience, I felt sure they were nail bombs. He then reappeared round the corner and threw another of these objects which exploded in the forecourt near to the houses at the end of Chamberlain Street. I was now certain this man was throwing nail bombs and when he next appeared I saw him go to throw a similar object and I fired one aimed shot at him. He fell to the ground. I can describe this man as being of medium height wearing a baggy black windcheater and he had dark hair. Another person dragged his body from sight round this corner. The nail bomb fell to the ground and rolled away from his body. It did not explode and I did not see what happened to it. I remained in the position where I was for a further 5 minutes or so.”

51.141 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private Q described seeing a man throwing objects which he thought were nail bombs. He said he had seen nail bombs thrown in Belfast “Eight or nine times”.¹ His evidence continued as follows:²

“Q. Did you see any of these objects land?

A. Yes sir.

Q. When he threw them?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What did they do?

A. Well, he threw two or three and they just rolled and then he threw another one and it exploded.

Q. Can you tell us where it was when it exploded?

A. It was in these houses back on Chamberlain Street, round this area, sir.

Q. Did you know whether anybody was hit by that explosion?

A. Not soldiers, sir.

Q. What did you do when you saw that man throwing those objects and the one that exploded? What did you do?

A. I just watched him, sir.

Q. Eventually did you do something?

A. Yes. He came round the corner with another one and I shot him, sir.

Q. What position were you in when you shot at him?

A. In a kneeling position.

Q. Can you give us any description of him?

A. He was medium height, a black windcheater on and he had got brown hair.

Q. The moment when you shot him, you got him in the sights of your rifle and shot him, do you know what he was actually doing?

A. He was in the act of throwing the bomb, sir.

Q. What happened about that shot, did it hit him?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What happened to him?

A. He fell, sir.

Q. Did his body remain where it fell?

A. No sir, he was dragged behind the buildings by another person.

Q. By another person?

A. Yes.

Q. You said he was in the act of throwing when you shot him. Did you see what happened to the bomb?

A. He dropped it, sir, and it rolled away."

² WT12.88-89

51.142 Later in his oral evidence Private Q said that the nail bomber at whom he fired was at the junction of the furthestmost two blocks, which, on the basis of his account, would have been Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.¹

51.143 Private Q was asked to explain why he thought that the objects he had seen thrown were nail bombs:¹

“Q. You saw him throw objects which just rolled on the ground?

A. Yes.

Q. That was what you noticed about him?

A. They resembled nail bombs, sir.

Q. What made you think they resembled nail bombs?

A. They looked like nail bombs.

Q. Would you tell me at that distance why they looked like nail bombs more than, for example, stones or rocks?

A. Because of the shape of them.

Q. What shape were they?

A. Round.

Q. Do you not get stones that are round, too?

A. Not perfectly round, sir.

Q. Was this a perfectly round nail bomb?

A. Just sort of round.

Q. Was it a perfectly round nail bomb?

A. I could not see from that distance.

Q. Is that not the truth of it, that you could not see what they were?

A. I saw what I thought was a nail bomb.

Q. Did you see that they were nail bombs?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you going simply on their shape when you say you thought they were nail bombs?

A. I thought they were nail bombs.

Q. And was it their shape, solely?

A. Yes.

Q. Which gave you that idea?

Private Q’s trajectory photograph and Royal Military Police map

51.145 Private Q confirmed to the Widgery Inquiry that his trajectory photograph showed him, at the position marked “X”, and his target, at the position marked “1”.¹ We reproduce this photograph below together with Private Q’s RMP map, which shows much the same positions.²

The sixth entry in the Loden List of Engagements

51.146 The sixth entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

51.147 This entry refers to a nail bomber who was shot, according to the grid references, close to the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, by a soldier who was near the north end of Block 1. The grid reference positions are shown on the following map, prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families.¹

51.148 We are satisfied that the sixth entry reflects the account that Private Q gave of his firing. The positions of the firer and his target are similar to those shown on Private Q's RMP map and trajectory photograph and described in the accounts that he later gave. Although Lieutenant N and (as will be seen) Private R also claimed to have shot at nail bombers in Sector 2, their accounts put their targets in different positions.

Private Q's evidence to this Inquiry about his firing

51.149 Private Q gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement he told us that the best evidence that he could give was by reference to his oral testimony to the Widgery Inquiry.¹ He told us in this statement² that his job was to cover Private 112, but in our view he was mistaken about this and the baton gunner whom he was covering was Private 013.

51.150 In this account Private Q described what he said that he remembered about the incident. He repeated that he had seen the man throw a bomb: "I knew it was a bomb because it went off." He described seeing another bomb in the man's hand before he fired at him, which he said was "black and cylindrical in shape".¹

51.151 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private Q said that he had a vague memory of a man in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. He was asked to estimate the size of the crowd that was in the vicinity, to which he had referred in his written statement to us:¹

"Q. When you say that you caught sight of a man in the gap behind the crowd, can you give the Tribunal any idea of the sort of number of people who were in that man's vicinity?

A. I could not be precise, sir.

Q. Sorry?

A. I could not be precise.

Q. I do not ask you to be precise. Can you give us any idea of the sort of numbers; are we talking about ten, 20, 50, 100?

A. I cannot recall, sir."

¹ B657.4; Day 339/29-30

51.152 Asked about the sort of noise the bomb he said had exploded had made, Private Q agreed with the suggestion that the sound, which was audible to him at the north end of Block 1 and which he described as "a dull crump", would have been audible to the civilians in the car park and to the soldiers who were in and around the APC in the car park. He agreed that if his account was correct, the bomb must have been thrown with complete disregard for the life of civilians in the vicinity.¹

51.153 Private Q told us that he had a telescopic sight on his rifle, which he used to aim at the man.

51.154 Private Q was asked about the fact that in his RMP statement he had referred to explosive devices that landed near to the APC, and the fact that his comment in that statement that he had seen one nail bomber in particular could be said to indicate that there was more than one nail bomber, while in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry and his written account to us he had referred to one man throwing three or four nail bombs. He gave the following answers:¹

“Q. Were you, in these accounts, exaggerating the number of bombs that you saw thrown?

A. Not intentionally, sir, no.

Q. Were you doing it accidentally?

A. I was giving the best of my knowledge.

Q. You agreed with me a little earlier that the way in which it is expressed in your statement to the Tribunal is that you saw this man throw one nail bomb, which exploded and then shot him as he was about to throw a second?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is the evidence that the Tribunal should accept: that what you saw was limited to two nail bombs at most, or may it have been as many as five?

A. I would say two, sir.

Q. If that is what you invite the Tribunal to accept, saying that it was anything up to five must have been an exaggeration, must it not?

A. Just confusion, sir.

Q. How would you have been confused in an account that was given the very evening of the events in question?

A. It was a very confusing time, sir.

Q. The Tribunal has heard a great deal of evidence, both from people in the car park and in the flats and from a substantial number of soldiers, who say that they heard no nail bombs in the car park. Is your account, whether it be two nail bombs or five nail bombs, a truthful one?

A. Yes, sir.”

Private Q’s use of his respirator

51.155 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that he put on his respirator while he was near the Presbyterian church. He did not say for how long he wore it.

51.156 In his statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private Q told us that he was definitely not wearing a respirator when he fired his shot at an alleged nail bomber. He could not remember whether he had worn one at some other stage.

Private Q’s evidence about firing by other soldiers

51.157 We deal later in this chapter¹ with Private Q’s account of firing into Block 1 of the Rossville Flats by a soldier who may have been Private T. In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Private Q said that this was the only shooting that he saw other than his own.

Private Q’s evidence about whether he could have shot Jackie Duddy or Michael Bradley

51.158 Private Q denied that he had shot Jackie Duddy, who was the only person killed in Sector 2, or that he had told anybody that he had done so.¹ He also denied that he could have been the soldier who shot Michael Bradley, who was wounded in Sector 2. Private Q told us that he believed that he had killed his target.²

² Day 339/58-60

Summary of Private Q's accounts of his shot

51.159 According to the accounts of Private Q, he was at the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, when he saw a man in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 throwing a number of objects towards soldiers in the area of the houses at the end of Chamberlain Street which he believed were nail bombs. One exploded about ten yards from Sergeant O's APC. When the man reappeared and was about to throw again, Private Q fired a single shot at him. He said that he believed that he had hit the man in the chest and had killed him.

51.160 We have already stated our view that Private Q did not in fact observe a nail or blast bomb exploding in the car park of the Rossville Flats.¹ We return to his accounts later in this report,² when we consider what reliance to place on the evidence given by all the soldiers of firing at civilians.

Evidence of other soldiers about Private Q's firing

51.161 No other soldier gave evidence of seeing Private Q firing. Private 112, who was involved, as we described earlier in this report,¹ in the arrest of Charles Canning, and who then moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, told us that he did not see Private Q fire.² He said that this is something that he would have remembered if he had been present when it had happened.³

Private R

51.164 We have referred earlier in this report¹ to Private R's accounts of disembarking from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and running after the vehicle when it continued into the Rossville Flats car park.

¹ Paragraphs 24.18–25, 24.32–36 and 32.4–5

The account of his firing given by Private R to the Royal Military Police

51.165 Having described in his first RMP statement¹ reaching the APC, hearing the sound of shots and explosions, observing rioters throwing stones at the soldiers around the vehicle and the crowd "milling about the flats in front of the vehicle", Private R stated:

"I then noticed a male person wearing a jumper/dark slacks with black hair about 5' 10" tall, slim built. He was running with the crowd when he stopped, the crowd gave him plenty of space. He stood at an angle to me. I saw in his left hand an object which was fizzing, he attempted to throw it at me. I fired 1 x 7.62 Rd aimed shot at this man, he was thrown to the right and backwards, he hit the ground and lay there. 4–5 persons gathered around him, they picked him up and carried him away. I didn't see this man again."

51.166 Private R, after stating that the rioters threw acid bombs, "one of which splattered across my legs", continued:

"I then saw a hand appear around the corner of No 2 Block Rossville Flats at GR 43281675, it contained a pistol. The pistol fired twice and then withdrew. It again appeared and the pistol fired again. I fired 2 x 7.62 aimed shots at the pistol. I fired 1 x 7.62 aimed shots the first time I saw the pistol. I can't say if I hit it. I didn't fire again during the incident."

Private R's Royal Military Police map and trajectory photograph

The account of Sergeant O's firing given by Private R to the Royal Military Police

51.168 In his second RMP statement timed at 2130 hours on 4th February 1972,¹ Private R gave an account of witnessing Sergeant O firing at a man holding a pistol just after he (Private R) had had two acid bombs thrown at him from the top of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats:

"Further to my statement of 30 Jan 72 I would like to add that I was positioned between the wall of Block 1 Rossville Flats and one of our APCs which was parked about 15 feet from the wall at the south end of the block. I had just had two acid bombs thrown at me from the top of Block 1 Rossville Flats. Both of the bombs struck me on the legs, causing staining to my denims. The driver of the APC threw water over me which saved me from being burned.

I heard shooting from in front of me to my left. It sounded like a low calibre weapon. I looked across to the North East corner of the flats forecourt and saw a man crouched behind a maroon Ford Cortina. He had a pistol in his hand and was firing in our direction. I don't know how many rounds he fired. [Sergeant] 'O' was standing beside me and when he saw the gunman he fired his SLR at him. I don't know how many rounds he fired. I saw the gunman fall from behind the car and two or three people came and dragged him away. The car was about 70 yards from where I was located. I could not recognise the gunman.”

51.169 As will have been seen, this RMP statement was concerned with Private R’s evidence of acid bombs and what he observed Sergeant O doing, matters that we consider later in this chapter, but in the present context the relevant point is that Private R stated that Sergeant O was standing next to him when Sergeant O was firing at a man behind the Cortina.

51.170 Private R recorded in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ that the reference in his second RMP statement to the north-east corner of the flats forecourt was a mistake. He had earlier in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry² described the car as “backed up against the angle of the low wall on the edge of the car park in the position I indicate on the photograph”. However, the position of the Cortina is not indicated on Private R’s trajectory photograph (although it is on Sergeant O’s³). In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ Private R told us that the car was at about the point marked J on the plan attached to the statement⁵ (by the low wall of the northern part of the recreation ground on the south-east side of the car park). In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁶ on being shown Derrik Tucker Senior’s photograph (which we reproduce below), from which it appears that point J was within a fenced area, Private R said that although he was not sure, he thought that the Cortina had been roughly in an area that he marked on a photograph⁷ (near the northern corner of the low wall around the southern part of the recreation ground). Later in his oral evidence,⁸ he reverted to saying that the Cortina had been at point J. But it seems unlikely that the car was within the fenced area, and certainly no car is visible in the part of that area shown in Derrik Tucker Senior’s photograph. On the other hand, the area that Private R marked on the photograph⁹ matches the description of the car, in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, as backed up against the angle of a low wall on the edge of the car park. It is even conceivable that the car shown in the lower right corner of Derrik Tucker Senior’s photograph, albeit not a Cortina, might be the car in question, since its position would fit that description fairly precisely.

Private R's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his and Sergeant O's firing

51.171 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private R gave the following account:¹

"The crowd were making for the two openings between the blocks in the corners of the car park.

5. I noticed one man who was not moving in the same direction as the others. There was firing going on at this time. I could hear the sound of firing from the other side of block 1 in the area around the barricade. I also heard a couple of explosions from this area which I thought were bombs. I could also hear weapons being fired from our side of the flats, and I heard our SLR's firing. I was therefore looking out for likely snipers or bombers. The man I had noticed was about 30 yards away. He seemed to come out turning round as he did so. There were people running past crowded together and milling about. As he came out they avoided him. I could see he had something in his left hand which looked to be smoking. As he turned round he swung his arm down as if to throw a grenade. I brought my weapon into my shoulder took aim and fired 1 shot. I think I hit him in the right shoulder. Referring to the marked photograph I fired my shot from beside the right hand back door of the pig marked X on the photograph. The man was standing in the area marked 1 in the photograph."

51.172 Private R then gave an account of acid bombs being dropped near him and of seeing a soldier who he thought was Private T firing at the acid bomber, matters we return to later in this chapter.¹ He continued:²

"6. At the time the acid bombs went off there were no civilians in the area between the pig and the wall of block 1. Across the court yard, where I had seen the first man I fired at fall, a small group of people were gathering round him. At that moment I heard the sound of shooting from in front of me to my left. It sounded like a pistol. I looked across the car park and saw a maroon Cortina backed up against the angle of the low wall on the edge of the car park in the position I indicate on the photograph. I saw a man behind it. Through the car windows I could see him, and from time to time he came out round the rear of the car using the car as cover and fired shots with a pistol. [Sergeant] O was standing beside me and fired at this gunman. I saw the gunman fall. I think he fell over the low wall. Two or three people came up and dragged him away. I also saw an ambulance man in a white coat move along the low wall from the Chamberlain Street end of the car park and I think he helped drag this man away. I believe the car was between 50 and 60 yards from our position.

7. After this man had been dragged away Sergeant O went to the back somewhere. At the far end of block 2 in the position indicated as 2 on my photograph I saw a man's arm holding a pistol come out and fire between 2 and 3 shots. At this time the area in front of the alley way was clear of people. I could distinguish people on the grass bank behind the alley way, but I'm sure there was no one on the ground that I could see in front of it. When the pistol appeared and fired its first shot I came into the aim and as it fired again I fired one round. The arm withdrew, then it re-appeared and the pistol fired a couple more times. This time I was ready and I fired two shots at it. I do not know if I hit it and I did not see the fall of my shot. The arm withdrew and I did not see it again.

8. After this I saw that the man I had hit in the other corner of the court yard was being picked up and carried away. There were quite a few people round him, I think more than ten. I do not know what happened to the object he was about to throw. I am sure I did not hear a bang from that direction, although I had seen the object smoking. This did not surprise me because a fair number of these home made bombs fail to go off, and if anyone had got to it in time they might have pulled the fuse out."

- 51.173 According to this account Sergeant O had gone “to the back somewhere” before Private R fired at what he described as a man with a pistol. The references to his photograph appear to be to Private R’s trajectory photograph, reproduced above.
- 51.174 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private R described the man he first saw as about 30 yards away along Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, “sort of pressed against the wall”:¹

“Q. What was he doing?

A. It was obvious the crowd was running away and there were people stopping and throwing. This man ran out, took about five or six paces, not many more, then he swung round and he had a smoking object in his left hand and made to throw it like he was going to throw a grenade. At this time I took my safety catch off and I fired – I brought the weapon into the aim, took my safety catch off and fired one round. I assumed it hit him high in the shoulder, because of the way he fell.

Q. Was he still near the wall?

A. No, sir, it may be 5 yards out – not quite 5 yards; 4 or 5 yards.

Q. But there is still 30 yards down the wall?

A. Yes.

Q. How can you describe the man?

A. Well, at the time I saw him only a few seconds. It was fleeting. I would say he was roughly about 5 foot 10, slim build and dark hair, with light slacks.

Q. What happened to him?

A. At this precise moment that I fired, I put my safety catch back on, and then this acid bomb came down from the centre of No. 1 flats.

Q. An acid bomb came from above?

- 51.175 Later in his oral evidence Private R told the Widgery Inquiry that the crowd had opened up, “giving him room to throw the thing”.¹

- 51.176 When Private R was asked whether he had seen what happened to the man at whom he had fired, he replied that at that moment he “... was not even bothering. I got behind the vehicle itself for cover. I presumed there was people going out to him”:¹

“Q. Going back to when you saw the man you had fired at, did you see any people gather there?

A. Yes, four or five people came to him.

Q. Came to him?

A. Yes, because at this time there was still firing going on.

Q. Did you see him then lying on the ground?

A. I saw him fall, and after I saw him fall I had the safety catch back on. The acid bomb came down and I took cover behind the vehicle, and I saw my Platoon Sergeant fire at the man behind the Cortina.”

- 51.177 Private R said to the Widgery Inquiry that after he had seen people carry away the person behind the Cortina whom Sergeant O had hit, the shooting started to slow down and he presumed that Sergeant O had gone “behind” to check whether any of his men had been wounded.¹ He gave a similar description to that in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry of then seeing and firing at a man in the passageway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. He said that he could not say whether he had hit the man.²

The fifth entry in the Loden List of Engagements

- 51.178 The fifth entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

- 51.179 According to the grid references given, the nail bomber was some way out from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, as plotted on a map prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families.¹

- 51.180 We are satisfied that this entry reflects the account that Private R gave to Major Loden of the first shot that he said he had fired. The entry does not correspond with the RMP maps, trajectory photographs or accounts of the other soldiers of Mortar Platoon. However, the positions the grid references give for both the firer and the target must be incorrect, as they would mean that Private R was firing directly towards Sergeant O's APC, at a target implausibly close to that Army vehicle.

The fourth entry in the Loden List of Engagements

- 51.181 The fourth entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

"One gunman with pistol at GR 43321678 behind barricade at end of Chamberlain St shot from GR 43271686. Hit."

- 51.182 The grid references, plotted on the map reproduced below, which was prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families, show the target close to the north end of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, some distance to the south-east of Chamberlain Street. The firing soldier was, according to the grid references, close to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹

51.184 This fourth entry records the gunman as being hit. In his later accounts Private R stated that he did not know whether he had hit this target. While this could be said to militate against the suggestion that the fourth entry reflects the account Private R gave Major Loden, we are not persuaded that this outweighs the factors considered above, since

Private R might well on reflection have concluded afterwards that he could not be sure that he had hit this target. In our view, therefore, the fourth entry probably does reflect what Private R told Major Loden.

Private R's evidence to this Inquiry about his and Sergeant O's firing

51.185 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he had a very limited recollection of events and that the best evidence he could give was that which he had given in 1972 when matters were relatively fresh in his mind. He told us that he recalled a group of civilians standing against the wall on the eastern side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, while other civilians were running towards the gaps between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3.²

"I noticed one man in particular, who was pressed against the wall, in the group I have referred to at E (grid reference K15). It was my impression that the others in the group did not want to get too close to him, and that he was up to no good. Although I only saw him briefly, I would say that I had a grand view of him he was in his 20's; and tall, with dark hair. He took a few steps forward from the wall (at right angles to the wall stepping out into the car park of the Flats) and turned in my direction, right shoulder forward, he was left handed. I saw, in his left hand, an object which was smoking and which I thought was a bomb of some description; it could have been a nail bomb, a jelly bomb, or a blast bomb. The man drew his arm back, in a position similar to a bowling action, as though he was about to throw the object. I took aim and fired a single shot from my SLR; I believe that the bullet hit him high up on the right shoulder, causing him to spin around. I do not know what happened to the man after that – although I do recall people gathering around him. I have been asked by Eversheds whether there was a priest in this group; I have no recollection of seeing one. The object was smoking heavily in the same manner as a dynamite fuse, which is what I believe was burning."

51.186 Private R's reference to "E" was a reference to a point about halfway down the east side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, which he had marked on a map.¹ His reference to "Eversheds" is to the solicitors who took statements on behalf of the Inquiry.

“The next thing that I now recall is that a pistol was fired in my direction from the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Flats. I saw a hand holding a pistol appear from the alleyway and heard shots being fired from the same position. The approximate position is marked F on the map (grid reference L18). I returned fire; I think I fired three shots, but I do not think I hit the gunman. If I did, I would have hit the arm. During the exchange, the hand holding the gun disappeared behind the alleyway and then reappeared, but I cannot remember how many shots were fired in our direction. As far as I can recall, there were not many civilians around by that stage.

During this incident, I think that Sergeant O appeared at the back of the Pig to check that Private T and I were okay. I have marked the approximate position of Private T and Sergeant O on the map at G and H (grid reference L14). I do not now remember any conversations taking place between us at this stage but they most probably did. The acid that had been splashed over my legs earlier was still eating away at my denims.”

51.188 Point F on Private R’s map was marked at the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. Points G and H were marked as close to where from other evidence it is clear that Sergeant O’s APC had stopped.¹

51.189 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private R told us that Bloody Sunday was the first occasion on which he had fired a live round in earnest.¹ He also told us that he did not believe that the first man at whom he fired could have been throwing a stone, or that he could have been mistaken in thinking that the man was throwing a bomb, but that he had not seen any attempt to light what he thought was a bomb.²

² Day 337/36

51.190 When it was pointed out to Private R that in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he had said that he saw the man as he was coming round the corner to get back to Sergeant O’s APC,¹ whereas in his written evidence to this Inquiry he had indicated that he was at the back of the APC,² and it was suggested to him that the former was likely to be right, his reply was “It may be, yes”.³

² B691.003

- 51.191 Private R told us that he did not shoot Jackie Duddy (who was mortally wounded in the car park) or see him being carried from there by a group led by Fr Edward Daly; nor did he see any of those we are sure were wounded by gunfire in the car park.¹
- ¹ Day 337/60-67
- 51.192 Private R was asked how he had come to describe the man he believed had a bomb as wearing dark slacks in his RMP statement, and light slacks in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. He said: “... I made a mistake saying that, it should have been he was wearing dark slacks.”¹
- ¹ Day 337/106
- 51.193 Private R was asked about the fact that in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he had first described the incident with the acid bombs, then Sergeant O’s shots and then his own shots at a man with a pistol in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, whereas in his written evidence to this Inquiry the sequence of the last two events was put the other way round. He replied that his present belief was that “Sergeant O fired at his target and then I fired at my target and then I was acid bombed. I think that may be the order. Even then I am still not quite sure.”¹
- ¹ Day 337/148
- 51.194 Private R denied that he had made his second RMP statement to try to justify Sergeant O’s shooting.¹
- ¹ Day 337/126-127
- 51.195 At the end of his oral evidence he gave the following answers:¹

“Q. Do you remember that I was asking you questions this morning which drew attention to the similarity in some of the circumstances in which your first target was hit and in which the boy, Jack Duddy, was hit?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you remember me asking you those questions?

I should also tell you this: the Tribunal has heard evidence from a considerable number of civilian witnesses, including a considerable number who were in the car park of the Rossville Flats, running towards one of the two alleyways between the two blocks; do you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. None of those witnesses speaks of a man falling, having been shot, at the point identified by you on your photograph or of that man having been shot, being carried away through the gap between Blocks 1 and 2; do you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. That raises the possibility that there was in fact no man with a nail bomb as you describe and that your first shot was in fact directed towards the crowd or somebody who was in the crowd running away and was fired without any justification at all; is that the position?

A. No.

Q. If that were so, that which I have been suggesting to you was so, it would follow that your account of a man with a nail bomb in a left-arm bowling position was invented; did you make that up?

A. No, I did not.”

Private R's evidence about firing by other soldiers

51.196 We have referred above to Private R's evidence about firing by Sergeant O and Private T, and we return to this evidence later. Private R did not describe firing by any other soldier, and told us that he could not now remember whether he had seen any soldier other than Sergeant O firing.¹

Private R's evidence about acid bombs

51.197 We deal later in this chapter¹ with the evidence that Private R gave about acid bombs.

Private R's use of his respirator

51.198 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R recorded that he was putting on his respirator as Sergeant O's vehicle passed through gas near Barrier 12. Some of the other soldiers already had their respirators on. He said that, by the time he was running across the waste ground to catch up with Sergeant O's vehicle after disembarking, the majority of the soldiers had taken off their respirators.

¹ B670

51.199 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he took off his respirator just before he reached the waste ground.

51.200 If, as he accepted was possible in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private R is the soldier seen in the middle of the group of three in the first of two photographs (reproduced below) taken by Robert White and if, as we consider is probably the case, he was the soldier running close to the kerb in the second, he appears still to have been wearing his respirator when these photographs were taken, though the quality of these photographs is such that it is not possible to be certain that this was the case.

Summary of Private R's accounts of his shots

51.201 According to the accounts of Private R, he had run to where Sergeant O's APC had stopped in the Rossville Flats car park, from where he saw a man about halfway down the eastern side of Block 1 with a fizzing or smoking object in his hand. He fired one shot at this man and believed that he had hit him in the shoulder. After acid bombs had been dropped near him he saw a man's hand with a pistol appear from the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. Private R fired three shots at this man but did not know whether he had hit him.

Evidence of other soldiers about Private R's firing

51.202 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private C, a member of Composite Platoon, recorded that after disembarking from his vehicle he was ordered to work his way round "the walls at the edge of the open ground". When he reached the south end of the back of Chamberlain Street he saw a soldier standing by the APC in the entrance to the car park fire a shot at the far corner between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. He confirmed this in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.² In his written statement to this Inquiry³ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ he said that he did not now recall seeing this firing. The soldier whose firing he described in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry could have been either Sergeant O or Private R.

⁴ Day 354/15-17

51.203 Private 005 was a member of Machine Gun Platoon. According to his RMP statement,¹ he was somewhere in the area of the road leading from Rossville Street into the car park. He stated that he saw a man on “the first floor veranda which runs between block one and block two of the flats” fire two shots from a pistol. Private R, who was standing at the nearside wing of an APC, fired one round at the gunman, who disappeared briefly before reappearing and firing another two or three rounds in the general direction of the soldiers. Private R returned two rounds. Private 005 did not see whether the gunman was hit or not. The gunman disappeared.

¹ B1370

51.204 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 005 told us that he saw a soldier firing towards the Rossville Flats. He thought that it had been Private R but could not rule out the possibility that it had been Private T. He thought that the soldier had fired three shots. It seemed to Private 005 that the soldier was firing “into the first floor of the flats because he looked to have his gun more or less on a level rather than raised”. Private 005 could see “puffs of smoke” rising from the ground where the soldier was standing. This and the soldier’s firing led Private 005 to believe that acid bombs or something similar were being thrown at the soldier, but Private 005 did not see any acid being thrown. Private 005 told us that he had a vague memory of seeing a man on either the ground floor or the first floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, with his arm back as if about to throw something, and with an object, possibly a nail bomb or petrol bomb, in his hand. However, Private 005 did not remember seeing the man throw anything, and was concerned that his memory might be wrong. He stated that he did not now remember seeing a man with a pistol, although he recalled hearing pistol fire at about the time when he saw the soldier firing.²

51.205 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 005 admitted that he had not been in a position to see a gunman on the walkway between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, and said that he had described the gunman in his RMP statement on the basis of hearsay in the NAAFI. Later he claimed that he had heard the gossip in the NAAFI about the gunman only after making his RMP statement, and that the RMP had made up the story about the gunman.² He denied that the sequence of shots described in his RMP statement reflected what he had said to the RMP. He said that he had told the RMP that he had seen Private R fire one shot towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2. He said that the RMP statement taker seemed already to know what had happened, and had filled in gaps in his knowledge.³ Private 005 was asked what made him think that the soldier was having something thrown at him,⁴ and replied that it was “Just the way the stuff was splashing about". He accepted that it was possible that the man described in his written statement to this Inquiry as having had his arm in a throwing position had not had anything in his hand. He then said that he had not seen the man at all and was "just surmising that there was somebody throwing it". He confirmed that it was not true that he had seen this man.⁵

51.206 In view of his evidence to this Inquiry, it is difficult to place much reliance on the account given by Private 005, though it is possible that he saw the first shot fired by Private R.

51.207 We now turn to the soldiers who disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in the Rossville Flats car park.

Sergeant O

The account of his firing given by Sergeant O to the Royal Military Police

51.208 In his first RMP statement timed at 2130 hours on 30th January 1972,¹ Sergeant O, after giving an account of incoming shots from about four to five weapons of mixed calibre, continued:²

"When the firing started I was positioned by the rear of the Humber. I saw a male person wearing a dark jacket and dark shirt. He had dark hair; he was behind a red Cortina car which was parked facing my location at GR 43291678.

I saw the top half of this man's body behind the car, he was holding a pistol in his right hand and pointing it at my location.

I saw the man's hand jerking with the pistol and I believed he was firing at me. My SLR had been cocked on moving forward from my position. I fired 1 x 7.62 rd well aimed shot at this gunman. I saw the round strike the car.

The gunman still appeared to be firing at me. I couldn't see the flash of the weapon but his hand was jerking as from a recoil.

I fired 2 x 7.62 rd well aimed shots at this gunman. I saw the gunman appear to be thrown backwards and disappear out of sight behind the car. I saw him being dragged away by two men, a woman, and a first aid man. They went between the flats and out of sight. I didn't see this gunman again. He was about 50 metres from my location when I fired.

The firing continued and I located a second gunman on a first floor verandah between blocks 2 and 3 Rossville Flats, Londonderry. He was firing behind the concrete flat support. I believe that his weapon was a M1 Carbine. I saw the flash of his weapon firing, I fired 2 x 7.62 rd well aimed shots at this gunman. I saw his body jerk backwards and out of sight, I think I hit this man in the head. Only his head and shoulders were exposed. He was standing behind the pillar, when I fired he was about 75 metres from my location. I didn't see this man again. I can't describe him, he didn't show enough of himself.

I kept the area under observation. I saw several persons move along the verandahs in a crouched position towards the gunmans location. They appeared to be dragging something. They then left the verandah. They reappeared on the ground floor between blocks 2 and 3 at GR 43281675.

I saw the group move out of sight and then one male person appeared and fired at my location with a carbine. I saw this man in the shoulder aiming position with the weapon, I saw the flash of the weapon firing. I fired 2 x 7.62 rds aimed shot at this gunman. He vanished from my sight. I didn't see him again. I don't know if I hit him. He was about 75 metres from my location.

I didn't fire any further rounds during the shooting incidents."

² B449-441

51.209 In his second RMP statement timed at 1430 hours on 1st February 1972,¹ Sergeant O added this:

"Further to my statement made on 30 Jan 72.

I would like to add, when I fired at the second gunman who was located on the Veranda between Blocks 2–3 Rossville Flats, Londonderry, I fired first 1 x 7.62 round, aimed shot at the gunman. I didn't observe a strike. I therefore, fired 2 x 7.62 rounds at this gunman who continued to fire at my location after I had fired at him. The second time I fired the gunman was hit and thrown from my sight."

- 51.210 In this statement, therefore, Sergeant O described firing another shot, in addition to the two described in his first RMP statement, at the gunman he described being on the verandah between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.

The account of his firing given by Sergeant O in the Thames Television This Week programme

- 51.211 In the Thames Television This Week programme Northern Ireland – Two Sides of the Story broadcast on 3rd February 1972, Sergeant O said that he returned fire against at least three men who were firing at him.¹ His first gunman was a man using a pistol, while standing behind a maroon Cortina positioned “half-left across the car park as I was looking at it”. Sergeant O fired three rounds at him. The man went down. Sergeant O was sure that he had hit him. The man’s body was taken away by “friends or people within that area”.

- 51.212 Sergeant O’s second gunman was firing a fairly light rifle, similar to an M1 carbine, from the “first floor balcony” between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. Sergeant O fired at him. The man fell and his body was taken away by people who brought it downstairs, out of view of the soldiers, and reappeared beneath the balcony where the man had been.¹

- 51.213 Sergeant O’s third gunman then stepped “round the corner of the stairs within that area” and fired at Sergeant O with an M1-type carbine. Sergeant O assumed that this was the same weapon as had been used by the second gunman, and that it had been brought down with the body, and was being fired by one of that man’s colleagues or friends. Sergeant O fired at the third gunman but could not say whether he hit him.

The account given by Sergeant O to the Royal Military Police of ordering Private T to fire

- 51.214 In his third RMP statement timed at 1510 hours on 15th February 1972,¹ Sergeant O described ordering Private T to fire at a man he said he had no doubt was throwing down acid bombs from the Rossville Flats. We deal in detail with this part of Sergeant O’s evidence when considering later in this chapter² Private T’s account of the shots he fired.

Sergeant O's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his and Private S's firing

51.215 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O gave a similar account of seeing a man behind a red Cortina car with a pistol in his hand, pointed in his direction, about 50m away: “... at this distance I am quite satisfied I can identify a pistol, pointing in my direction. I saw a definite kick as he fired. I do not think it was a six-shot revolver, he fired too many shots for that.”

“11. I returned one shot at him. It was a deliberate aimed shot, fired through sights from the shoulder. The first missed hitting the car windows. I corrected aim and fired 2 rapid shots. The gunman was thrown backwards and fell out of sight behind the wall. A first aid man ran along the low wall from Chamberlain Street to the gunman, followed by two or three others. They were moving behind the wall. I saw them carrying him away out through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3.

12. There was shooting from my own men and from the block area at them. I saw another fall of shot, between the pig and the Chamberlain Street wall. Still by the front end of the pig, behind the mudguard, I saw the flash of a weapon on the lower of the two enclosed passageways joining Blocks 2 and 3. There was a gunman at the block 3 end with a weapon like an M1 carbine or small rifle. I fired an aimed shot at him. Again my first shot missed because (I think) the plastic stock of my SLR had broken and was throwing me out. I fired 2 more shots and think I hit the gunman in the head. This was at a range of about 75 metres. Again I have no doubt of the weapon. There is no possibility of confusion with a long lens camera or anything like that.

13. The firing was beginning to slacken off so I watched the position of gunman. I saw people moving along the verandah of block 3 crouching. They dragged something away from the gunman's position into the covered part of the passageway.

14. There was no sustained fire at us now, just pot shots at us.”

51.217 Sergeant O then described the incident in which he ordered Private T to fire at a man throwing down bottles from the Rossville Flats.¹ Returning to his own shots, he stated:

“15. I moved round to the front of the pig and saw another body being taken through the alleyway where the first body had been taken. Then a man stepped out from that corner, brought a weapon (I thought it was the same weapon as before) to his shoulder and fired. I fired back two aimed shots and he either jumped or fell back. I cannot say if I hit him. These were the last rounds I fired.”

51.218 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O said that after what he described as incoming fire, “The first thing that happened is we moved to the back of the pig. The prisoners were put in the pig. The blokes then spread out into fire positions and started to try and identify these targets.” He told the Widgery Inquiry that it was about ten seconds after the initial firing that the soldiers started firing and that around his APC “it would be either myself or Soldier S who would be one of the first two to open fire”.¹

51.219 Sergeant O then gave the Widgery Inquiry a similar account to that in his written statement, of firing at a man behind a red Cortina and then seeing people, including someone he described as “a Knights of Malta, a first-aid man”, carrying him away through the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.¹

51.220 When he was asked what he did next, Sergeant O replied that he stayed where he was at the front of the APC. “I identified a further gunman, in the lowest of the two adjoining cover, the cat-walks, in between Blocks 2 and 3”:

“Q. You identified him as a gunman, how?”

A. He appeared standing up at the edge of the balcony firing a type of weapon which I assume was an M.1 carbine for it was a fairly short weapon and he was triggering it off fairly fast. I could distinctly see flashes at the muzzle.

Q. What did you do?

A. I returned fire on that man. Again I fired one round and missed. I fired a further two rounds and again the man went down.

Q. Did you see what happened to him on the balcony?

A. People moved along the balcony on block 3 and dragged the man into the cover in an archway, into the cat-walk, I am sorry.”

51.221 He then told the Widgery Inquiry that the only soldier he could see firing was Private S, who was standing to his left against the back wall of 32 or 34 Chamberlain Street. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O gave this description of Private S firing:¹

“Q. At the same time was there shooting from your own men that you were aware of?

A. The only one that I could actually see firing was Soldier S, who was standing slightly to my left against the back wall of 32 or 34 Chamberlain Street, within this area. He was firing across my front into the gap between block 1 and block 2 into that area.

Q. That would be in this direction?

A. Yes sir.

Q. The opposite corner from the one you were firing?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see what target he was engaging?

A. Only once I got a glimpse of a man kneeling down in that area of, say, between blocks 1 and 2 firing a weapon from the shoulder.

Q. What sort of weapon was he firing?

A. It was a short-barrelled rifle of some description. Again, it is possible it was an M.1 carbine, but I couldn't say. I only got a glimpse of the man through the people milling around.

Q. It was a short barrel?

A. Yes, rifle.

Q. When you say there were people milling around, could you describe it more?

A. At this stage there were still a few people in the courtyard moving around and there was quite a bit of people moving around in that area, actually in the junction of block 2 and 1.

Q. Was there anyone very close to the man who was with the rifle?

A. No. There seemed to be a sort of gap round about him, but there were people moving round about. There was nobody actually close to him that you could say within touching distance. There seemed to be a small gap where he was himself.

Q. What about the alleyway behind between blocks 1 and 2? At that time were there any people in that alleyway, can you remember?

A. I cannot honestly say, like. I saw there were people moving around in that area. It is possible there were people in that alleyway but it just never registered.

Q. You cannot remember?

A. No.

Q. You saw the man you say with a rifle, or a short barrelled weapon, at his shoulder. Did you see whether he was doing anything? I mean, did you see the weapon used?

A. Well, there was a strike of rounds between myself and Soldier S on the ground at this stage and I assumed it had come from this man.”

51.222 Sergeant O continued his oral evidence by saying that it was “a matter of about three or four minutes later” that he fired at the man who appeared round the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.¹

“Q. In what circumstances did you fire those two rounds?

A. Well, when I finished firing at the man up in the cat-walk I observed the area. I watched the body being taken away. There was nothing further came from that area. I then got back, I moved to the back of the vehicle and checked up on the blokes there. I came back round to the front of the vehicle and at this stage there was a body being taken between the gaps between blocks 2 and 3. As the body was taken away and vanished through that gap a man stepped round that corner and again started firing what I assumed to be an M.1 carbine.

Q. Pausing a moment, the body going through between blocks 2 and 3, which body was that, do you know?

A. I couldn't honestly say which body it was.

Q. Was it the first from behind the wall?

A. No, it wasn't the first one from behind the wall. The one from behind the wall that fired initially had long gone through that gap. It wasn't the same body.

Q. Then he came out and started firing?

A. He just stuck his head and shoulders, sort of thing, round the corner and started firing with a weapon. I fired two rounds. He jerked back. Whether he jerked back because I hit him or whether he jerked back because the rounds were close to him, I couldn't say.

Q. What was he firing with?

A. I believe again it was an M.1 carbine.

Q. Whether you hit him or not you do not know?

A. No, I couldn't say."

51.223 Sergeant O said that he did not fire from the hip at any time, nor did he see any of his soldiers doing so.¹

Sergeant O's reference to his firing in his Praxis interviews

51.224 As we have previously explained, Sergeant O was interviewed, probably in 1989, as part of the research that resulted in the Channel 4 Secret History documentary Bloody Sunday made by Praxis Films Ltd, and was interviewed again for the purposes of the same programme on 14th May 1991. While the transcript of the first interview appears to be incomplete, it contains no description of Sergeant O's own firing.¹

51.225 In his second interview Sergeant O did not want to discuss any gunmen he might have seen, but said that he did not fire at anyone who did not have a weapon in his hand.¹

The account of his firing given by Sergeant O in his Peter Taylor interview

51.226 Peter Taylor interviewed Sergeant O on 28th November 1991 for the BBC Inside Story documentary Remember Bloody Sunday.

51.227 Sergeant O said in this interview¹ that he saw a man about 50 yards away, or perhaps a little less, firing a pistol at him. He could see the kick of the weapon as the man pulled the trigger. Sergeant O returned fire. He missed with his first shot but hit the man with his next two shots. The man was taken away by “2 nurses and another gentleman”. Sergeant O was asked what happened to the pistol, and replied: “Once he went down and I knew he was down, I was then looking for other targets.”

51.228 Sergeant O said that his second gunman was “up in the junction of 2 of the blocks – I think block 1 and 2 up in the ... first floor ... veranda type ... area of the flats”.¹ He was convinced that the man had fired a shot from a shoulder-held weapon down into the area where the soldiers were. He saw the muzzle flash and fired at the man. The man fell. Sergeant O was sure that he had hit him. Sergeant O did not try to find the weapon.² The body was taken away “through one of the tunnels”.

¹ I551

Sergeant O's use of his respirator

51.230 As already noted, Sergeant O gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

51.231 In his written account Sergeant O told us that he recalled putting on his gas mask (respirator) as his APC was driven through Barrier 12, but that he took his helmet and gas mask off before disembarking: “... from then on, I think I was bare headed.”¹

Sergeant O's written evidence to this Inquiry about his and Private S's firing

51.232 Sergeant O stated that it was a second or two after the first incoming fire that he saw a man with a pistol in the car park: “The reason that this man caught my eye was that he was stationary whereas everyone else in the car park was moving as quickly as they could to get through the gaps between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3.”¹ Sergeant O then gave a description, as he had in his previous accounts, of this man firing his pistol, and of his own firing back at the man; of the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer who went to the aid of the man, followed by a woman and, Sergeant O thought, two other men; and of the man being taken through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3.

- 51.233 Sergeant O then described shooting at a man who was on the “first balcony” at the southern end of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, who was partially shielded by a vertical concrete pillar and who was firing a short-barrelled rifle from his shoulder. He stated that the man was flung back against the concrete surrounding the balcony, and dropped out of sight on the balcony “below the balustrade level”.¹

“I then saw people moving towards the gunman in a southerly direction along the first floor balcony of Block 3. I am sure there was no movement at all on that balcony while the gunman was firing at me but as soon as he went down I could see the heads popping up and down along the balcony. I could not see the body but I assumed he was being dragged away.”

- 51.234 Sergeant O stated the following in relation to where he had said that he had seen this gunman:¹

“Where I describe in my first RMP statement the gunman on the verandah between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats firing behind the concrete flat support, this is the pillar I have described. Having now looked carefully at a photograph of the Rossville Flats, I have identified that the verandah (or balcony) was actually towards the south end of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, not on the walkway between Blocks 2 and 3.”

- 51.235 In this statement Sergeant O described, in similar terms to the evidence that he had given to the Widgery Inquiry, what he said he had seen of Private S engaging a gunman in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2. He also told us:¹

“My recollections of this incident are not as vivid as those I have described above where I was involved in firing, but I am confident that what I have said is accurate. Private S was a good soldier and I was confident that he would handle the incident without me needing to get involved. In an interview I gave to Thames Television in the Sergeants’ Mess at Palace Barracks a few days after 30th January 1972 (which I deal with in more detail below) I referred to a soldier ‘getting some stick’. I was referring to Private S and this incident.

Knowing Private S as I did, I knew that he would not shoot until he was able to fire a clear aimed shot at the gunman. He would not have shot wildly in the direction of the gunman and I did not continue to watch what happened in the exchange of fire between Private S and this gunman. I would only have intervened if I had seen Private S fall, which I did not. During this incident, when I looked across to the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, I did not notice anything on the ground in the centre of the car park.”

51.236 Sergeant O also described seeing a man throwing down an acid bomb from the Rossville Flats and ordering Private T to fire at the man if he did it again. We consider this incident when dealing with Private T’s account of the shots that he fired.

51.237 Sergeant O told us that it was about three or four minutes after he had fired at the man with a pistol (and after he had fired at his second target, seen the incident involving Private S and told Private T to fire) that he came under fire again when he was at the front passenger side of his APC. He stated that on this occasion the gunman had a weapon similar to the one used by the second gunman he had engaged and was firing at ground level from the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. Sergeant O told us that he fired two shots at this man, who jerked back behind the corner.¹

51.238 Sergeant O stated that he was sure that he had hit the first two men at whom he had fired, but thought that he had not hit the third.¹

51.239 He also stated that the reason he had made a second RMP statement was that when he was shown the first (which he had made when he was very tired) he realised that it was incorrect in that it referred to two shots at the man on the verandah, whereas he had fired three at this target.¹ We accept that this was a genuine correction as to the number of shots fired and not one made falsely for an ulterior purpose; though whether Sergeant O was correct in his accounts of why he fired is a matter we consider further later in this report.²

² Paragraphs 64.32–47

Sergeant O's trajectory photograph

51.240 Towards the end of his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that John Heritage (the member of the Treasury Solicitor's department who took his statement for the Widgery Inquiry) carefully prepared a photograph showing the trajectory of his shots. In his oral evidence, Sergeant O said that the following photograph seemed to be the one that John Heritage completed.²

51.241 In our view, for the following reasons, Sergeant O was probably mistaken in his recollection that the trajectory of his shots was marked on the photograph by John Heritage. In Sergeant O's written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ there is a reference to an aerial photograph, of which a copy was used to prepare the trajectory photograph shown above, which to our minds shows that a copy of this photograph was in front of him and John Heritage when he made the statement. In his supplementary written statement to this Inquiry, John Heritage confirmed this.²

² KH6.17; KH6.29

51.242 However, the trajectory photograph is marked not only with the trajectories but, in a lighter pen, with an indication of the position of the Cortina in the car park of the Rossville Flats. Although it is impossible to be sure, a comparison with John Heritage's handwriting on, for example, a document relating to Lance Corporal V¹ suggests to us that he may well have written the word "Cortina". If so, Sergeant O was probably right in recalling that he saw John Heritage writing on the photograph.

51.243 However, we believe that Sergeant O was wrong in thinking that John Heritage marked the trajectories on the photograph. The script in which the trajectories are numbered does not obviously resemble John Heritage's handwriting. In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ John Heritage told us that to the best of his recollection the maps and photographs to which witnesses referred in their interviews were "prepared beforehand by the SIB [Special Investigation Branch]", and he drew attention to the statement for the Widgery Inquiry of Private C,² in which the witness referred to markings on a map and photograph in terms that arguably indicate that the markings had been made before the interview. In his supplementary written statement to this Inquiry, Basil Hall, the former Solicitor to the Widgery Inquiry, told us that he asked that the soldiers who had fired rounds should indicate their lines of fire on photographs, and that copies of these photographs "would have been available to members of the team taking statements".³

Sergeant O's Royal Military Police map

¹ B443

51.245 It will be noted that this map only shows two of Sergeant O's targets, whereas three were described in his RMP statement.¹ It is possible that the person who prepared this map chose only to mark the targets that Sergeant O said that he had hit. It is also possible that the third gunman described by Sergeant O was omitted from the RMP map because the RMP statement does not clearly indicate the position of that gunman.

The absence of reference to Sergeant O's firing in the Loden List of Engagements

51.246 The Loden List of Engagements records nothing that appears to relate to the accounts of shooting given by Sergeant O. We are satisfied that this is because Sergeant O was at Altnagelvin Hospital at the time when the list was being compiled. As is discussed elsewhere in this report,¹ Sergeant O, together with a number of soldiers, including Corporal P, escorted the bodies of three of the rubble barricade casualties from the Bogside to the hospital.² They left at about 1645 hours,³ arrived at the casualty department by 1730 hours⁴ and were still present at the mortuary at 1815 hours.⁵ Sergeant O told this Inquiry, and we accept, that after completing their duties at Altnagelvin, the soldiers drove directly to the base at Drumahoe, outside Londonderry, where they stayed that night.⁶ The Loden List of Engagements was, as we explain elsewhere in this report,⁷ compiled at some point after 1730 hours in Clarence Avenue, Londonderry, before 1 PARA withdrew to Drumahoe.

Sergeant O's oral evidence to this Inquiry about his firing

51.247 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant O marked a photograph with a blue arrow to show where he said the Cortina had been, and told us that the man at whom he fired had been at the rear of the car.¹

51.248 Sergeant O said that the gunman was firing in his direction: *"It could have been me; it could have been one of the other men; it was just in my direction."*¹ He marked with a green arrow on the photograph shown above the area "behind the low wall" from which he said that he recalled that the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer had come, and with a red arrow approximately where he thought he was himself standing (ie at the front edge of the APC) when he fired at the man, which he said was the same position from which he fired at his second target.²

² Day 335/60-61; Day 335/70

51.249 In his first RMP statement Sergeant O had given a grid reference for the position of the red Cortina car behind which he said there was a man firing a pistol.¹ In the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry he was disposed to agree that this showed that the car was further south than the position he had marked; and that accordingly when he fired in the direction of this car his shots went towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.² However, although he accepted the point put to him, it was a bad one. It was suggested to him that the grid reference given in his first RMP statement (GR 43291678) corresponded to the position marked by Martin Tucker with a red arrow on a photograph.³ That was wrong. The grid reference indicates a position further north, and more nearly consistent with the positions indicated on Sergeant O's RMP map,⁴ on his trajectory photograph, and on the photograph⁵ that he marked in his oral evidence to this Inquiry. Those positions are also close to the position suggested by much of Private R's evidence.

51.250 With regard to this incident, there was the following series of answers in the course of Sergeant O's oral evidence:¹

"Q. If we go back to your statement at B575.138, you say you saw this man's hand jerking with the pistol: 'and I believed he was firing at me'.

A. Yes.

Q. Why did you not take cover at that stage just to protect yourself?

A. I did not think about taking cover.

Q. You what?

A. I did not think about taking cover.

Q. Was it not a natural reaction to take cover so that you are in a better position to fire back from a position of safety?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. At this stage you were standing at the front passenger door of this Pig, on the left side?

A. Yes.

Q. Totally exposed –

A. Yes.

Q. – to this gunman?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any problem with you taking cover on the other side and firing back from cover?

A. Only the length of time it would have taken me to get round the Pig. I preferred to stand my ground and return the fire.

Q. When you did return the fire, you fired a shot at him which you say missed, it hit the car?

A. Yes.

Q. The gunman did not take cover or duck behind the wall or do anything else to avoid being shot; did he?

A. He must have made the same decision as me, then.

Q. There you were standing toe to toe so to speak, shooting at each other until the first man went down; was that the picture?

A. I think the odds were on my side, yes.

Q. He was standing there exposed himself?

A. Yes.

Q. Firing his handgun at your SLR?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this another example of the sort of stupid gunmen that were there?

A. I think so. I do not know where the 'stupid' come in, but it was an example of the gunman who was there."

51.251 With regard to his second target, Sergeant O marked on another photograph (reproduced below) two places where, though his mind was "not 100 per cent clear", the gunman he saw could have been, with the concrete pillar shielding half his body.¹

51.252 Sergeant O said that this gunman did not appear to notice his first shot, which Sergeant O thought had hit the concrete “round about” the gunman, and that the gunman continued firing. Sergeant O disagreed with the suggestion that it was odd that the man had not noticed this shot, on the ground that “He was probably focused the same way I was”. Sergeant O said he was sure that he had hit the man when he shot again, because the man was thrown backwards.¹

51.253 Sergeant O's attention was drawn to the fact that he had described his second target in his first and second RMP statements¹ as being on a first floor verandah between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry² as being at the Block 3 end of the lower of the two enclosed passageways joining Blocks 2 and 3, and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry as being in the lowest of the two "cat-walks" between Blocks 2 and 3,³ whereas in his written statement to this Inquiry he had described his target as being on the "first floor balcony" at the southern end of Block 3.⁴

³ WT13.30

⁴ B575.115

51.254 It was suggested to Sergeant O that photographs showed that the walkway between Blocks 2 and 3 was enclosed, so that a gunman would be unlikely to have fired through windows from there; and that the balconies running along Block 3 were fitted with railings rather than a solid wall, so that it would have been possible to see more than the heads of people running along the balcony.^{1,2} It was suggested to Sergeant O that these alleged discrepancies demonstrated that he had invented his account of firing at a gunman. Sergeant O agreed, as he had recorded in his written statement, that he had obviously been mistaken in putting the gunman on the walkway. He said "I think the gunman was on the balcony, on the corner",³ and denied that he had invented his account.⁴

¹ We are doubtful whether someone moving along the back of the balcony would have been continuously visible to someone at ground level.

⁴ Day 336/37-46

² FR7.426

51.255 In our view there are indications that even in 1972 Sergeant O intended to say that the gunman had been on the balcony in Block 3. The references in his first RMP statement¹ to the "concrete flat support" and the "pillar" are most easily understood as references to one of the supporting pillars on the balcony. His trajectory photograph places the gunman on the balcony. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² he recorded that he saw people dragging something "away from the gunman's position into the covered part of the passageway". If the last phrase refers to the connecting walkway, as to our minds it does, this implies that, on the basis of Sergeant O's account, the gunman was not in it when he fell. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ Sergeant O said that the gunman was "standing up at the edge of the balcony" and that after the shooting he was dragged "into the cat-walk".

² B468

51.256 It was suggested to Sergeant O that the reason for which he had refused to talk to the Praxis interviewers about his firing on Bloody Sunday was that he had participated in the shooting of innocent civilians and had supervised his men as they shot innocent civilians. He denied this and said that, as he had indicated to Praxis, he had had concerns for his safety.¹

Sergeant O's evidence about firing by other soldiers

51.257 We noted earlier that in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry Sergeant O said that Private S was the only soldier he saw firing. Sergeant O confirmed this in his written and oral evidence to the present Inquiry.¹

Summary of Sergeant O's accounts of his shots

51.258 According to the accounts given by Sergeant O, therefore, while he was near his APC and soon after he had arrested William John Doherty he fired three shots at a man with a pistol who was behind a Cortina car on the south-east side of the car park; then three shots at a man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats; and finally two shots at a man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon at ground level on the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3. He was sure he had hit his first two targets, but said he thought that he had not hit his third. He estimated the time between firing at his first target and firing at his third as about three to four minutes.

Evidence of other soldiers about Sergeant O's firing

51.259 Three or perhaps four other soldiers described Sergeant O's firing. We have already referred to Private C,¹ though whether he saw Sergeant O or Private R remains uncertain. The others were Private S, Private R and Private T.

Private S

51.260 Private S gave accounts of firing by Sergeant O, which we have considered earlier in this chapter.¹ He told the RMP that he saw Sergeant O firing at a gunman who was at a "ground floor window" towards the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats,² while he told the Widgery Inquiry that he saw Sergeant O firing shots at a target out of his sight at the other corner of the car park.³ He told us that the account he had given to the RMP of seeing a gunman was untrue, but he stood by his evidence that he had seen Sergeant O firing.⁴

Private R

51.261 We have already referred¹ to the description of Sergeant O's firing given by Private R in his second RMP statement² and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.³ In these statements, Private R recorded that after he had been hit by two acid bombs thrown from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, he saw a man firing a pistol towards the soldiers from behind a maroon Cortina in the car park. Sergeant O, who was standing beside Private R, fired at the gunman, who fell and was dragged away by two or three people. Private R said that he did not know how many rounds were fired either by the gunman or by Sergeant O.

² B666

51.262 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he was standing behind Sergeant O's APC, shaking his legs because of the acid, when he saw Sergeant O fire.

51.263 Private R also described this incident in his written statement to this Inquiry.¹ Although he no longer remembered the make or colour of the car, he said that he had seen Sergeant O firing at a gunman behind a car, and that he had seen the gunman fall, and a group of civilians taking him away. Private R initially told us that he did not now recall how close he had been to Sergeant O when this firing took place.² Later in his evidence,³ he said that Sergeant O was probably only four or five feet away. Private R believed that he had been at the back of the APC, but was not sure whether Sergeant O had been at the back or the front. As we have noted above,⁴ Private R told us that his present recollection was that he saw Sergeant O firing before he, Private R, was hit by acid bombs.⁵

⁵ Day 337/148

³ Day 337/126-128

- 51.264 It seems clear that this evidence relates to the first of the three incidents in which Sergeant O said that he opened fire. Private R did not describe either of the two later incidents.

Private T

- 51.265 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T recorded that at one point Sergeant O shouted “There’s one over there behind the wall” and fired across the car park. Private T stated that he thought that Sergeant O had fired two or three shots. In Private T’s oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² he said that Sergeant O fired two or possibly three shots in the direction of the flats. Private T said that he did not know where Sergeant O meant by “over there”. Private T also said that he could not see into the car park. When Sergeant O fired, he was standing at the back of his APC about three feet away from Private T.

Private T and acid bombs

The account of his firing given by Private T to the Royal Military Police

- 51.266 In his RMP account,¹ Private T stated that after assisting in making arrests he moved back to Sergeant O’s APC. He became aware of people on the balconies of the flats dropping bottles and other missiles onto the soldiers’ position:

“I noticed that the bottles contained a liquid and I thought they were petrol bombs. However, none of the bottles was alight and none went on fire when they smashed. After a couple had broken as they fell I smelt a strong acid smell and realised that the bottles contained acid.

[Sergeant] ‘O’ was behind me and told me to fire at whoever was dropping the acid bombs if I saw him about to throw any more. One of the bottles bounced very close to me and broke. I was splashed with the liquid in the bottle. It covered the front of my trousers from the waist to the knee. I saw that it had been dropped from a balcony almost directly above me. This balcony was some 20 to 30 feet above me. I saw a man step back from the edge of the balcony as I looked up.

I continued to watch the balcony and saw the man again come to the front edge of the balcony. I could see that he had a white shirt on with a blue tie and jacket. I saw that he had a bottle in his hand and, as I watched, the man threw the bottle at me.

I then fired one round from my SLR at the man. I came to the aim after he drew his arm back and fired as he let go of the bottle. I did not see the result of the shot. The man seemed to freeze and I then fired a second shot at him. This did not hit him.

The man went away from the balcony and no more acid bombs were thrown at us. Also, after I fired, there were no more bottles or stones dropped or thrown at us from the balconies of the Flats.”

Private T's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about his firing

51.267 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T recorded that after hearing a burst of low velocity gunfire, he took cover behind Sergeant O's APC. He was watching the windows of the flats on his right to keep a lookout for anyone intending to fire at the soldiers. Bottles started to be thrown from this part of the flats. He noticed that one in particular contained liquid. He thought that it was a petrol bomb but it did not explode. After a few more bottles had been thrown in his direction, he noticed a distinctive smell, which he recognised from experience in the Falls Road in Belfast as the smell of acid. Until this point he had not seen any of those who were throwing bottles containing acid. Sergeant O told him to open fire if he saw anyone throwing acid from the flats. A bottle broke very close to him and splashed his trousers up to the waist. He was sure that the bottle had come from one of the balconies very close to his position. He then saw the man who had thrown it go back into the flats. He waited for him to come out again. The man was wearing a white shirt "with a dark suit and a tie the same colour". The man emerged again, came quickly to the wall of the balcony, and threw the bottle with a sideways movement of the arm. Before the bottle hit the ground, Private T fired an aimed shot at the man. The man was standing by a pillar, apparently waiting to see where the bottle would land, when Private T fired a second aimed shot at him, which "hit the wall a few feet above his head". The bottle landed very close to Private T at the back of the APC, and splashed him with acid. As a result of the shooting, the man disappeared.

51.268 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T said that when he moved to the back of the APC, he saw “quite a lot of rubbish coming out of the window – stones, bottles, anything that could be thrown”. He noticed that one of the bottles had a substance inside it. He thought that it was a petrol bomb but it did not explode. A bottle then landed very close to him “on the other side of an armoured door” and after a time he noticed an acidic smell. He recognised the smell from school, and from previous experience of acid bombs in Belfast. He had not yet seen any of the people who were throwing missiles.

51.269 Private T said that Sergeant O had also noticed the smell.¹ Private T told him that the acid had come from the flats. Sergeant O said that if anyone else threw acid bombs at the soldiers, Private T was to shoot him. Another bottle then landed quite close to Private T and covered him with acid from the waist downwards. After it had been thrown, he saw the man who had thrown it, who was beside a pillar on a balcony about three storeys up. The man was wearing a white shirt “with a dark-coloured jacket ... I presumed it to be a suit – with a tie the same colour”. The man threw another bottle, which landed very close to Private T and splashed him. Private T fired at the man when he had just thrown the bottle and seemed to be waiting to see where it landed. It was an aimed shot fired from a standing position over the back of the APC. Private T saw that his shot had missed, and fired a second shot at the man, but the man had stepped back and the second shot hit “the roof of the building”. Private T did not see the man come out again. He said that the liquid in the bottles was greenish in colour.² It was the same colour as the liquid in the acid bombs that he had seen in Belfast, which had been found lying in a crate. He said that he did not see any window cleaning liquid being thrown.

Private T’s evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about the effect of the liquid with which he was splashed

51.270 As to the effect of the liquid, in his RMP account,¹ Private T stated that very soon after his trousers had been splashed, he felt a tingling on his legs. Other soldiers poured water onto his legs. He changed his trousers and soaked them in water. Before signing this statement at 0200 hours on 31st January 1972, he had passed the trousers to Warrant Officer Class I Wood of the Special Investigation Branch of the Royal Military Police.

51.271 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T gave a similar account, although he referred only to a tingling in one leg. He said that Sergeant O had told him that he should pour water onto his trousers to weaken the acid, and then change them.

¹ B736

51.272 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T said that the only place in which he felt anything after he had been splashed was in a cut above his left knee, into which the liquid began to seep. As soon as the main shooting had died down, he wet his denims with water from a water carrier on the side of Sergeant O's APC. He said that he did not consider that he had been seriously injured.²

51.273 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T recorded that when he left the area of the Rossville Flats he went to William Street to complete a form in relation to the arrest he had witnessed (which was the arrest of William John Doherty), and thereafter he rejoined his platoon.

Private T's use of his respirator

51.274 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Private T recorded that he put on his respirator while on a roof behind the sorting office, and that he warned members of his platoon who were standing by the Presbyterian church to do the same. He did not say for how long he wore his respirator.

² WT13.87

Private T's death before this Inquiry was established

51.275 As we have previously explained, Private T is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

Private T's Royal Military Police map and trajectory photograph

51.276 We reproduce below Private T's RMP map and trajectory photograph.¹

¹ B727

The third entry in the Loden List of Engagements

51.277 The third entry in the Loden List of Engagements is as follows:¹

51.278 This entry refers to a bomber on the “top floor of flats” who was apparently killed by a soldier. The grid references, plotted on the map below, which was prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families, show that the target was in or on Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, just to the north of the halfway point, while the soldier was in the car park, a little further to the north.¹

51.279 The reference in the list to a bomber on the “top floor of flats” contrasts with Private T’s RMP statement, in which he refers to the bomber being on a balcony “some 20 to 30 feet above me”.¹ In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Private T described his target as “about three storeys up”. Private T’s trajectory photograph showed a position on the fifth floor balcony of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

51.280 The entry in the list records that the bomber was “Apparently killed”. In his RMP statement, Private T recorded that he did not see the result of his first shot, although “The man seemed to freeze”; Private T then fired again but this shot did not hit his target.¹ In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private T recorded that after his first shot “The man stood by a pillar apparently waiting to see where the bottle would land when I fired the second aimed shot at him which hit the wall a few feet above his head”.² In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private T said that his first shot missed the target, and that his second struck the “roof of the building”.³

² B736

51.281 Private T was the only soldier of Mortar Platoon who claimed to have fired at a bomber up in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The grid references correspond roughly with the positions of the firer and the target according to the accounts given by Private T and his RMP map and trajectory photograph. However, Private T never claimed in those accounts either that his target was on the top floor or that he thought that he had killed the person at whom he had fired. Nevertheless it seems to us probable that this third entry does reflect what Private T told Major Loden. It may be that, out of bravado or for a similar reason, Private T claimed an apparent hit when giving his account to his Company Commander, but later after further thought withdrew this claim; or that Major Loden had mistakenly assumed that Private T had hit his target. It may also be that he told Major Loden (as he later told the Widgery Inquiry) that one of his shots hit the roof of the building, leading Major Loden to suppose that the target was on the top floor.

Other evidence relating to acid bombs and Private T's accounts

51.282 Sergeant O said that he heard, and Private R that he saw, Private T firing. Private Q gave an account of firing into Block 1 of the Rossville Flats by a soldier who may have been Private T. In the following section we deal with the accounts of these witnesses, and of others who did not claim to have seen or heard Private T firing, but whose evidence relates to the throwing of acid bombs at the soldiers.

Evidence from Mortar Platoon soldiers

Lieutenant N

51.283 In his written account for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N stated that when he reached Sergeant O's vehicle it was reported to him that two men had been hit by acid bombs. Perhaps two minutes later, he saw two soldiers whose clothes had been affected by acid burns. One had some physical discomfort but neither was in serious pain.

¹ B399

51.284 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that he was told that the acid bombs had come from the flats. He saw one of the soldiers concerned gingerly holding the front of his trousers away from his legs because the acid on the trousers was stinging him.

51.285 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N told us that either just before or just after he had fired at a suspected nail bomber, two of his men walked towards him in a northerly direction from the point he had marked F on a plan² (the east side of Block 1).

One of them, who was being led by the other, appeared to have had acid thrown over him. There were “little holes with jagged edges down the front of his gear”. Lieutenant N thought that the acid had burned through to the skin. It was not uncommon for battery acid to be thrown. Lieutenant N was not surprised to see that one of his men had been burned.

51.286 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N accepted that he must have seen the men affected by acid after he had reached Sergeant O's vehicle, since that is what he said in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry. He said that he had a “very clear picture” of seeing the two soldiers.²

² Day 323/110-111

Sergeant O

51.287 In his first RMP statement,¹ Sergeant O recorded that while in the area of the car park, he and his section had several acid bombs thrown at them.

51.288 In his third RMP statement,¹ Sergeant O said that he saw a man wearing a white shirt, dark tie and suit jacket on a balcony on about the second floor of Block 1. The man appeared at intervals and on each occasion dropped a bottle onto members of Sergeant O's section below him. When the first bottle broke, about three or four feet from Sergeant O and almost on top of Private T, Sergeant O smelled acid. He ordered Private T to shoot at the man should he throw another acid bomb. Shortly afterwards, the man reappeared and threw another bottle. Sergeant O shouted a warning to Private T and heard him fire two shots. Sergeant O did not see the strikes of these shots. No further acid bombs were thrown.

¹ B464

51.289 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O gave a similar account, adding that acid from the first bomb splashed Private T. He placed the episode chronologically between his engagement of his second gunman and his engagement of his third gunman.

¹ B468

51.290 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that he smelled acid, and an acid bomb had apparently already been thrown, before he saw the bomb that splashed Private T on the legs. He also said that at the same time as Private T fired he heard the breaking of a bottle. He said that acid bombs could be distinguished by their “creamy colour”, and that the bottles containing the acid always had screw tops.

51.291 In Sergeant O’s first Praxis interview¹ he said that Private R was hit by acid dropped from the top of the Rossville Flats. Sergeant O told Private T to “watch and shoot” at the acid bomber. Private T watched and fired two rounds in return. “Colonel Wilford turned up and said what’s happening. I told him about that, and I says we’ve got one bloke up on the roof firing acid bombs, he said have you returned fire, I says we fired two rounds back, there’ve been no hits. He says OK no more unless he drops more bombs, which he didn’t do.” The soldiers then had to remove Private R’s denims and pour water onto him.

51.292 In his second Praxis interview,¹ Sergeant O said that Private T was not splashed with acid but “fired at the man that got splashed with acid”. It would seem that he meant to say that Private T fired at the acid bomber but was not the soldier who was hit by the acid.

51.293 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us that before he saw an acid bomb himself, Private T had told him that acid bombs had been thrown, and had splashed Private T’s and Private R’s legs. The man wearing a white shirt and dark tie who threw an acid bomb had been on the second or possibly third balcony up in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, as illustrated on a photograph attached to his statement.² The acid bomb landed in the gap between Sergeant O’s APC and Block 1. Sergeant O did not see it land, but “heard the distinctive bang and spread of vapour”. In his experience, acid bombs usually consisted of a screw top bottle containing a creamy or light yellow mixture of acid and paint, with a pungent and disgusting smell. He stated that he did not now recall seeing more than one acid bomb being thrown, or shouting a warning to Private T, but that his memory of the incident is likely to have been clearer when he made his third RMP statement.³ On the other hand, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Sergeant O said that it was possible that his third RMP statement contained information related by other soldiers as to the number of acid bombs thrown.

³ B575.124

⁴ Day 335/88

51.294 Sergeant O also told us that after he had fired at his third gunman, Colonel Wilford appeared and asked him what had happened. Sergeant O gave him a quick description and told him about his order to Private T to fire at the acid bomber. Colonel Wilford reminded Sergeant O about following the Yellow Card, and Sergeant O “confirmed to him what I had done”. Sergeant O told us that Colonel Wilford seemed satisfied with what he had been told and left.¹

51.295 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that Colonel Wilford had come up and asked for a quick snapshot of what had happened. Sergeant O told him that the soldiers had come under fire and returned fire, and as far as he knew they had some hits. Sergeant O told Colonel Wilford that acid bombs had been thrown at the soldiers from Block 2,² and that he had told one of the men to fire back. He did not tell Colonel Wilford which soldier this was. Colonel Wilford told Sergeant O not to forget the Yellow Card. Sergeant O told Colonel Wilford that he had ordered the soldier to fire, and “I was quite happy with that and he seemed quite happy with it”.

² This may have been a slip of the tongue for Block 1.

51.296 While Colonel Wilford did not refer specifically to a conversation with Sergeant O, he said in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry¹ that before he joined Major Loden he spoke to one or two soldiers near a vehicle who said that there had been shooting from the flats. He also said that at the stage when he spoke to Major Loden he heard that acid bombs had been thrown at the soldiers, as he took it, from the top of the Rossville Flats.²

51.297 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Colonel Wilford said that he met Major Loden at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and asked him what the situation was. Colonel Wilford could no longer remember the detail of what Major Loden had told him, but noted from his own oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that Major Loden had said, among other things, that there had been acid attacks. Colonel Wilford said that he could not remember any Platoon Commanders or Sergeants being present, although they might well have been. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry Colonel Wilford was not asked about the conversation that Sergeant O had said that he had had with him.

51.298 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Peter Taylor commented on a passage in the transcript of his notebooks.² As elucidated by him, this note meant that one of his sources had described how Colonel Wilford had arrived and asked the source how things were going. The source said, and Colonel Wilford agreed, that everything was under control. Either the source or Colonel Wilford then said “don’t fire until [you] can definitely identify acid bomber”. Peter Taylor refused to confirm that his source was Sergeant O, but in a letter dated 13th November 2002 Sergeant O’s solicitor said that his client accepted that the majority of the notes in the relevant section of the transcript³ related to Peter Taylor’s interview of him.

² M76.195

51.299 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us that when he was at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats after things had calmed down, he was able to check exactly what had happened to Private R and Private T. Both had acid on their legs. He believed that the hairs on Private R’s legs had been burned off by the acid. Several soldiers including Sergeant O removed Private R’s trousers because they were “steaming”, and threw water onto him. Sergeant O could not remember how badly the acid had affected Private T.

51.300 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O was asked whether he accepted that Private T’s firing was not in accordance with the Yellow Card. He replied that he took responsibility for having ordered Private T to fire, and that as far as he was concerned Private T had to fire because his life was in danger.

Private Q

51.301 In his RMP account,¹ Private Q stated that when he moved to the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, people were dropping bottles from “various verandahs”. Private Q saw that the majority of the bottles contained a liquid, and noticed “an acid smell” from the bottles when they broke.

¹ B624

51.302 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Private Q said that he saw the bottles landing by Sergeant O’s APC. When they broke, he saw liquid coming from them and recognised the smell of acid. One of the soldiers taking cover behind the APC had acid on his trousers.

² WT12.87

51.303 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that one or two acid bombs were thrown from a balcony in the Rossville Flats. They landed somewhere in the area marked D on a plan attached to the statement² (near the north end of the east side of Block 1). "I did not see the bombs being thrown and I did not see them land. I just saw the reaction to them from the men in the area." He saw Private T jumping about, having been splashed by the acid, and he smelled the acid.

51.304 Later in this statement,¹ Private Q told us that he could not now remember seeing bottles falling from the Rossville Flats, but believed his RMP statement to be accurate. He did not now remember seeing the acid bombs being dropped, but recalled the smell of acid and "seeing T hit by acid".

51.305 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private Q was challenged about whether he had seen the acid bombs landing, as he had said in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, or whether he had not seen them being thrown or landing, as he had said in his written statement to this Inquiry. At first, he said that he "saw them" and "saw the acid incident". When pressed further, he said that he "just cannot recall it". He maintained that he had seen Private T with acid on his trousers, and said that he did not know why he had not mentioned this in his RMP statement.

51.306 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that when he was at the north-east corner of Block 1 he saw a soldier fire from beside Sergeant O's APC at the "western" (presumably a mistake for "eastern") side of Block 1. He confirmed this in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he said that he did not remember seeing Private T fire, and could not say whether this firing had occurred at the same time as the acid bombs were thrown or later.

¹ B637

³ Day 339/45-48

² WT12.90

Private R

51.307 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private R recorded that the rioters threw acid bombs, one of which splattered across his legs. In his second RMP statement,² he recorded that two acid bombs were thrown at him from the top of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Both struck his legs, causing staining to his denims.

² B666

51.308 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R recorded that the acid bombs were dropped from the “middle floor” of Block 1 above him, just after he had fired his first shot at a man who was throwing a smoking object. The first acid bomb was a bottle that hit the ground about a yard from Private R. The acid splashed onto his trousers. Sergeant O shouted something like “that’s acid, look out” and Private R stepped back. Then a second bomb came down and Private R was splashed again. As this bomb was thrown, Private R saw another member of the platoon take aim and fire at the bomber. He thought that this was Private T. After this, according to Private R,² Sergeant O engaged the man who was firing a pistol from behind a maroon Cortina (his first target). Private R clarified and corrected³ his first RMP statement, saying that he did not see anyone throwing acid bombs from ground level, that the bombs were thrown or dropped from above, and that he thought that acid from both bombs had hit him, not from just one. He recorded that the mistakes in his first RMP statement were due to the conditions in which it was taken.⁴

⁴ B672

51.309 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that after he had fired his first shot, an acid bomb came down from the centre of Block 1 and “struck me across the leg”. He stepped back for cover. Sergeant O gave a warning that it was acid. Private T turned round and took aim. Another acid bomb came down. Private R was again splashed on the leg by acid. Private R told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen Private T fire. He was asked whether he was struck by the bottle or its contents when “the acid bomb” hit him,² and replied that the bottle had smashed perhaps a yard away, and the liquid had splashed up onto him. The liquid had come into contact with his skin. He was asked from where “that acid bomb” had come, and said that he thought that it had come from the centre of Block 2 (but we consider he must have meant Block 1), about 30 to 35 feet from the APC. He said that he estimated that Private T had fired two rounds.³ Private T had fired at a man holding an object, presumed to be an acid bomb, who was on the “middle floor” or “half-way up the actual flats itself, the second storey”. The man’s position was on

“the opposite side of this house, the end house, these flats”, which presumably meant that he was opposite the south end of Chamberlain Street. Private R at first said that Sergeant O had ordered Private T to fire, and then said that Sergeant O had told Private T that he was entitled to fire at the man if he emerged again.

² WT13.81-WT13.82

51.310 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he believed that some of the bottles thrown from the Rossville Flats into the car park were acid bombs, because two of them smashed near him and acid splashed onto his denim trousers. Within a few seconds, there were holes in his denims and he felt a burning sensation on the skin of his legs. He and Private T took cover behind the APC. Private R stated that during the incident in which he fired at a man firing a pistol from between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats (his second target) Sergeant O appeared at the back of the APC to check whether he and Private T were all right.² At this stage the acid was still eating away at his denims. According to this account³ he no longer remembered Sergeant O giving a warning about the acid, or Private T taking aim or firing at the acid bomber.

² B691.004

51.311 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he no longer remembered Sergeant O telling Private T that he would be entitled to shoot the acid bomber. He also said that when he made his first RMP statement he had believed that he was splashed by acid from only one bomb, but that he thought that later on someone had told him that he had been splashed by acid from two.² He could not remember who had told him this. He therefore came to believe that he had been splashed by acid from two bombs. He could not say this “exactly from my own knowledge”, although he accepted that in evidence later than his first RMP statement he had given the impression that it was his personal recollection that he had been splashed by acid from two bombs.

51.312 Later in his oral evidence,¹ as we have already noted, Private R said that he now believed that Sergeant O fired at the man behind the Cortina (his first target) before Private R fired at the man firing a pistol from between Blocks 2 and 3 (his second target), and that only after that were the acid bombs thrown. However, he said that he was “still not quite sure” about the sequence of events.

51.313 In his second RMP statement,¹ Private R had recorded that after he had been splashed with acid, the driver of Sergeant O's APC threw water over him, which saved him from being burned. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² he explained that this did not happen immediately. Initially his denims had kept most of the acid off his legs, but by the time he had fired at his second target, his legs were beginning to burn and tingle. He moved to the gable end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, where someone splashed his legs with water from one of the jerricans in the APC.

51.314 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that the water was provided by "One of the drivers" at a time when "the rest of the vehicles were starting to pull away". He said that after he was splashed by acid he had to wait four or five minutes for the water.²

51.315 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he went to the back of Major Loden's vehicle to be treated for the burns to his legs. He dropped his trousers and saw that the tops of his thighs and the lower parts of both legs were red and sore, but there were no blisters. Someone opened a jerrican of water to wash his legs and soak his denims. Someone also gave him some long johns to wear. He told a reporter about the acid. The reporter asked whether he was all right and offered him a sweet. The acid burned the hair off his legs, which never grew back. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private R said that the reporter was English. We have been unable to identify this reporter.

² Day 337/56

51.316 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he left the area in Sergeant O's APC. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² he said that he did not think that he needed to go to hospital, but he went to the Medical Inspection (MI) room on the following day to see whether he could be given some treatment. However, by that stage any treatment would have been too late, because he had already lost quite a lot of hair from his legs. Private R told us that he had since developed sweat gland fatigue, a condition that makes him unable to sweat enough.³ He did not say in specific terms that this condition had been caused by the acid, but that seems to have been the implication. He stated that he was fully fit before the acid incident and that he believed that it was as a result of the effects of the acid that he had gone "from being a grade A1 soldier to a grade 7".

² WT13.86

51.317 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 005 had told us that he saw Private R afterwards in Belfast. Private R did not say that he had been the victim of an acid bomb attack or that his clothes had been burned. However, there was some talk after the event to the effect that acid bombs had been thrown from the Rossville Flats. Private R was asked about what Private 005 had told us. Private R admitted to having been a good friend of Private 005, but told this Inquiry that he had no recollection of recounting the incident at all, except when making his statement.²

² Day 337/117-118

Private S

51.318 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private S gave an account of nail and acid bombs being thrown from the top of the Rossville Flats at the soldiers who were making arrests, and in his second RMP statement² he recorded that while he was at the back of 34 Chamberlain Street he saw people throwing nail bombs and acid bombs from the balconies of Block 1.

51.319 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private S recorded that he saw acid bombs and a hail of bottles being thrown at the soldiers from the upper part of the Rossville Flats. However, it was “not really correct” to say that nail bombs were thrown as well. He stated specifically that acid bombs were being thrown from Block 1 during the incident in which he opened fire.²

² B708

51.320 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private S said that “a hail of bottles with acid in them, Windolene bottles, more or less every kind of bottles” descended towards Sergeant O’s APC. He said that he knew that some of the bottles were acid bombs because “One of our men got one”.² He also said that he was aware that there were bottles coming from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats “because they were falling short of me”.³ He was not suggesting that he saw anyone on the roof of Block 1.

² WT13.4

51.321 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private S told us that he did not now remember any acid bombs or other objects being thrown from the Rossville Flats into the car park, but might simply have forgotten about them.

51.322 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ he was asked whether it had been accurate to say in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen acid bombs and a hail of bottles from the upper part of the Rossville Flats. He replied: “I would say ‘a hail of bottles’ would be more of a truthful description now, I would say. But, again, I have no recollection of that.” He said that he had not seen any nail bombs or acid bombs.² Although he had no recollection of how the inaccuracy arose, it was a “fair assumption” that the RMP had told him to say that nail bombs had been thrown. However, as noted above, while in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he had withdrawn his claim to have seen nail bombs, he had in that statement repeated his claim to have seen acid bombs. We have also recorded earlier³ that we have found nothing to suggest that the RMP had told him to say these things.

² Day 332/36-41; Day 332/82

Private U

51.323 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private U told us that he saw bottles and stones being thrown from a high level in Block 1. He was told later that there was acid in some of the bottles, but he did not see the acid himself.

Lance Corporal V

51.324 In his RMP statement,¹ Lance Corporal V recorded that after he disembarked, rioters threw petrol and acid bombs. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² he withdrew this claim in relation to petrol bombs, but not in relation to acid bombs.

51.325 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V recorded that by the time he reached the entrance to the car park, bottles containing liquid were being thrown from Block 1. He stated that after he had fired at a man who had thrown a petrol bomb, he moved behind Private S, who was standing at the corner of the buildings at the end of Chamberlain Street, returning fire towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2.² At this stage bottles were still coming down from the flats.

51.326 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that when he moved behind Private S there was “still bottling going on from Block 1”. The bottling was heavy. The bottles were landing by Sergeant O’s APC and by Lance Corporal V and Private S. He did not say whether they contained liquid.

51.327 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V told us only that he had a recollection of “lots of debris and missiles” being thrown down from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at the APC.

51.328 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V said that although he did not recall why he had said in his RMP statement that rioters threw petrol bombs after he disembarked, he could suggest the following possible explanation: “Maybe it was my perception at the time that there were petrol and acid bombs thrown, but later on, on reflection, there was only one petrol bomb thrown in my sight, and so ‘bombs’ would have been inaccurate, I was trying to make it accurate; that is all I can offer you.” He said that he would not have told a lie to the RMP or tried to justify the soldiers’ firing by giving the impression that they had come under a hail of acid and petrol bombs. It is not entirely clear whether in offering this explanation Lance Corporal V was either assuming or accepting that he had not seen any acid bombs being thrown after he disembarked, or at any later stage, but on the whole we consider that what he said was probably intended only to refer to petrol bombs.

51.329 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 006 told us that he saw Private T standing on the driver’s side of Sergeant O’s vehicle. Private T had acid on his legs. His legs looked wet. Private 006 did not remember Private T being in pain. Private T did not say where he had been or “what he had done to get the acid on him”, although Private 006 was told that the acid had been thrown from the flats. Private S put water over Private T, which he had obtained from Lieutenant N’s vehicle. Private 006 could not remember whether he had seen this happen.

51.330 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 006 said that Private T had told him that he (Private T) had acid on his legs. Private 006 was fairly sure that Private T had said that the acid had been thrown from the flats. Private 006 could not remember whether Private T had been in pain, but said that he must have been in some distress in order to realise that the liquid was acid.

51.331 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 013 recorded that he saw people throwing bottles and acid bombs from a balcony in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

¹ B1406

51.332 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 013 told us that he could remember missiles being thrown from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He also told us that he remembered having to cut Private T's boot off in an APC. Something thrown from the Rossville Flats had landed on Private T's foot and there was liquid all over the boot. The soldiers did not know what the liquid was but thought that it might be acid. In fact it was probably urine. Private 013 was not with Private T when the liquid was thrown.

51.333 According to a note of Neil Davies, one of the Praxis interviewers,¹ a soldier told him that it had been necessary for him to cut off Private T's trousers, which had been covered in acid from an acid bomb, and that "Loads of acid bombs" had been thrown at the soldiers. For reasons given earlier in this report,² it seems to us that this soldier was Private 019.

² Paragraphs 30.58–69

51.334 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 019 said that at one stage he saw Private T and Private R. Someone was cutting off Private T's denims. Private 019 was not sure who this was. Private 019 thought that Private T had been hit by some sort of substance, and that he had asked whether Private T needed any help.

51.335 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 019 said that he had not cut off Private T's trousers. He said that he had seen someone cutting them off and so had assumed that they had been hit by a substance.² He did not know anything about the substance.

Private 112

51.336 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 112 told us that he had seen Private R with his uniform in tatters. It seemed to him that Private R had been struck by an acid bomb. Private 112 did not remember seeing Private R being struck, and could not remember where he had been when he saw Private R.

Lance Corporal INQ 768

51.337 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal INQ 768 told us that he did not remember seeing any objects thrown from the flats, nor did he recall any of the other soldiers being splashed with acid.

Private INQ 1579

51.338 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1579 said that after he disembarked he became aware of the smell of acid bombs. He knew that the denims of one soldier were burned, but could not recall the identity of the soldier. He thought that he had seen the soldier, and not just heard about him. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he was asked whether he had seen any acid bombs splashing or exploding, and said that he had seen the result in the form of the burns on the soldier's clothing. He was asked where he had seen this,³ and said that he thought that he had been "in the area to the rear of the Pig". However, he said that he could not recall whether he had seen it in the immediate aftermath of the operation or later in the evening.⁴

⁴ Day 336/203-204

Private INQ 1918

51.339 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1918 told us that bottles of battery acid were thrown from one of the buildings. He recalled that Private R was screaming because his legs had been splashed with acid. Soldiers including Private INQ 1918 rolled Private R in a puddle to dilute the acid, and then cut his denims off. Private INQ 1918 was not sure who else was present or involved in helping Private R.

51.340 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1918 was asked whether an aerial photograph of the Rossville Flats helped him to identify the building from which the bottles of acid were thrown. He replied: “No, all this is doing for me is making me wonder if I have imported this from another operation.” He said that he had a recollection of Private R being rolled in a puddle, and of cutting off his denims, but he then accepted that it was possible that he had not been involved in the incident and had learned about it from other members of his platoon.

Evidence from other soldiers

Captain 028

51.341 Captain 028 was a Royal Artillery officer. He recorded in his RMP statement¹ that he met two soldiers whose clothes bore acid burns at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

¹ B1568

51.342 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ he recorded that he saw two soldiers lying on the ground. He was told that acid had been thrown at them. He could see acid burns on their trousers. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² he said that the two soldiers were lying on the ground leaning against Block 1. An officer told him that someone had thrown an acid bomb on them. In his evidence to this Inquiry, he told us that he did not remember the soldiers with the acid burns.³

Lance Corporal 033

51.343 Lance Corporal 033 was a member of Support Company and was one of Major Loden's signallers. In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 033 told us that he saw Private T on the ground with his back against the north wall of Block 1, complaining quite loudly of having had acid thrown at him. Lance Corporal 033 saw that Private T's trousers were damaged. A couple of other soldiers were looking after Private T. Lance Corporal 033 did not know how badly Private T had been burned. Water was poured over Private T's leg. Lance Corporal 033 gave his water bottle either to Private T or to someone else to pour over Private T. He added that he was sure that he had told the RMP about seeing Private T after acid had been thrown on him,² although the matter is not mentioned in his RMP statement.³

² B1621.009

51.344 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 033 said that he had a very confident recollection that at the time when he saw Private T, both military and other firing was continuing, with shots being fired maybe every one or two seconds.

Captain 219

51.345 Captain 219 was the Medical Officer attached to 1 PARA. In his RMP statement,¹ he recorded that while in the area of the Rossville Flats he treated a paratrooper for acid burns. He later withdrew from the area in his ambulance (which was a converted APC marked with a red cross) with an "injured paratrooper". It is not clear from this statement whether he was referring to the soldier with acid burns or another soldier who he recorded had concussed himself.²

² The latter was Private INQ 455, who fell when climbing into Abbey Taxis as described in our consideration of the events in Sector 1 (paragraph 17.9).

51.346 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 219 told us that he remembered treating a soldier for burns. He could no longer recall their cause but said that his RMP statement would be accurate. He could not remember the name of the soldier. An acid burn would have been significant. If the burns had been significant the soldier would have been withdrawn in the ambulance and sent to hospital. However, he did not think that the soldier with the burns had been withdrawn in the ambulance. He thought it more likely that the "injured paratrooper" mentioned in his RMP statement was a soldier who was concussed as a result of a fall. Captain 219 would probably have seen the soldier with the burns again at a later stage but did not remember doing so. The usual treatment for an acid burn would be to remove any residual acid with saline fluid and apply a dressing. The fabric of the soldier's uniform around the area of the burn would have been cut.

51.347 Captain 219 also told us that all fit soldiers were classified as PULHEEMS 2.¹

51.348 This might drop to PULHEEMS 7 if the soldier became temporarily or permanently unfit. A drop to PULHEEMS 8 would lead automatically to discharge. For a soldier to drop to PULHEEMS 7 following a burn suggests that the burn was significant.¹ There is no evidence to suggest that Private T's PULHEEMS classification was changed as the result of acid burns.

51.349 Captain 219 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry.

Private INQ 290

51.350 Private INQ 290 was the driver of the Medical Officer's ambulance. In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ he told us that he recalled picking up a "corporal from support company" in the ambulance. The corporal came out of a derelict building, the location of which Private INQ 290 could not recall. The corporal was limping and cursing. The gist of his words was "they were ready for us". Private INQ 290 could not see his leg, but heard him say that he had been hit by an acid bomb. Private INQ 290 did not recall his name. The name of Private T meant nothing to him. Either an unidentified Lance Corporal or Sergeant INQ 2100 (UNK 324) looked over the soldier. Private INQ 290 said that acid bombs had not been encountered for a long time.

Lance Corporal INQ 366

51.351 Lance Corporal INQ 366 was Colonel Wilford's driver. In his evidence to this Inquiry he told us that he recalled hearing a radio message, on what he assumed was the battalion net, that someone in the Rossville Flats was throwing acid bombs.¹

Corporal INQ 444

51.352 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ this soldier, who at the time of Bloody Sunday was a member of C Company, 1 PARA, said that he saw someone on the roof of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats throw a bucket of liquid at some soldiers near an APC beneath the flats. He initially thought that water or excrement was being thrown, but then saw a couple of soldiers jumping about and other soldiers dousing their bodies with water, and so knew that it was acid. The person on the roof was at the point he marked as D on a plan² (the north end of Block 1).

Private INQ 449

51.354 Private INQ 449 was a member of Composite Platoon (Guinness Force) and went into the Bogside in one of the soft-sided lorries. In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ he told us that he heard a soldier shout a warning from near Columbcille Court to “watch for the acid and sugar from the roofs”. He stated that civilians frequently threw bottles of acid at the soldiers with sugar to make the acid stick. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that this could very well have been a warning about acid being thrown from the Rossville Flats, rather than in Columbcille Court.

Private INQ 1919

51.355 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1919, who was in Machine Gun Platoon, told us that he spoke to Private R and Private T when they were guarding a vehicle containing three bodies. He did not remember either soldier saying anything to him about acid having been thrown at them. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he was sure that Private R and Private T were the two soldiers to whom he had spoken. He could not remember whether he had seen any sign that either of them was in pain or discomfort.

² Day 296/21-23

Private INQ 2003

51.356 Private INQ 2003 was not present on Bloody Sunday.¹ His accounts, therefore, are necessarily at best second hand. In his interview with Paul Mahon on 16th November 1999,² Private INQ 2003 said that UNK 750 (a soldier the Inquiry has been unable to identify) had been badly injured in the face by an acid bomb. The injured soldier was about 18 years old and might have been the youngest of the soldiers. (In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Private R said that he was 18 years old and might well have been the youngest in his platoon.)

³ Day 337/76-77

² X1.41.76-77

51.357 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 2003 told us that Sergeant O had told him afterwards that he had been beside UNK 750 when they were both splashed with acid. Private INQ 2003 stated that he did not believe this and did not think that Sergeant O believed it either.

51.358 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 2003 said that he was not sure that it was Sergeant O who had told him about being splashed with acid. It could have been Private T. He thought that the substance was an irritant, but not acid, because acid would cause burns and "Most of what [Private] T had and Sergeant O had was rashes". He did not know whether UNK 750 had been present on Bloody Sunday. He said that the soldier who was hit by an acid bomb had been hit on the legs, not on the face.²

² Day 307/99-100

Lance Corporal INQ 2121

- 51.359 Lance Corporal INQ 2121 was a member of 8 Platoon, C Company, 1 PARA. In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ he told us that he heard radio traffic while in the battalion Medical Officer's vehicle from which he gathered that acid bombs had been thrown, but it was not clear whether the casualties were military or civilian. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry² he said that he heard this radio traffic while on his way into the Bogside.

² Day 369/212

- 51.360 In his supplementary written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal INQ 2121 identified himself as "Soldier Y" in an article by Toby Harnden published in the Daily Telegraph on 20th May 1999.² In that article, "Soldier Y" was quoted as saying that he and the Medical Officer had "picked up a couple of our boys who had minor wounds from acid bombs thrown by the rioters".

² L282

- 51.361 In his written account to us Lance Corporal INQ 2121 also stated that after he and the Medical Officer had disembarked, the Medical Officer spoke to another soldier. Lance Corporal INQ 2121 thought that the Medical Officer was trying to find out where the soldier was who had been injured by an acid bomb; and that the injured soldier might have been put into the Medical Officer's vehicle, but he was not sure about this.

- 51.362 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal INQ 2121 was asked whether he had any recollection of picking up two soldiers with minor wounds from acid bombs, and said that he did not. He recalled someone else being in the back of the vehicle apart from himself and the other escort, but could not say who it had been.

Warrant Officer Class I Wood

- 51.363 At the time of Bloody Sunday, Warrant Officer Class I Wood was serving in the Special Investigation Branch of the RMP and as such took some of the RMP statements of the soldiers. In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Warrant Officer Class I Wood told us that one of the soldiers told him in an interview that he had battery acid burns. Warrant Officer Class I Wood could see that the soldier's leg had been reddened by something corrosive, and believed that something had been thrown at the soldier, but was sceptical of the claim that it was battery acid. He could not believe that civilians would have decanted battery acid, and did not understand how the soldier could know that it was battery acid as opposed to any other type of acid.

51.364 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Warrant Officer Class I Wood implicitly confirmed that this soldier was Private T. He said that he believed that the soldier had been hit by acid, but could not see how the soldier knew that it was battery acid.

Evidence from civilians

Maureen Gerke

51.365 In her NICRA statement,¹ Maureen Barr (now Maureen Gerke) said that she saw acid being thrown at the soldiers from the Rossville Flats after one of the casualties had been shot.

51.366 In her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Maureen Gerke said that she had no recollection of acid being thrown from the roof of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. She would not have known whether acid was being thrown or not.

51.367 In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Maureen Gerke said that she could not remember anything being thrown from the flats on that day. However, she said that she must have believed that acid had been thrown when she made her NICRA statement.²

² Day 133/107-108

Thomas Wilson

51.368 In his NICRA statement,¹ Thomas Wilson said that someone in the Rossville Flats threw acid at a soldier who had taken up a defensive position after he had disembarked from the back of an APC in the car park. The bottle of acid hit the APC instead of the soldier. The soldier fired up at the flats. Thomas Wilson could not say whether the soldier fired a rifle or a baton gun, because another shot was fired at the same time and “a fellow who had been running away towards his flat was lying on the ground”.

51.369 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ which was unsigned but verified in his oral evidence,² Thomas Wilson told us that he saw about five or six bottles thrown over the side of Mura Place and Donagh Place from about the point he marked N on a plan³ (towards the north end of Block 1). There was glass everywhere. Thomas Wilson thought that it looked as though the bottles contained paint, but was told later by someone that they contained dilute acid. An APC “coming in towards the car park” was hit by a bottle. A soldier standing at the point he marked D on the plan (near the north-east corner of Block 1) pointed his rifle up to the flats above where the soldier was standing. Thomas Wilson believed that the soldier did this in response to the bottle throwing. He did not remember the soldier’s rifle being fired, but could not say that it was not fired. The soldier had adopted a firing position but did not appear to be aiming at anyone in particular. Thomas Wilson heard a shot while the soldier’s rifle was raised but thought that it might have been fired by someone else nearby. When the shot rang out a man dropped to the floor on the balcony of Mura Place in the area from which bottles were being thrown. Thomas Wilson did not know whether this man had been shot, and did not know who he was. Thomas Wilson said that the “fellow ... lying on the ground” described in his NICRA statement was the man who dropped to the floor on the balcony.⁴

⁴ AW19.9

51.370 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Thomas Wilson said that the bottles that he thought contained paint were white. He explained that the APC had stopped before it was hit by the bottle. It did not appear to him that the soldier who raised his rifle in response to the bottling had fired it. He did not think that the man who dropped down on the balcony was the man who had thrown the bottle at the APC. He thought that the man who dropped down was a journalist or photographer, as he believed that this man had a camera in his hand and had been taking pictures. As far as he recalled, those throwing the bottles were teenagers. He said again that he did not believe that he had seen the soldier fire.² He also said that the bottles were thrown from the second and/or third bays from the north end of the middle balcony of Block 1,³ as shown in the photograph below, which was taken on Bloody Sunday by Derrik Tucker Senior. He was asked whether he saw anyone on the top balcony and said “not really”.

Inquiry expert evidence

Dr Richard Shepherd

51.371 Dr Richard Shepherd, the independent pathologist who gave expert evidence to this Inquiry, commented generally on acid burns in one of his reports.¹

“I note the claims by Soldiers R & T and the comments made by the 1 Para Medical Officer in his original statement and in the single page of the recent statement for the Inquiry.

General Comments

The skin is a resilient material and it is designed to resist trauma of many kinds. While some areas of the skin are more resilient (palms of the hands etc) most of the skin has similar properties.

There are three factors that determine the effects of acid on skin.

1. The physico-chemical properties of the acid; ‘strong’ acids (eg hydrochloric acid or sulphuric acid) can cause severe burns to skin while ‘weak’ acids (eg acetic acid or citric acid) will have little or no effect.
2. The concentration of the acid; more concentrated acid solutions are more likely to cause damage to the skin than less concentrated ones.

3. The duration of contact of the acid with the skin; if the acid is 'strong' enough and concentrated enough to be the cause of damage then the longer the period of exposure the greater the damage to the skin will be.

Effects of exposure of the skin to acids

There may be no damage to the skin. If damage is caused then it may range from simple reddening to blistering and it may extend to the formation of deep 'ulcerated' areas.

Treatment

Initial first aid treatment for acid exposure is washing of the skin with large quantities of water to dilute and remove the acid. Any affected clothing should be removed as this will otherwise retain acid and prolong the period of burning.

If the burns are more severe then other measures, for instance the application of antiseptic creams, may be required. In the most severe cases admission to hospital for in-patient treatment and possibly skin grafting would be necessary.

Photography

It is impossible to determine if any marks would have remained after exposure to acid. Clearly any severe acid burns would have been visible for a long period and may even have resulting in scarring. Exposure that only caused reddening of the skin may have been visible for hours or days only and this type of injury does not have resulted [sic] in scarring. Any visible marks on the skin could, of course, have been photographed."

Medical records

51.372 In a letter to the Inquiry dated 16th March 2000, the Ministry of Defence stated that the medical records for Private R and Private T contain nothing that relates to or documents any injury sustained on Bloody Sunday.

Evidence from radio communications

51.373 The 1 PARA log¹ records a situation report given to Brigade HQ at 1700 hours, in which it was reported that two soldiers had suffered minor acid burns and were remaining with their companies.

51.374 The Brigade log¹ and the transcript of James Porter's recording of radio traffic on the Brigade net² record a casualty report from 1 PARA to Brigade HQ at 1706 hours, stating that two minor acid burn casualties had been treated by the battalion Medical Officer.

² W140 serial 567

51.375 The Brigade log¹ records a situation report given in relation to 1 PARA at 1743 hours, in which it was reported that two men were suffering from acid burns, and that the acid had been thrown from the Rossville Flats.

Conclusions on the evidence relating to acid bombs

51.376 From the evidence summarised above, we are sure that a number of bottles (it is not clear how many) containing some form of acid or other corrosive liquid were thrown down from a balcony of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. When the bottles broke on landing some of the liquid in the bottles splashed Private T and Private R on their trousers, which were slightly damaged. As was reported that afternoon to Brigade HQ, these soldiers sustained minor acid burns. Neither was in serious pain though one had some physical discomfort, according to Lieutenant N. Both had water poured over the splashes to counteract the effect of the liquid and changed their trousers; and one was treated by the 1 PARA Medical Officer. There is no evidence to support Private R's assertion that his later deterioration in fitness was attributable to being splashed with the liquid from the bottles, and it seems unlikely that minor acid burns would have had this effect.

51.377 We are also sure that Private T fired two shots at the man he believed (in our view correctly) was responsible for throwing the bottles. He did not believe that he had hit the man with either shot and there is no evidence to suggest that he did. We consider later in this report¹ whether one of the shots fired by Private T may have hit Patrick Brolly, though we can state at this stage that neither was he on a balcony and nor was he the man at whom Private T fired.

51.378 Private T fired these shots after being told by Sergeant O to fire if another acid bomb was thrown.

51.379 The Yellow Card¹ (which, as explained elsewhere in this report,² set out the circumstances in which soldiers were permitted to open fire) provided in Rule 6 that a warning had to be given before opening fire except in the circumstances described in Rules 13 and 14. Those rules were concerned respectively with firing at a person using or carrying a firearm, and with firing at a vehicle whose occupants had opened fire or thrown a bomb or were about to do so. “Firearm” was defined as including a grenade, nail bomb or gelignite-type bomb, but the definition was not extended to acid bombs. It follows that Private T, in firing without warning, was in breach of the Yellow Card.

51.380 Rule 12 of the Yellow Card permitted a soldier to fire after warning if “there is no other way to protect yourself or those whom it is your duty to protect from the danger of being killed or seriously injured”.

51.381 Sergeant O was asked how his order to Private T to shoot the acid bomber was consistent with the Yellow Card. His answer was:¹

“A. In my opinion Private T was in danger of his life. If an acid bomb had come off that roof, smashed on the head, he stood a good chance of either being blinded or dead. As far as I was concerned he was entitled to shoot at the man.”

51.382 We accept that both Sergeant O and Private T believed that acid bombs were being thrown down at the soldiers from a balcony in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Although in the event these caused only minor injuries, we accept that at the time Sergeant O was justified in his opinion that further such missiles could have caused serious injury, though we do not accept that acid bombs would be likely to cause fatal injuries. Sergeant O’s comment about an acid bomb hitting Private T’s head would apply to any bottle, whatever its contents, and would be unlikely to cause death if Private T was wearing a helmet.

51.383 In our view the failure to give a warning was not a technicality. The terms of Rules 13 and 14 of the Yellow Card suggest that firing without warning was permitted only in certain situations in which to give a warning was either impracticable, or undesirable, because the soldier was facing an imminent attack with a firearm or explosive device and thus any delay could lead to death or serious injury. Those considerations do not apply to a threat from a falling object which can be dodged. It is not unrealistic to think that a warning might have been an effective deterrent, the more so where the threat was less dangerous than gunfire, so that the assailant might not have realised unless warned that he was exposing himself to a danger of being killed. In our view there was a real possibility of ending the threat by giving a warning, so that it was a serious matter for Private T, without warning, to try to kill the man instead. Furthermore, we are not persuaded that Private T had no other way of protecting himself, by putting on his helmet (if he was not already wearing it), or moving to a safer position, or seeking to dodge any falling bottles. In these circumstances we do not accept that Sergeant O was entitled to assume that the condition stated in Rule 12 would be met and thus that Private T would be justified in firing.

- 51.384 On Private T's evidence, he fired his first shot either as the man released the bottle, or just after he had released it. He then fired a second shot at the man. Quite apart from the failure to give a warning and the matters to which we have referred in the previous paragraph, that second shot was in our view unjustified, since there was, once the acid bomb had been thrown, no further immediate danger from the man.

Summary of shots and targets	52.12

52.1 At this point we bring together our summaries of the shots and targets claimed by the soldiers of Mortar Platoon.

Soldiers from Lieutenant N's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Lieutenant N

52.2 According to Lieutenant N, he fired three shots up the Eden Place alleyway and ejected one round unfired. Then, after returning to his APC, he went forward to a position close to Pilot Row, fired at and believed he had hit in the thigh a man he described as about to throw a bomb, who was at the corner of the southernmost house on Chamberlain Street.

Private S

52.3 According to the accounts given by Private S, about five minutes after he reached a position near the back wall of the last but one house in Chamberlain Street and from that position, he fired four groups of three shots at a man who was firing a rifle in his direction from the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. He said that he believed he missed the man with his first group of shots but hit him when he fired his second group. Similarly, he said he believed he missed the man when he fired his third group of three shots but hit him when he fired his fourth group. His evidence was that there was a gap of about 30 seconds between each of his groups of shots, and that after he had fired each group of shots, the crowd came between him and the man he was seeking to shoot. He said he did not know whether on each occasion that he fired a group of shots, it was at the same man.

Lance Corporal V

52.4 On the basis of the evidence Lance Corporal V gave to the Widgery Inquiry and of his trajectory photograph, this soldier was near the fence across the southern edge of the Eden Place waste ground when he observed a man with a petrol bomb quite close to the end of Chamberlain Street. If the compiler of the RMP map correctly recorded on it what Lance Corporal V had told him, Lance Corporal V must have given an explanation to the RMP in which he placed his target further south, close to the low wall that ran along the back of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, and placed himself closer to the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses. The Loden List of Engagements puts Lance Corporal V and his target in similar positions to those shown on his RMP map.

- 52.5 Lance Corporal V gave differing accounts of the circumstances in which he fired at this man; in his first two accounts (his RMP statement and his statement to John Heritage) he said that he saw the man throw the petrol bomb and that it did not explode, after which he fired at the man. In his written statement for and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, he stated that it was only after he had fired that he realised that the man had thrown the petrol bomb. He insisted in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that his oral account to the Widgery Inquiry was to be preferred and that he had shot in accordance with the Yellow Card at a man who was posing a danger to life, though he agreed that he had shouted no warning. He believed that he had hit the man at whom he had fired.

Private Q

- 52.6 According to the accounts of Private Q, he was at the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats when he saw a man in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 throwing a number of objects, which Private Q believed were nail bombs, towards soldiers in the area of the houses at the end of Chamberlain Street. One exploded about ten yards from Sergeant O's APC. When the man reappeared and was about to throw again, Private Q fired a single shot at him. He said that he believed that he had hit the man in the chest and had killed him.

Corporal P and Private U

- 52.7 We consider these soldiers' accounts when dealing with the events of Sector 3.¹

Private R

- 52.8 According to the accounts of Private R, he ran to where Sergeant O's APC had stopped in the Rossville Flats car park, from where he saw a man about halfway down the eastern side of Block 1 with a fizzing or smoking object in his hand. He fired one shot at this man and believed that he had hit him in the shoulder. After acid bombs had been dropped near him he saw a man's hand with a pistol appear from the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. Private R fired three shots at this man but did not know whether he had hit him.

Soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier who disembarked in the Rossville Flats car park

Sergeant O

52.9 According to the accounts given by Sergeant O, while he was near his APC and soon after he had arrested William John Doherty, he fired three shots at a man holding a pistol who was behind a Cortina car on the south-east side of the car park; then three shots at a man holding an M1 carbine or similar weapon towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats; and finally two shots at a man holding an M1 carbine or similar weapon at ground level on the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3. He said he was sure he had hit his first two targets, but said he thought that he had not hit his third. He estimated the time between firing at his first target and firing at his third as about three to four minutes.

Private T

52.10 Private T said that, while close to Sergeant O's APC, he fired two shots towards a man he believed was throwing acid bombs down from a balcony of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, but did not hit him.

Order of evidence

52.11 The order in which we have dealt with the evidence of the soldiers above is based upon the convenience of taking first the soldiers from Lieutenant N's APC, then those who disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street, and finally those who disembarked from that APC in the car park.

Summary of shots and targets

52.12 On the basis of these accounts, leaving aside Corporal P and Private U, whose evidence we consider in the context of Sector 3, the soldiers of Mortar Platoon fired 32 shots, hitting three nail or blast bombers, one petrol bomber, one man with a pistol, and two or three men with rifles or carbines, while missing an acid bomber, and probably missing another man with a pistol and another man with a carbine. We set out below a map on which we have marked the positions, according to the accounts of the soldiers, of the targets that they said that they had, or thought they had, hit and the targets that they said that they had, or thought they had, missed.

 Targets the soldiers claim to have hit

- 1 Lieutenant N's target: man about to throw a bomb
- 2 Private S's target: man (or more than one man) with a rifle
- 3 Lance Corporal V's target: man with a petrol bomb (location based on Lance Corporal V's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry)
- 4 Private Q's target: man with nail bombs
- 5 Private R's target: man with fizzing or smoking object
- 6 Sergeant O's target: man with a pistol behind a Cortina
- 7 Sergeant O's target: man with a rifle on lower balcony of Block 3

 Targets the soldiers claim to have missed (or do not claim positively to have hit)

- 1 Private R's target: man with a pistol
- 2 Sergeant O's target: man with a rifle
- 3 Private T's target: man with acid bombs on Block 1 balcony

52.13

According to these accounts, therefore, the soldiers of Mortar Platoon hit seven or eight gunmen or bombers.

52.14 We should add at this point that there is no evidence to suggest that any other soldier fired in Sector 2. There is also no evidence to suggest that any soldier in Sector 2 fired more or fewer shots than he claimed to have done. Although the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers submitted that some of those shot in Sector 2 might have been hit by accident,¹ none of the soldiers except Private R admitted even the possibility that this could have been the case. Whether or not anyone was in fact hit by accident is a matter that we consider later in this report.²

53.1 Earlier in this report¹ we gave reasons for our view that there was no acceptable evidence of incoming fire in Sector 2 before the soldiers opened fire in that sector. We have already considered the evidence that Mortar Platoon soldiers and others gave in this regard, but despite repetition and for the sake of clarity we give here a resumé of the evidence of those who fired in Sector 2.

Lieutenant N

53.2 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that during the period in which he was occupied around Eden Place he was aware of firing, but that none of it affected him directly and he could not say exactly when it began or ceased. He did not say whether he thought that the fire was incoming or outgoing. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² he said that certain shots that he thought were fired at Army vehicles standing outside the Rossville Flats after bodies had been collected from the rubble barricade were the first that he had heard. For reasons given when discussing the events of Sector 3,³ we consider that no shots were fired at Army vehicles at that stage. In our view Lieutenant N wrongly identified the firing that he heard at that stage as non-military fire. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Lieutenant N said that he no longer recalled the shots fired at the vehicles after the collection of the bodies and had “no aural memory at all of that day”.

Lance Corporal V

53.3 In his written statement to the Widgery Inquiry, Lance Corporal V described hearing the sound of single shots and seeing bullets hit the ground to his right as he ran forward behind Private S.¹ He said in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that the fire that he heard as he ran behind Private S was high velocity rifle fire which he thought was coming from the passage between Blocks 1 and 2.² He also recorded in his Royal Military Police (RMP) statement that firing was taking place towards the soldiers from several positions with several types of weapon,³ and that firing from the “flats area” continued after he had shot at the man he said he had seen throw a petrol bomb;⁴ and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he said that at a late stage, when his squad commander was conducting an ammunition check, there was still occasional firing from the right side of the Rossville Flats.⁵

53.4 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal V described hearing a burst of automatic fire and seeing bullets hitting a wall between him and a soldier who was in front of him, which he thought had been directed at him from the area of the Rossville Flats.¹ His written statement to this Inquiry could mean that this occurred after his confrontation with a member of the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps and before he had fired at the man he claimed was a petrol bomber.²

53.5 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal V said that he could no longer recall hearing single shots or seeing bullets hitting the ground. He also said that he had no “clear-cut memory” of automatic fire hitting a wall and conceded that it was possible that his recollection of automatic fire (which he had not mentioned in 1972) might be at fault. However, he said: “there was a lot of fire coming at us and maybe I have only just remembered that bit.”¹

Private S

53.6 Private S gave an account to the Widgery Inquiry of being fired on as he and others disembarked from Lieutenant N’s APC. We have earlier¹ given our reasons for rejecting this account.

53.7 Private S gave an account to the RMP of seeing a gunman fire about six shots from a ground floor window of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at soldiers deployed around Sergeant O’s APC.¹ He told us that this account was untrue.² He also gave an account to the Widgery Inquiry of shouting to Sergeant O that the latter was under fire, but it is not clear from where this fire was said to be coming. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private S used the model of the Bogside to point out the direction from which the fire had come but it is impossible to tell from the transcript of his explanation which direction he was indicating.³

² Day 332/65-74

53.8 Private S also told the RMP that he thought that a man who was in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats had fired about four rifle shots towards him. Private S then saw that the man had a rifle and fired three shots at him. About 30 seconds later the crowd opened up and a man in the same position fired two shots towards him; and Private S fired three shots back. After another 30 seconds a man reappeared and fired another three shots and again Private S fired three shots at the man. After another 30 seconds a man reappeared and fired four shots and again Private S fired three shots at him. On this account, therefore, there were in all 13 incoming shots during this incident.¹

Private Q

53.9 According to the accounts that he gave in 1972, Private Q heard four or five low velocity shots when he reached the north end of the Rossville Flats about 45 seconds or a minute after he had disembarked from Lieutenant N's APC, but did not know where they had landed or where they had come from and was not aware of any firing directed at him or the other soldiers from Lieutenant N's APC.¹

The soldiers from Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier who disembarked in Rossville Street

Corporal P

53.10 Corporal P gave an account to the Widgery Inquiry of hearing two incoming high velocity shots when he reached the wall to the south of Kells Walk,¹ though there was no mention of this firing in either of his RMP statements.²

Private R

53.11 Private R gave several accounts of hearing high and low velocity shots from the flats area when he disembarked, when he was running to catch up with Sergeant O's APC and when he reached it.¹ In his written statement to this Inquiry, he described hearing what sounded like firing from an Armalite rifle or M1 carbine, a Thompson sub-machine gun and a starting pistol.²

- 53.12 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private R told us that high velocity fire still seemed to be coming from the Rossville Flats as he fired at a man who was throwing a smoking object.¹ He told us that at about that time there was a series of short bursts fired together, but he could not be sure that this was automatic fire. He told us he thought that incoming fire was continuing, although not at the same intensity, while he received treatment for acid burns.²

² B691.004

Private U

- 53.13 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private U gave an account of hearing automatic gunfire as Sergeant O's APC drove into the Bogside. He also gave accounts of seeing or hearing automatic low velocity shots as he moved towards the Rossville Flats after disembarking, as he was taking an arrested citizen back to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street and as he returned towards the Rossville Flats;² and low and high velocity shots after he had reached the north-west corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.³

² B767

- 53.14 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private U said that he could not remember whether he had heard fire between disembarking and the arrest of the civilian.¹ He also said that he thought that the first shots that he had heard after disembarking came from the area of Glenfada Park.² In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private U told us that he thought the first gunfire that he heard after disembarking came as he was escorting the arrested civilian.³ He no longer recalled seeing fire near Major Loden's vehicle (which is the fire that he said in 1972 that he saw as he returned to the area of the flats, having handed over the arrested civilian).⁴ He thought that the shots that he heard while he was at the north-west corner of Block 1 came from the car park, from "further south from there" and from Glenfada Park North.⁵ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private U said that he could not remember whether he was aware of gunfire at the time at which he made the arrest.⁶ He said that he recalled hearing gunfire as he moved to the north-west corner of Block 1⁷ (having said in his written statement to this Inquiry that he did not recall coming under fire at this stage⁸).

Sergeant O

53.15 In his first RMP statement Sergeant O said that after six arrests had been made, he heard shots. The firing came from four to five weapons of mixed calibre.¹ Sergeant O said that during the subsequent engagements he and his section were under constant small arms fire from several positions in the Rossville Flats area.²

² B441-442

53.16 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O said that the firing started after he had arrested a man and while he was following the arrestee back to the APC.¹ He described further incoming fire from the flats as he engaged his targets. The firing then slackened off and became sporadic.²

53.17 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O said that the firing from the Rossville Flats started after he had arrested a man and handed that man over to a senior non-commissioned officer. It was as Sergeant O returned to the vehicle that the firing started. He said that he had only heard riot guns being used before this firing occurred. The firing came from four or five positions and was of low velocity and, possibly, high velocity. He heard firing from paratroopers about ten seconds after the initial firing from the Rossville Flats.¹ He said that he thought that a total of 80 to 100 shots had been fired from the Rossville Flats and that this was the most intensive fire that he had experienced in Northern Ireland.²

53.18 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Sergeant O said that, after he had arrested a man and while his soldiers were carrying out other arrests, he heard about 20 to 30 rounds being fired from between three and five positions in the Rossville Flats. The fire was a mixture of high and low velocity.¹ Although he is recorded as having told Praxis Films Ltd that at one stage he had heard automatic fire,² he told us in his oral evidence that he did not remember saying this.³

² O22.59

53.19 As we have noted earlier in this report,¹ Sergeant O described in particular those he said he fired at, namely a man with a pistol firing from behind a vehicle on the south-east side of the car park, a man with what could have been an M1 carbine firing towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, and another man with a similar weapon who fired from ground level from the gap between Blocks 2 and 3.

53.20 Sergeant O described the firing incidents that took place while he was in the area of the Rossville Flats as only lasting between three and five minutes in all.¹

Private T

53.21 Private T gave accounts to the Widgery Inquiry of hearing low velocity firing coming from the car park after he disembarked,¹ and subsequently a lot of shooting of all types in the area.² After this had died down “we were just fired at in ones and twos”.³ In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private T said that he heard firing 30 to 45 seconds after disembarking and that this fire “could have been a burst of fire, or a semi-automatic rifle being fired very quickly”.⁴

Chapter 54: General summary and consideration of the evidence of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon in Sector 2

54.1 If the accounts of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon are taken at face value, their vehicles were fired on as they entered the Bogside; the soldiers from Lieutenant N's APC were fired on as they disembarked or soon afterwards; firing was directed towards soldiers soon after they disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and as they were conducting arrests; and soon after Sergeant O had arrested William John Doherty near to his APC in the car park, the soldiers came under substantial fire from a variety of firearms for some three to four minutes, as well as being subjected to an exploding nail bomb and a number of acid bombs. There were in addition unsuccessful attempts to throw two nail bombs and a petrol bomb.

54.2 On the basis of these accounts, as noted above,¹ Lieutenant N, Private Q and Private R shot three nail or blast bombers, Lance Corporal V shot one petrol bomber, Sergeant O shot one man with a pistol and Sergeant O and Private S shot two or three men with rifles or carbines. There was in addition an unsuccessful attempt by Private T to shoot an acid bomber, a probably unsuccessful attempt by Sergeant O to shoot another man with a carbine, and a probably unsuccessful attempt by Private R to shoot another man with a pistol. As we have already noted, in all the soldiers of Mortar Platoon fired 32 shots in Sector 2.

54.3 While two soldiers (Private R and Private T) sustained minor injuries from acid or a similar corrosive substance contained in bottles thrown down from a balcony of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, none of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon in Sector 2 sustained any injury from nail or blast bombs, or firearms, despite the fact that most of them were in close proximity to those they said were deploying these weapons and despite the substantial amount of incoming fire which some said they encountered. On the other hand, according to their accounts, the soldiers of Mortar Platoon were able to shoot seven or eight people in the area of the Rossville Flats car park, all of whom were armed with lethal weapons.

54.4 We have already concluded, for the reasons we have given,¹ that we have found no acceptable evidence that there was incoming fire before these soldiers opened fire or that a nail bomb exploded as described by Private Q.

54.5 Whether, and if so to what extent, reliance can be placed on the remaining accounts of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon in relation to the shots they themselves fired at people is a matter to which we return¹ after considering further evidence relating to Sector 2.

54.6 However, it is important to bear in mind at this stage that none of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon who fired in Sector 2 admitted either to shooting any of those who we are sure were hit by Army gunfire in Sector 2 (namely Jackie Duddy, Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley) or, except perhaps for Private R, that they could have hit any of them by accident or in the mistaken belief that they were doing something that justified them being shot. So far as Private R is concerned, while he told us that he believed that he had hit his intended target with his first shot, he appeared to accept that it was possible that this had hit someone else, though he denied the possibility that he had hit Jackie Duddy.¹ As to his subsequent shots, which he said he had fired at a gunman in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, he told us he could not say whether it was possible that he had hit someone near the low wall parallel to Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, and that if this had happened, he would not have seen it.²

54.7 It has not been suggested, nor is there any evidence to suggest, that any of the known casualties was armed with a lethal weapon or doing anything that could have justified any of them being shot. We consider below (and for the reasons there given reject) the submission made on behalf of the majority of the represented soldiers¹ that Margaret Deery and Michael Bradley might have been shot by paramilitary gunmen, but no such submission was made in respect of the others, who no-one disputed were hit by Army gunfire.

54.8 On the basis of the evidence of the firing soldiers, therefore, the shooting of Jackie Duddy, Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley remains wholly unexplained. To our minds it inevitably follows that this materially undermines the credibility of the accounts given by the soldiers who fired. The evidence of one or more of them must be significantly inaccurate and incomplete. The question of whether, in addition to the known identified gunshot casualties, the soldiers also shot people who have not been identified is considered later in this report.¹

- 55.1 As we have already indicated, in Sector 2 Jackie Duddy was killed by gunfire, while Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley were wounded by the same means. Patrick McDaid, Patrick Brolly and Pius McCarron were also injured, though whether by gunfire or otherwise was a matter of controversy.

Jackie Duddy

- 55.2 There is no doubt that Jackie Duddy was shot and mortally wounded in Sector 2. There is equally no doubt, and none has been expressed, that he was shot by a soldier.

Biographical details

- 55.3 Jackie Duddy's full name was John Francis Duddy. In the course of this Inquiry, witnesses usually referred to him as either Jackie or Jack Duddy. His family knew him as Jackie, and that is the name that we have used in this report.
- 55.4 Jackie Duddy was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He lived in Central Drive, Creggan, with his father, his five brothers, and eight of his nine sisters. His mother had died of leukaemia in 1968, aged 44 years. Jackie Duddy was employed as a weaver in the factory of Thomas French & Sons Ltd on the Springtown Industrial Estate. He was a keen and successful amateur boxer.¹

Prior movements

- 55.5 Jackie Duddy went on the march on Bloody Sunday with some of his friends. His brother Gerry Duddy and sister Kay Duddy recall him saying that he was going to listen to Bernadette Devlin speaking.¹

Medical and scientific evidence

- 55.6 An autopsy of the body of Jackie Duddy was conducted by Dr Derek Carson, then the Deputy State Pathologist for Northern Ireland,¹ on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital. Three other doctors and two Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) photographers were also present.² The notes, reports and photographs from this autopsy have been considered by Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, who were engaged by this Inquiry as independent experts on pathology and ballistics respectively. Dr Carson, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan, all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Carson also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

55.7 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Carson described the following two gunshot wounds:

1. A fairly neat circular hole, 7mm in diameter, on the outer side of the right shoulder, centred 4cm below the tip of the acromion process. This appeared to be an entrance wound. It was surrounded by a narrow rim of abrasion, 1–2mm wide. There was no appreciable bruising around the wound nor was there any blackening of the skin.
2. A somewhat ragged exit wound, measuring 18mm x 8mm, on the left front. This wound was located near the shoulder and centred 9cm to the left of and 2.5cm above the suprasternal notch, and 14cm above the nipple. The long axis of the wound was almost vertical. It lay within an irregular oval zone of abrasion measuring 32mm x 16mm, around which there was vague reddish-purple bruising within an area measuring 9cm x 4.5cm.

¹ D20

55.8 Dr Carson noted that, with the arm by the side, the two wounds lay in a line passing from right to left, forwards at about 20° to the coronal plane and downwards at about 10° to the horizontal plane. A probe could not be passed through the entrance wound in a direct line between the two, even when the arm was put in a variety of positions.

55.9 The internal injuries found by Dr Carson are described in his report.¹

55.10 Dr Carson summarised his conclusions about the fatal injury as follows:¹

“Death was due to a gunshot wound of the upper chest. The bullet had entered the outer part of the right shoulder and had passed behind the upper part of the arm bone and the right shoulder blade, notching the inner border of the shoulder blade, before passing through the inner end of the second right rib and the second thoracic vertebra. On striking the spine the bullet had been deflected slightly upwards and had then fractured the middle third of the left collar bone and the adjacent parts of the first and second left ribs before leaving the body through the upper part of the left chest. No bullet was recovered from the body.

In its course through the upper chest the bullet had damaged the upper part of each lung and divided the windpipe, the gullet and the left common carotid and subclavian arteries. Bleeding from the damaged blood vessels and lungs would have caused rapid death, whilst breathing would also have been severely impaired by the injury to the windpipe. Death must have occurred within a few minutes.

The extent of bony injury indicated that the bullet must have been fired from a medium or high velocity weapon but since the missile was not recovered it was not possible to determine the calibre. There was nothing to suggest that the weapon had been discharged at close range.

The track of the wound within the body indicated that after entering the body the bullet had first passed from right to left and slightly downwards until it struck the spine, whence it had been deflected slightly upwards and forwards. If the deceased was fully erect when struck, then the bullet must have come directly from his right and slightly above him.”

- 55.11 Dr Carson also described a number of minor external injuries.¹ His findings about these injuries were as follows:²

- 55.12 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his written statement to this Inquiry,² Dr Carson confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report.

² D536

- 55.13 In their report, Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan reached conclusions similar to those of Dr Carson, which they summarised as follows:¹

Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position the initial track clearly passed from right to left and there is probably a slight angle backwards. After deflection by the scapula the track passed forwards into the chest where it was again deflected this time by the spine. The greatest care must be exercised in interpreting the track angles in this injury since the mobility of the shoulder may allow for many different positions of the chest and body with the arm in the same position.

The other injuries are minor and due to blunt trauma. The injuries to the face and knee are consistent with a collapse, the injuries to the hand may have been caused in the same way but other forms of minor blunt trauma cannot be excluded.”

55.14 The photographs of Jackie Duddy's body taken in the mortuary show the wounds and other injuries described by Dr Carson. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan¹ illustrates the positions of the wounds.

55.15 Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of Jackie Duddy. In his report dated 18th February 1972¹ he set out the following findings:

“There is a small hole in the right shoulder area of the jacket (item 1). Traces of lead were detected on the edge of this hole which is consistent with a bullet entry. A larger hole in the area of the left chest is consistent with bullet exit. There was corresponding damage to the shirt (item 2).”

¹ D11

55.16 Dr Martin tested the jacket that Jackie Duddy was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. Apart from the traces of lead consistent with bullet entry around the hole in the right shoulder of the jacket, Dr Martin detected no significant number of lead particles on the jacket and none on the hand swabs. He concluded that Jackie Duddy had not been using a firearm.¹

¹ D11

55.17 Mr Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of Jackie Duddy for explosives residue. None was detected.¹

¹ D4

Where Jackie Duddy was shot

55.18 When discussing the first shots fired by Lieutenant N, we referred to the evidence of the photographer Gilles Peress, who was in Chamberlain Street. After that incident, Gilles Peress ran on to the end of Chamberlain Street.¹ As he told the Widgery Inquiry, he saw a body in what he described as Rossville Square (by which he meant what we call the car park) beside which was a priest waving a handkerchief.² He then took the following photograph.

55.19 Fulvio Grimaldi, the photojournalist, told the Widgery Inquiry that he arrived at the south end of Chamberlain Street and saw first aid men and priests around a body in the middle of the car park. He said that he watched them duck as they were being fired at from the direction of the Army vehicles; and that he went back to the corner of Chamberlain Street and shouted at the soldiers to stop firing. The shooting continued; the first three shots went over his head. Fulvio Grimaldi then approached the group around the body and took photographs.¹

In his evidence to this Inquiry, Fulvio Grimaldi said that his recollection was that shots were fired and he shouted at the soldiers before he saw the body.¹ He told Paul Mahon² that he had seen Jackie Duddy fall;³ Fulvio Grimaldi does not appear to have said this on any other occasion and in our view it is probably wrong. It appears from the Mahon transcript that Fulvio Grimaldi was having difficulty in recalling the sequence of events surrounding the shooting of Jackie Duddy. Fulvio Grimaldi took the following photographs of Jackie Duddy lying in the car park.

² Paul Mahon completed an academic dissertation on the events of Bloody Sunday in 1997 and thereafter undertook further substantial research into the subject, in the course of which he conducted a large number of recorded interviews of witnesses, the great majority of whom were civilians.

55.21 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Liam Bradley identified himself as the man shown wearing a cap in these photographs. In his written statement to this Inquiry, Charles Glenn, a Corporal in the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps, said that the first of these photographs showed the scene as he attended to Jackie Duddy. He can be recognised in this and the other two photographs by his Order of Malta Ambulance Corps uniform.²

55.22 It is possible, from the lines marking the car park bays, to see more or less exactly where Jackie Duddy was in the Rossville Flats car park when these photographs were taken. However, there is evidence that indicates that he was probably a little further north when he fell.

55.23 Fr Edward Daly (who later became Bishop Daly) is the priest shown in these photographs. In his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in an account given to Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times on 16th March 1972,² he said that he had been in Rossville Street between Eden Place and Pilot Row when he heard the Army vehicles and saw them coming towards Rossville Street. He ran with others across the Eden Place waste ground and past the western end of the wire fence. At about the corner of the Rossville Flats he passed a young boy, and shortly after that, when the boy was a few feet behind him, he heard a shot ring out, looked round, and saw the boy falling. Fr Daly's evidence was that Jackie Duddy fell forwards onto his face and, alluding to the car park markings, that he “actually fell on the ground on the cross-section of one of those lines – I think about the third or fourth one in. Again I could not swear to that, but it was in the middle of that diagram for the cars”.³

² H5.56-57

55.24 Fr Daly ran on, not realising that a live round had hit Jackie Duddy, and then lay on the ground for cover. After a time, he looked over his shoulder and saw Jackie Duddy lying on his back. Fr Daly then went to the aid of Jackie Duddy.¹ He did not appreciate that in the meantime a Mr Barber had come to Jackie Duddy’s aid, and until he discovered this Fr Daly was puzzled as to how Jackie Duddy had come to be lying on his back.²

² WT4.7; WT4.9

55.25 We are sure that the man to whom Fr Daly referred in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry was the late Willy Barber, who said in an interview with John Barry of the Sunday Times Insight Team that a young man (evidently Jackie Duddy) had been running on his left and suddenly fell forwards. Willy Barber and someone else put their arms under his shoulders and tried to drag him along, but found him very heavy and turned him over.¹

55.26 Brian Johnston told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he saw Jackie Duddy fall forwards onto his face at a point that he indicated on a photograph as being near the centre of the line separating the third and fourth parking bays in the row of seven closest to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, counting from the end closer to the waste ground.² Brian Johnston said that after he fell, Jackie Duddy’s head was pointing towards the south-east corner of the car park of the Rossville Flats and his feet were pointing towards Rossville Street.³

² AJ9.8

55.27 The Inquiry experts Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan noted in their report that Jackie Duddy sustained a number of minor injuries to the face (predominantly on the left side) and the front of the left knee, consistent with a collapse.¹ This in turn is consistent with the evidence that Jackie Duddy fell forwards.

55.28 On the evidence of these witnesses we are sure that Jackie Duddy was shot and fell on his face as he was moving in a generally southerly direction, probably somewhere around the centre of the row of seven parking bays closest to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and that his body was then dragged a short distance further on and turned over, so as to arrive in the position in which it is seen in the photographs shown above. We set out below an aerial photograph of the Rossville Flats, showing on the basis of this evidence where Jackie Duddy fell and where he was when the photographs were taken.

-  Point to which Jackie Duddy was moved

Where Jackie Duddy had come from

55.29 According to the Sunday Times Insight article published on 23rd April 1972,¹ Neil McLaughlin, Jackie Duddy and others came along Chamberlain Street from William Street, and seeing the Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) drawn up in the car park surged towards it, “most if not all of them” on their way to the back of the car park. However, a note prepared by John Barry of the Sunday Times Insight Team of an interview with Neil McLaughlin does not explicitly record that the group going along Chamberlain Street and into the car park included Jackie Duddy, but only that it included Neil McLaughlin “and his mates”.²

² AM347.12-15

- 55.30 According to this note, while Neil McLaughlin was a “self-confessed aggro man”, he described Jackie Duddy as someone who usually went miles to avoid trouble. The note does not record Neil McLaughlin saying that Jackie Duddy was taking part in the riot at Barrier 14, and implies the contrary in the remark “If he wasn’t throwing stones, it was only because he was with Jack Duddy”, though in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ Neil McLaughlin admitted that he himself did throw stones.
- ¹ AM347.1
- 55.31 Again according to this note, Neil McLaughlin said that the group of which he was part surged towards the soldiers who were disembarking from their vehicle (evidently Sergeant O’s APC). He saw an Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer fall, not necessarily shot, “by the back wall of the C[hamberlain] St row – in other words the crowd running forward had just about cleared the gable end”; then Margaret Deery was shot on his right and Neil McLaughlin flung himself to the ground, after which he saw a crowd “up in the car park” clustered around another body; and then Michael Bridge ran past Neil McLaughlin and was shot.
- 55.32 To our minds this evidence suggests that Neil McLaughlin’s group was active in the area around the gable end and side wall of the garden of 36 Chamberlain Street, rather than in the area where Jackie Duddy was shot; and that if (as seems to us to be the case) Jackie Duddy was the person around whose body a crowd was clustered in the car park, he must have parted company with Neil McLaughlin some time before he was shot.
- 55.33 Neil McLaughlin’s evidence to this Inquiry was that he now had no recollection of seeing Jackie Duddy at all on Bloody Sunday, either before or after he was shot, although he accepted that it was possible that he had done so.¹ He took issue with, or said that he had no recollection of, several matters recorded in John Barry’s note.² However, we are of the view that John Barry’s note is likely to be an accurate account of what he was told by Neil McLaughlin.

² Day 91/16-37

55.34 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Kevin Leonard told us that he recalled seeing Jackie Duddy throwing stones in the group of people rioting with him at Barrier 14, and that Jackie Duddy was ahead of him when they ran down Chamberlain Street. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, he accepted that this was all presumption on his part:²

“Q. It seems to be the case that when you saw a person shot in the courtyard of the flats you did not appreciate that it was Jackie Duddy?

A. No, not at the time.

Q. Is it the case, really, that you presumed that because this person was shot in a group ahead of you running across the courtyard, he must have run from Chamberlain Street?

A. That is correct.

Q. You presumed also, then, that if he was running along Chamberlain Street, as you had, he must have been in William Street near the barrier as you had?

A. Yes.

Q. And therefore you presumed, effectively, that he was at the barrier in the group throwing stones?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Really you cannot be sure that Jackie Duddy was in this group throwing stones at the barrier, is that fair?

A. Yes, that is a fair comment to say.”

² Day 201/20-21

55.35 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick McKeever told us that he and his friend Joseph McGrory were in a group of four or five people running from the south end of Chamberlain Street towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. A young man (evidently Jackie Duddy) was running in the group, and fell in front of Patrick McKeever and to his right, clearly fatally injured. Joseph McGrory gave a similar account in his written statement to this Inquiry,² but added that he did not recall whether the young man had been running as part of a group or on his own; and in oral evidence³ he said that people were scrambling in all directions and he would never have known from where the young man had come.

55.36 There is other evidence that suggests that Jackie Duddy may not have come down Chamberlain Street. We set out below, with some changes and additions, what we regard as an accurate summary of this evidence prepared by Counsel to the Inquiry:¹

- (a) In his written statement to this Inquiry² (see also his interview with Jimmy McGovern^{3,4}), Gerry Duddy said that he spoke to his brother Jackie at about the point marked C on the plan attached to his statement⁵ (on Rossville Street near the north end of Kells Walk). His brother told him that he had been up by the Army barrier in William Street. After a few minutes, his brother said that he was heading off, crossed Rossville Street and started to walk across the waste ground in the direction of the Rossville Flats. Subsequently the Army vehicles entered the area from Little James Street.
- (b) In her Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) statement,⁶ Isabella Duffy described coming out of her brother's flat in the Rossville Flats and seeing the arrival of the Army vehicles and the disembarkation of the soldiers. She said that she saw a little boy (in our view Jackie Duddy) running across the car park of the Rossville Flats "from the direction of the soldiers". She saw the soldiers shooting, and initially thought that they were firing baton rounds, but then saw the boy fall, apparently dead. In her statement to the Widgery Inquiry,⁷ she said that the boy was running away from the soldiers. In her oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, she said that her brother's flat was on the second floor of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.^{8,9} She told the Widgery Inquiry¹⁰ that the boy was coming "from the Saracens". In her statement to this Inquiry,¹¹ she said that she saw Jackie Duddy running in from the entrance to the car park, and that he seemed to be at the tail end of the people who had run down William Street (sic) towards the Rossville Flats.
- (c) In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹² Brian Johnston said that Jackie Duddy had run from the waste ground by Pilot Row into the car park of the Rossville Flats, at the tail end of a small group.

⁹ Isabella Duffy gave us a different description of the location of her brother's flat (AD158.1). However, we are sure that the brother in question was the late Patrick Friel, since Isabella Duffy referred to him as Pat Friel (AD158.1), and Patrick Friel's son John Patrick Friel told us that Isabella Duffy was his aunt (AF32.25). Patrick Friel's address was 19 Garvan Place (AF38.1; AF38.3), which was at the western end and on the second and third floors of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.

¹² AJ9.5

55.37 It will be seen from the foregoing that there is conflicting evidence as to whether Jackie Duddy had come into the car park from the southern end of Chamberlain Street or from the Eden Place waste ground. On the whole we consider the latter the more likely. In this regard, although Fr Daly told us that he did not know where Jackie Duddy had come from when he saw him,¹ his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry was to the effect that he remembered the young boy running beside him: "I was running and he was running and looking back, and I overtook him. He laughed at me. He was amused to see me running." There was then this passage:²

"LORD WIDGERY: But you overtook him?

A. Yes. I am not an athlete myself. I do not think I am a very graceful runner. He looked at me at this point about the corner of the wire. That is why he stuck in my memory. I went in here and the Saracens came right up this way, and I remember that the first shot I heard, this young boy was about a few feet behind me and there was a shot, and simultaneously he gasped or grunted – something like that. I looked round and he just fell."

55.38 We are sure that Fr Daly had come, as he said, from Rossville Street, somewhere between Eden Place and Pilot Row. The wire to which he referred in this passage was in our view the wire fence across the southern edge of the Eden Place waste ground, which Fr Daly must have passed at its western end. To our minds this account by Fr Daly is another indication that Jackie Duddy had come into the car park from the same general direction, rather than from the end of Chamberlain Street.

When Jackie Duddy was shot

55.39 Fr Daly has consistently stated that the shot that hit Jackie Duddy was the first shot that he heard after the soldiers entered the Bogside.¹ As already noted, he did not realise at first that what he had heard was a live round as opposed to a baton round, though he did say to us: *"I thought the shot was a bit sharp for that of a rubber bullet gun."*² Fr Daly told us that he did not recall hearing any reports of baton rounds before Jackie Duddy was shot. It is also clear from Fr Daly's evidence that Jackie Duddy was shot soon after the soldiers arrived.³

² WT4.7

55.40 Brian Johnston, to whose evidence we have referred earlier in this chapter,¹ gave a Keville interview² in which he described seeing Jackie Duddy fall about four to five feet to his right; and went over to lift him up. He said: “... I know that up until this stage there were no guns fired at all.”

² AJ9.12

55.41 We have discussed earlier in this report¹ the circumstances of the arrest of William John Doherty by Sergeant O near the back wall of the Chamberlain Street houses, which from the evidence we have considered in that context was soon after Sergeant O's APC had arrived in the car park. We now describe the evidence of a number of civilian witnesses whose accounts seem to us to show that Jackie Duddy was shot at the same time as, or immediately after, this incident.

55.42 We have referred above¹ to John Barry's note of his interview of Willy Barber. According to this note, Willy Barber said that he ran past a paratrooper who was trying to beat hell out of an old man with the barrel of his rifle. He turned at “the Chamberlain St gable” and saw someone thumping the soldier in the face. This enabled the old man to run off, but the soldier apprehended him again. Willy Barber ran, and a young man running beside him fell.² It seems to us that the “old man” was William John Doherty, and from Willy Barber's account of then trying to move the fallen man, which we have considered above, we are sure that this was Jackie Duddy.

55.43 We have also referred above¹ to the evidence of Isabella Duffy when considering the direction from which Jackie Duddy had come. In her NICRA statement, Isabella Duffy said that after she had seen a boy fall in the car park of the Rossville Flats she saw an old man being beaten.² In our view she was referring to Jackie Duddy and William John Doherty respectively.

55.44 Elizabeth Dunleavy told us that she saw the shooting of Jackie Duddy after she had seen three soldiers beating a “boy” (who may well have been William John Doherty) and after a “boy” in Order of Malta Ambulance Corps uniform had been hit by a baton round (perhaps Charles Glenn, although if so Elizabeth Dunleavy appears to have been mistaken as to how he was hurt).¹ Her NICRA statement² does not refer to the beating, but places the other two incidents in the same sequence.

55.45 We have already referred¹ to some of the evidence of Charles Glenn, a Corporal in the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps, when considering the arrest of William John Doherty. As we have already noted, Charles Glenn described how he was hit with a rifle butt and knocked to the ground after trying to intervene in an incident in which a paratrooper had grabbed an old man, which we consider is likely to have been the arrest of William John Doherty. In his NICRA statement he recorded that as he fell, he heard a shot. He was stunned, but when he recovered, he saw a man lying in a pool of blood in the car park with Fr Daly bending over him.² We have no doubt this was Jackie Duddy. A similar account appears in the record of Charles Glenn's interview with Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times,³ and in his written statement to this Inquiry.⁴

⁴ AG43.3

55.46 Celine Brolly described to this Inquiry being in a flat on the second floor of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹ According to her NICRA statement,² she saw a “First Aid boy” running to the aid of a middle-aged man who was being punched and battered by three soldiers. The first aid boy was thrown on the ground. “He was still lying on the ground and Father Daly called him.” It seems from this statement that by then Fr Daly had gone to Jackie Duddy. We consider that this “First Aid boy” was Charles Glenn, who went to the aid of Jackie Duddy and can be seen beside him in the photographs shown earlier in this chapter.³

³ Paragraphs 55.18–20

² AB88.9

55.47 According to his NICRA statement¹ Patrick McCrudden was visiting a friend at 37 Donagh Place. This was on the top floor of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, at about the centre of that block. He gave an account of seeing the “saracens” come in, and continued:

“The people were fleeing in panic. While one soldier was attacking a middle-aged man, a member of the Order of Malta attempted to intervene. The soldier turned and struck this first aid man (dressed in the usual grey uniform) first with the butt of the rifle on both body and face and kicked him. The Order of Malta man collapsed and disappeared from view behind a wall. The middle aged man was arrested. Others were being beaten up and arrested in the same manner in different parts of the wasteground.

I glanced down into the courtyard and saw a man lying on the ground with dark red stains on his chest. Father Daly seemed to be attending to this man.”

55.48 In our view what Patrick McCrudden saw was Sergeant O arresting William John Doherty; Charles Glenn, the Corporal in the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps; and then Fr Daly attending Jackie Duddy.

Whether Jackie Duddy had anything in his hands

55.49 A number of witnesses said that Jackie Duddy had nothing in his hands. As to accounts given in 1972, Fr Daly said in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that when he reached Jackie Duddy there was nothing in his hands.¹ He also told the Widgery Inquiry that when he passed Jackie Duddy before he fell “he was not carrying anything that I saw in his hand”.² William McChrystal recorded in his NICRA statement that when he reached Jackie Duddy Fr Daly was kneeling over his body, and added: *“When I arrived at the youth’s side there was no evidence of any weapon, gun, nail-bomb, or stone.”*³ Patrick Gerard Doherty recorded in his NICRA statement⁴ that he saw Jackie Duddy fall, and that “He had nothing in his hands”.

55.50 In evidence to this Inquiry Cathleen O'Donnell,¹ Brian Ward,² Kevin Leonard³ and Isabella Duffy⁴ all told us that Jackie Duddy had nothing in his hands. 55.51 On the other hand, two witnesses gave evidence to the opposite effect.

55.52 In his Keville interview¹ Christy Lavery described seeing a man fall: “we had just got about three quarters the way across the flats when he fell, as he was falling I saw the blood spurting from his chest and I stopped and turned him over the blood was running out of him he had obviously been shot.” A little later in this interview he was asked whether any of the people he witnessed being shot or beaten were “armed with any stones or any guns or anything else?”. He replied: “The boy who was shot had a stone in his hand but he had no arms. When he fell his hand was facing up and there was a stone on it.”

55.53 Christy Lavery gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written evidence he told us that Jackie Duddy had a stone in his right hand.¹ In his oral evidence he first described the stone as “pretty small about tennis ball size”, but later as smaller, perhaps the size of a golf ball or large marble.²

² Day 85/72; Day 85/85

55.54 We have already referred to the evidence of Brian Johnston as to where Jackie Duddy fell, and to his account of what he then did.¹ In his written evidence to this Inquiry,² Brian Johnston told us that when he reached Jackie Duddy: “I saw the fellow’s right hand opening. Inside there was a pebble the size of a bead. I remember thinking ‘my God, did you think you were going to take on the might of the British Army with a pebble’.” He went on to state that he had since thought about it and believed that the pebble must have been scooped up into his hand as he fell. Brian Johnston said nothing about what Jackie Duddy had had in his hand in his interview with Kathleen Keville or in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.³

² AJ9.12; AJ9.10

55.55 On the basis of these accounts, we consider that Christy Lavery and Brian Johnston were the first to reach Jackie Duddy after he had fallen. Both gave accounts of seeing a stone in Jackie Duddy’s right hand. If they were right about this, that stone might well have fallen out of his hand as he was dragged a short distance, which would account for the fact that Fr Daly did not see it when he went to the body. Despite the other evidence to which we have referred above, we have concluded that Jackie Duddy probably did have a stone in his right hand when he was shot, though its size is uncertain.

What Jackie Duddy was doing when he was shot

55.56 Fr Daly¹ and a substantial number of other witnesses² described Jackie Duddy as running southwards when he was shot.

² Mary Bonner (AB38.2), Peter Gallagher (AG23.2), Bernard Gilmour (AG38.4), Kevin McDaid (AM167.3), James McGeehan (AM227.2), Joseph McGrory (AM268.2), Alexander McLaughlin (AM317.3), Martin Tucker (AT17.4) and Brian Ward (AW6.1).

55.57 However, in his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick Gerard Doherty told us that at the time he was shot Jackie Duddy was “standing shouting at the soldiers, he was not running away”. He also told us that he thought Jackie Duddy then fell on his back. When he gave oral evidence he was asked about this:²

“Q. When you said to us earlier ‘when they moved out of the way, I seen he was lying on his back’, does that mean that the other people that were in the car park surrounding him and between you possibly and him, that your view was somewhat obscured?

A. Yeah.

Q. I am not suggesting that when you – at some stage he was not on his back, he definitely ended up on his back?

A. (inaudible) when I seen him, he was lying on his back. I only presumed that he had fell to the –

Q. But I am suggesting the body of the evidence is when he was shot he fell on to his face, and after some time he was turned onto his back?

A. Most likely is.

Q. Which is not too far away from what you are saying, but I am suggesting that when you eventually got a clear sight of him lying on his back, it was that that led you to the conclusion that he must have been standing facing the soldiers when he was shot; could you be a bit mistaken about that?

A. Might have been, it has been a long time ago.”

² Day 85/27

55.58 Patrick Gerard Doherty said nothing in his NICRA statement about what Jackie Duddy was doing when he was shot.¹ In view of the large body of evidence to the effect that Jackie Duddy was running, we believe that Patrick Gerard Doherty was mistaken in his recollection on this point, as he acknowledged could be the case after so long. In our view Jackie Duddy was running away from the soldiers when he was shot.

Whether Jackie Duddy was in the middle of a hostile crowd

55.59 The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers referred to the evidence of Neil McLaughlin, to which we have referred above,¹ that having come down Chamberlain Street he and about 20 others advanced, throwing stones at the APC.² In reliance on that evidence they submitted:³

“It is therefore probable that Jack Duddy was accidentally hit at a time when he was among or close to a hostile crowd that was throwing objects at the soldiers, and when a soldier aimed at another person.”

² AM347.2; Day 91/53-54

55.60 We do not accept this submission. Apart from the fact that no soldier (save perhaps Private R) admitted even the possibility that he had hit anyone by accident, and all maintained that the people that they had hit had been engaged in activities that justified them being shot, the submission proceeds upon the assumption that Jackie Duddy had come down Chamberlain Street with Neil McLaughlin and others who had previously been rioting. For reasons we have given,¹ we are of the view that Jackie Duddy had probably come from the Eden Place waste ground. Furthermore, we accept Fr Daly’s evidence that Jackie Duddy was near him when he was shot and that, in that area of the car park at least, people were only trying to run away.²

² H5.18; H5.11-12; WT4.6; WT4.15; Day 75/25

55.61 Fr Daly told us that he was towards the rear of the crowd that ran through the car park of the Rossville Flats. He said that quite a number of people had been running close to him and Jackie Duddy.¹ He also gave evidence that a number of people had been running in the immediate vicinity of himself and Jackie Duddy at the time of the shooting, although he emphasised that he had not been counting heads; and that there were a substantial number (some 60 to 100) of panic-stricken and frightened people ahead of him trying to escape through the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.²

² WT4.8; H5.4; Day 75/85

55.62 Brian Johnston (to whom we have referred above¹) told us in his written statement to this Inquiry² that Jackie Duddy was running at the tail end of a small group, having become isolated and fallen a little behind. In his oral evidence he said that the group consisted only of Jackie Duddy, the priest (Fr Daly) and two or three others.³

² AJ9.5

55.63 Other witnesses, namely Angela Copp,¹ Kevin McDaid² and Martin Tucker,³ have also said that there were a few other people, but not very many, close to Jackie Duddy as he ran.

² AM167.3; Day 100/80-82

55.64 Although Jackie Duddy probably had a stone in his right hand when he was shot, we do not know whether he was about to throw it when he was shot. The medical evidence is that he was shot in the right shoulder, which indicates that at the moment of shooting his upper body was turned towards the soldiers from whom he was running, but it does not follow that he was about to throw the stone, as opposed to turning to see where the soldiers were.

Where Jackie Duddy was taken

55.65 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Fr Daly recorded that after he reached Jackie Duddy there was more gunfire, and he and Charles Glenn lay down beside Jackie Duddy. Fr Daly then described giving Jackie Duddy the last rites, and seeing the shooting of Michael Bridge while still lying beside Jackie Duddy. Fr Daly said that Willy Barber and another man crawled out sometime after Michael Bridge had been shot, and offered to help to carry Jackie Duddy to a position where he could receive medical aid. They suggested that Fr Daly should go in front, carrying a white handkerchief, and that they would carry Jackie Duddy behind him. Just as they were about to stand up and make a dash to Chamberlain Street, a gunman appeared at the wall of the last house in Chamberlain Street and (in an incident to which we return later in this report²) fired two or three shots at the soldiers. Fr Daly shouted at the gunman to go away, which he did. Fr Daly remained on the ground for a few more moments, and then rose onto his knees and was about to stand up when the Army opened fire again. He and the others with him lay down again for a while.

55.66 In his interview with Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times,¹ Fr Daly said that the scene of him and the others rising and then throwing themselves to the ground when firing broke out again was shown on CBS film footage broadcast in the United States.

55.67 However, the surviving CBS footage¹ shows only the next stage of events, in which Fr Daly, waving a bloodstained handkerchief, led the way as Willy Barber, Liam Bradley, Charles Glenn and William McChrystal carried Jackie Duddy out of the car park of the Rossville Flats to Chamberlain Street. This sequence also appears to show Fr Daly reacting to the sound of shooting, and in his oral evidence to us² he confirmed that there was “gunfire coming in, at that stage, again”. It must be borne in mind that this gunfire, or some or it, may have been that occurring in Sector 3, as we describe when dealing with the events of that sector.

² Day 75/40

55.68 Fulvio Grimaldi’s photograph also shows the group led by Fr Daly making their way across the car park.

55.69 Fr Daly said in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ that he and the group carrying Jackie Duddy went up Chamberlain Street and turned right into Harvey Street, where they were challenged by soldiers, and where they met the BBC reporter John Bierman and his camera crew.

55.70 These soldiers were from C Company, who had come through Barrier 14 in William Street. Later in this report¹ we discuss the actions of the soldiers of C Company in Chamberlain Street.

55.71 Fr Daly said in his interview with Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle¹ that a couple of shots were fired as he and those carrying Jackie Duddy moved up Chamberlain Street, but he did not know the source of that gunfire.

55.72 Hugh McMonagle told us in his written statement¹ that he joined the group led by Fr Daly at the south end of Chamberlain Street and helped to carry Jackie Duddy up the street. As they did this, Hugh McMonagle could hear shooting. He thought that shots were being fired south down Chamberlain Street over the heads of the group carrying Jackie Duddy. Having seen the BBC footage filmed by Cyril Cave,² he said that it showed a soldier at the corner of Chamberlain Street and Eden Place firing a shot from his midriff towards the south end of Chamberlain Street, at the time when Jackie Duddy was being carried up the street.

² Day 100/31-32; Vid 1 04.50

55.73 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Cyril Cave referred to the soldier who is seen in his film footage² in a doorway at the corner of Chamberlain Street and Eden Place. Cyril Cave said that this soldier shouted “Hold fire. They are bringing a casualty”, but that he had not actually seen any of the soldiers firing in Chamberlain Street. However, in his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Cyril Cave said that he thought that he had seen the soldier fire a shot down Chamberlain Street, and that about half a minute later he had heard a paratrooper shout “casualty coming!” and had seen Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy approaching. In his oral evidence⁴ Cyril Cave said that although he was not sure, he thought that it was possible that his footage showed the soldier in the doorway firing down Chamberlain Street.

² Vid 1 04.50

55.74 On the other hand, Cyril Cave's colleague John Bierman told us in his written statement¹ and in his oral evidence² that although the soldier in the doorway was in a firing position he did not fire his weapon. John Bierman also said³ that he heard a voice saying "Hold your fire" coming from south of the junction of Chamberlain Street and Eden Place, and he deduced that these were Fr Daly's words. In view of this we consider that Hugh McMonagle was mistaken in coming to believe that a soldier had fired down Chamberlain Street at this time and that Cyril Cave's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that he saw no soldier firing in Chamberlain Street is to be preferred to his later recollection. No soldier of C Company reported firing his rifle on Bloody Sunday and there is no other evidence to suggest that any of them did so.

55.75 Willy Barber said in his Sunday Times interview¹ that he temporarily left the group carrying Jackie Duddy because he had two baton rounds in his pocket and did not wish to be caught with them in the city centre, and that after relieving himself of the baton rounds he rejoined the group. Cyril Cave's footage² shows the group carrying Jackie Duddy as they approached and turned the corner of Harvey Street. Hugh McMonagle has taken the place of Willy Barber, who then runs forward and rejoins the group at the corner.

² Vid 1 04.50

55.76 James Dakin, a Daily Express staff photographer, took a photograph which shows the group carrying Jackie Duddy as they turned the corner into Harvey Street. A second photograph, taken by Frederick Hoare, a Belfast Telegraph staff photographer, and a third, taken by James Dakin, show the group moving up Harvey Street.

55.77 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Fr Daly said that the group proceeded up Harvey Street to the corner of Waterloo Street, where they laid Jackie Duddy on the ground, on Willy Barber's coat. Soldiers further down the street ordered them to clear off. A woman came out of a house and screamed at the soldiers that Jackie Duddy was only a child and that they had shot him. Another woman called an ambulance. People came out of the houses. Fr Daly and others knelt by Jackie Duddy and said a prayer. After a time the ambulance arrived.

55.78 It appears from Charles Glenn's NICRA statement¹ and from the record of his interview with Philip Jacobson² that when he arrived in Waterloo Street Charles Glenn checked Jackie Duddy's pulse and breathing and, finding no signs of life, concluded that he had died on the way to Waterloo Street. In his statement to this Inquiry³ Charles Glenn said that he thought that Jackie Duddy was already dead when he first reached him in the car park of the Rossville Flats, although he acknowledged that he was not qualified to make that assessment.

Margaret Deery

Biographical details

55.81 Margaret Deery, often known as Peggy Deery, was 38 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. She lived in Swilly Gardens, Creggan, with her 14 children, whose ages ranged from 16 years to 10 months. Her husband had died of cancer in October 1971, aged 37 years.¹

Prior movements

55.82 In her statement to the RUC,¹ Margaret Deery said that she had reached the Rossville Street area after being given a lift in a car from the Creggan to Great James Street and then walking down Little James Street. According to Philip Jacobson's notes of his interview of her,² Margaret Deery told him that she was "not really on the march" but had been "intending to look at the end part of the march". The car journey is not mentioned in these notes, and Margaret Deery did not say in either of her other accounts³ how she reached Rossville Street.

55.83 On the other hand, Margaret Deery's daughter Helen Deery told us in her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ and in an interview with Stephen Gargan of Gaslight Productions Ltd, the co-producer of Sunday, a drama-documentary first broadcast in 2002,² that she accompanied her mother on the march, together with two cousins and one of her mother's friends. Margaret Deery's son Owen Deery said in his written statement to this Inquiry³ that he had also been with his mother at the beginning of the march. Celine Brolly told us in her written statement⁴ and in her oral evidence⁵ that she saw Margaret Deery moving down the part of William Street east of the junction with Rossville Street towards Barrier 14.

⁴ AB88.5

55.84 The evidence of Helen Deery, Owen Deery and Celine Brolly satisfies us that Margaret Deery took part in the march on Bloody Sunday, and that the account that she gave to the RUC of how she came to be in the area of Rossville Street was untrue. However, we find it understandable that Margaret Deery should have been unwilling to admit that she had been on the march, since had she done so she might have been prosecuted and imprisoned for taking part in a prohibited public procession. Indeed, in her oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ Helen Deery told us that when her mother made her statement to the RUC,² she was afraid to say that she had been on the march in case she was charged. We consider that this is the reason why Margaret Deery lied to the RUC about how she reached the Rossville Street area, and apparently also to Philip Jacobson about whether she had been on the march. In these circumstances, we do not attach any significance to these lies in evaluating the remainder of Margaret Deery's evidence.

Medical evidence

55.85 Mr George Fenton, a consultant orthopaedic surgeon at Altnagelvin Hospital, gave the following description of injuries to Margaret Deery's left thigh in a letter to Detective Sergeant Cudmore of the RUC dated 7th February 1972:¹

"Admitted with gun shot wound thigh. Small entrance wound on front of thigh and very large exit wound on back of thigh. There was extensive damage to thigh muscles and comminuted fracture of femur."

55.86 In recovering from her injuries, Margaret Deery suffered serious complications. On the evening of Bloody Sunday, she underwent an operation at Altnagelvin Hospital, during which she received a transfusion of blood which was afterwards discovered to be rhesus incompatible. Following the transfusion, she developed acute renal failure and on 1st February 1972 was transferred to the renal unit at Belfast City Hospital. She became very ill and for a time it was thought that her leg might have to be amputated. Margaret Deery remained at Belfast City Hospital until 3rd March 1972. She was then transferred back to Altnagelvin Hospital, where she underwent further operations. She was eventually discharged on 29th May 1972.¹

55.87 Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, reviewed the medical records relating to the injuries sustained by those who received non-fatal gunshot wounds on Bloody Sunday. In their report on these cases,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan made the following comments about Margaret Deery's injuries:

"Peggy [Margaret] Deery is recorded to have had an 'extensive wound on the back of her left thigh' and a complex and compound fracture of the left femur. At operation a wound to the front of the lower left thigh was recorded as simply being present but the wound on the back of the lower left thigh was described as 'extensive'. The track of the wound is therefore more likely to be from front to back than the reverse. No comment can be made concerning the nature of the projectile."

Accounts given by Margaret Deery

55.88 Margaret Deery was in hospital while the Widgery Inquiry was sitting, and gave no oral evidence to that Inquiry. She died in 1988 and consequently gave no evidence to this Inquiry. However, she gave the following accounts:

1. a statement to the RUC dated 19th February 1972, when she was in Belfast City Hospital;¹
2. a statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 29th February 1972, which was taken and witnessed by a Belfast solicitor's apprentice;²
3. notes made by Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times Insight Team of an interview with her conducted on 29th February 1972;³ and
4. a note of her recollections made on 25th January 1983.⁴ We do not know who made this note.

³ AD33.1-2

⁴ AD33.6-7

55.89 According to her statement to the RUC, Margaret Deery had a conversation with Fr Daly at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street in which Fr Daly advised her to go wherever she was going because “there may be a lot of trouble”. Her statement continued:¹

“At this point there was no stone-throwing or trouble that I could see, but again I was in the middle of the main crowd. The Army then fired coloured dye and I ran like hell towards Rossville Street at the back of the High Flats. By this time my sister and I had got separated in the crowd. I was round the back of these high flats running towards the wee gate at the back of the flats whenever I tripped and fell. There were hundreds of people in this area running to get away from the Army who had driven into the back of the flats in Saracens. A man had fallen on top of me and he got up and ran around the corner. Whilst I was on the ground I was able to see the Army men in front of me and I saw and heard them shooting. I attempted to get up but I slipped and cut my head and nose. I then saw a soldier in front of me and he appeared to be taking aim at me and I then felt a blow to my left thigh. I called to a man to help me which he did and he took me to a house in Chamberlain Street where Mr. Slingwing the Chemist treated my wound. I was later taken to Altnagelvin Hospital by ambulance along with Michael Bridge. I’d like to say that I did not take part in the Civil Rights March although I was in the crowd at William Street. I am not a member of any organisation and have not attended any Civil Rights Meetings.”

55.90 Detective Sergeant Cudmore took this statement. In his report¹ he referred to a map on which Margaret Deery had marked her approximate position when she was shot. We are sure that that map is the following, which accompanied Detective Sergeant Cudmore’s report when that was passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

- 55.91 Margaret Deery's written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, dated 29th February 1972, was in the following terms:¹

"I am Mrs. Margaret Deery. I am a widow and I have 14 children. I live at [...].

On January 30 the soldiers were firing C.S. Gas. I ran from William Street, along Rossville Street to Chamberlain Street. Someone shouted that the soldiers were coming. I looked at the courtyard of Rossville Flats and saw 8 or 9 Saracens coming in. Soldiers jumped out of the Saracens. There was a man standing there. He seemed to be mesmerised. I ran towards this man. I told him that I thought that the soldiers looked as if they were going to shoot. I looked. I sa [sic] a soldier take aim and fire. He, the soldier who shot me, was only about 20 feet away from me. I was hit in the leg. I had absolutely nothing in my hands. I fell. I got up and fell down again. I hadn't realised I had been hit by a lead bullet. I didn't see anybody else fall down.

A man came to help me. The man pulled me round the corner. A young fellow I knew, Michael Kelly, helped the man to carry me into a house. The chemist, Otto Slingwing, bandaged up my leg. The ambulance came and took me to Altnagelvin. Micky Bridge was in the ambulance with me."

- 55.92 The note of Philip Jacobson's interview of Margaret Deery records her as saying:¹

"I was standing just out on the waste ground by eden street, actually it was where pilot row used to be and i heard a man nearby shout 'the army's coming in.' I looked over towards rossville street and there were the big pigs coming in and one headed over towards where we were. then i saw a soldier with the red para hat come up from the pig that was near us and he took aim I thought at me or the man standing next to me (she doesnt know who he was). I shouted to this chap 'for gods sake, watch out, that ones going to shoot' and as i moved towards the man, for protection like, i felt this big thump in my leg, in the thigh really. its funny, i never heard the bang. the soldier was not more than 25 yards, i could recognise him clearly if i saw him again. he was about your height (5' 10"), fatter than you (!) with a round fat face and a little dark of complexion, although he also had that black stuff streaked over his face.

I tried to get up, i didnt realise i was shot then, and i staggered forward and fell again and cut my eye open (deep cut over left eye). when i was down the second time i saw a chap suddenly fall and crawl away round the corner into chamberlain street. i thought he was shot, but then he came back round and him and Michael Kelly carried me round into chamberlain street.”

55.93 The note of Margaret Deery’s recollections made in 1983 includes the following passage:¹

“‘I’ll never forget his face. I can’t forget his face’ – Eleven years on, Peggy Deery, one of the survivors of Bloody Sunday, still remembers the Paratrooper who deliberately shot her from a range of less than 10 feet.

After the initial outburst of firing, Peggy and her friends had run in panic through the Rossville flats carpark and into Chamberlain Street. There she had seen a soldier lift his rifle and point it at her. She threw herself against a Mr Leo Deehan shouting ‘get down, he’s trying to kill us’, when she felt a terrific blow on her leg.

As she lay on the ground, unaware that she had been shot, she was trampled on by the fear-stricken crowd. She could hear someone calling, ‘that woman’s been shot’ and she remembers Michael Kelly and another man crawling towards her and dragging her into a house in Chamberlain Street. Michael Kelly was himself to be murdered less than 10 minutes later.”

Where Margaret Deery was shot

55.94 As will have been seen from her own statements, Margaret Deery gave conflicting accounts of where she was when she was shot. We do not find this surprising, as she had received a serious wound, as well as later suffering from the results of a transfusion of the wrong blood. According to the map on which she had indicated her approximate position for the RUC, Margaret Deery was about halfway between the corner of the back garden of the southernmost house on the west side of Chamberlain Street and the gap between Block 1 and Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, while in her RUC statement she appeared to be describing running towards “the wee gate at the back of the flats”. We do not know what Margaret Deery meant by this, though it is possible she meant one of the gaps between the blocks of the Rossville Flats. According to her written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, she was at Chamberlain Street looking at the courtyard of the Rossville

Flats. According to her interview with Philip Jacobson, she was standing “just out” on the waste ground, “where pilot row used to be”. According to the record of what she said in 1983, she was in Chamberlain Street.

55.95 There is, however, other evidence of where Margaret Deery was when she was shot.

55.96 According to her son Tony Deery, Margaret Deery told him that she had been shot “at the back of Chamberlain Street”.¹ Her daughter Helen Deery confirmed in oral evidence² that her mother had told her that she had been shot at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, but had not said where along the line of those houses. However, in the course of Helen Deery’s interview with Stephen Gargan,³ her sister Margie appears to have indicated that her mother was shot beside the back gate of the third house from the south end of Chamberlain Street.

² Day 77/83-85

55.97 There is a Sunday Times Insight Team note relating to Margaret Deery:¹

“bernard gallagher was standing very close to mrs deerey [sic] when she was hit. he places it as just out from the end gable of chamberlain street where a group of some 20 people were standing. this was the gable nearest the waste ground and mrs deery was standing on his right, nearer the waste ground. gallagher recalls she was instantly picked up by several men and whisked into 33 chamberlain street.”

55.98 The only witness called Bernard Gallagher known to us gave a NICRA statement and a written statement to this Inquiry,¹ but mentioned nothing about Margaret Deery. However, there is a Peter Gallagher who gave a written statement to this Inquiry² in which he described seeing a woman shot just beyond the end of the gable wall at the end of Chamberlain Street. In view of the close similarity between this position and that recorded in the Sunday Times note, it seems to us that he must have been the man who gave an account to the Sunday Times Insight Team. His NICRA statement,³ so far as it concerns Margaret Deery, records that he was at the gable house at the end of Chamberlain Street with a group of about 20 people when a girl (clearly Margaret Deery) was shot in the thigh beside him and immediately taken to the last house on the east side of Chamberlain Street. Peter Gallagher also gave oral evidence to this Inquiry.⁴ He told us that he was a chronic alcoholic; and although he maintained that this had not affected his memory of Bloody Sunday, we took the view that we should treat his evidence to us with caution and prefer to rely on the accounts that he gave in 1972.

55.99 The note of Margaret Deery's recollections made in 1983 refers to her seeing a soldier lift his rifle and point it at her, and throwing herself against a Leo Deehan, shouting to him to get down.

55.100 There is a handwritten statement signed by an L Deehan, which seems to us to be an account by the Leo Deehan to whom Margaret Deery referred.¹ We are not sure when this statement was made, but it was supplied to the Inquiry along with other material dating from 1972 and so is likely to have been made at that time. The Inquiry prepared a typed copy of the statement.²

55.101 According to this statement,¹ Leo Deehan was heading towards Free Derry Corner when there was a shout that the Army was coming:

"Suddenly a couple of Saracens appeared on the roadway racing towards the flats. All around me people were shouting and trying to hide or run towards the back of the flats. I followed but one of the Saracens headed right up on the waste ground. There was a big pool of water near the middle and I thought I saw a girl go down right in the path of the tank. I raced on. The Saracen seemed to be going one way then the other after people.

All of a sudden soldiers appeared some had helmets some none but I noticed they all carried rifles and not the usual shield & Baton.

I ran close to one tank to avoid being seen, as I got level a soldiers ran round from the other side. I ran at him and believe I pushed him more than punch him he staggered, and looked like losing his gun.

I ran on, I then saw one soldier beating and elderly man with the butt of his rifle. The old man fought gamely, he went down and the soldier tried to bash him with the rifle again. I had stopped and was edging back. I started to run towards the soldier shouting at him.

I saw another appear and raise his gun. He seem to point at me, I faltered and just then a woman ran across my path. She shouted he will shoot you and, I believe she pushed me, it was like a bad dream and I must have been all tensed up for I know I lost my balance. At that second I heard the same type of sharp shot I had heard earlier. It made me jump for it was much closer, and I just noticed the soldiers rifle move or something made me look at him, as I started to run in the opposite direction.

Then I heard a fellow close by calling she is shot. It was then I noticed the woman that had pushed me was lying on the ground bleeding. I thought she had been hit by a rubber bullet. I ran back and grabbed her and pulled her toward the cover of the wall. The fellow reached her and we two carried her across to Nelis's House on Chamberlain St."

55.102 In our view this account shows that Leo Deehan was in the area where William John Doherty was being arrested, ie at or close to the position described by Peter Gallagher.

55.103 We have also considered the evidence of a number of other witnesses in seeking to establish where Margaret Deery was shot.¹

¹ Neil McLaughlin (AM347.3; AM347.6; AM347.12-13; Day 91/10-11; Day 91/60), Patrick Gerard Doherty (AD96.2), Patrick Moore (AM417.4), Pascal Keys (AK36.1; AK36.5), George Nelis (AN9.9; AN9.21; Day 103/155-158), Gerry McBride (AM46.3; AM46.9; Day 79/76; Day 79/122-123) and James McDermott (AM185.4; AM185.5).

55.104 However, these witnesses either did not see Margaret Deery until after she had been picked up, or were uncertain about whether or not they had done so, or gave only an imprecise account of where she had fallen; though one of them, Brian McGee,¹ while he only saw Margaret Deery being carried, described what he saw in the following terms:

"A youngish looking woman, who looked to be about 18 or 20, was then carried around the gable end, close to where I was standing. She was being carried by two men, one of whom was holding her under her knees and the other was holding her by the shoulders."

55.105 This evidence indicates to us that Margaret Deery was shot, not on the very corner of the garden wall of the houses in Chamberlain Street, but at a point further to the north-east of that corner.

55.106 We have also considered the evidence of Charles McCarron,¹ who in a NICRA statement recorded seeing a woman shot in front of him as he was walking home along Chamberlain Street. His description of what then happened demonstrates that the woman was Margaret Deery, but in view of the other evidence discussed above, the location cannot in our view be right, unless by walking home along Chamberlain Street Charles McCarron meant walking along the backs of the Chamberlain Street houses facing the Eden Place waste ground, in which case his account would be consistent with the other evidence that Margaret Deery was in that area when she was shot.

⁴ Day 84/148

55.108 We conclude, on the basis of the material we have considered, that Margaret Deery was shot somewhere near the corner of the garden of 36 Chamberlain Street, probably a matter of feet to the north or north-east of that corner. This position is marked in red on the map below.

55.109 We note at this point that the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers observed in their submissions that:¹

“The fact that Mrs Deery managed to name three different people as being the man next to her when she was shot, is even more strange, as it will be recalled that she told the Sunday Times’ Insight Team that she ‘doesn’t know who he was’.”

55.110 The three different people to whom this submission referred were the man named in the Sunday Times note discussed above¹ as “Bernard Gallagher”, Billy Kelly and Leo Deehan.

55.111 As Counsel to the Inquiry pointed out,¹ this criticism of the accounts given by Margaret Deery is misconceived. Margaret Deery did not say that “Bernard Gallagher” was standing next to her. The note that contains his name² accompanies Philip Jacobson’s record of the account given by Margaret Deery,³ but it is clear from its terms that it is a note of information provided not by Margaret Deery but by “Bernard Gallagher” himself. As explained above, we believe that “Bernard Gallagher” was in fact Peter Gallagher. As to Billy Kelly, this name appears in a further note made by a Sunday Times journalist,⁴ which records Billy Kelly’s account of Margaret Deery rushing over and pushing him out of the way as a soldier was about to shoot him. As the journalist noted, “mrs deery puts it somewhat differently”. As to Leo Deehan, the fact that Margaret Deery gave this name in 1983 is in no way inconsistent with the fact that when she was in hospital in February 1972 she did not then know who the man was.

⁴ AD33.4

When Margaret Deery was shot

55.112 Margaret Deery herself, as can be seen from her accounts that we have set out above,¹ consistently stated that she had been shot after the Army vehicles had come into Sector 2 and soldiers had disembarked. Leo Deehan and Peter Gallagher gave evidence to the same effect, as did many of the other witnesses to whom we have referred. Peter Gallagher’s NICRA account² was in the following terms:

“From Harvey Street I could see a soldier at Quinn’s Lane, and Saracens in Rossville Street. The soldier was armed with a rifle which he was pointing in our direction. I panicked, and ran as fast as I could towards the flats. When I reached the end of Chamberlain Street I could hear rifle fire from the direction of Rossville Street. I headed for the kiosk at the junction of two blocks of flats. As I ran I saw one of the crowd in front fall. When I saw the blood on his chest I realised he had been shot, and ran back the way I had come to the gable-house at the end of Chamberlain Street, where about twenty other people were standing. As we tried to discover where the shooting was coming from and wich [sic] way to get away from it a girl was shot beside me. She had been shot in the back of the thigh, was picked up instantly and taken to the last house on the left hand side of Chamberlain Street (coming from William Street).”

55.113 In our view, Peter Gallagher witnessed the shooting of Jackie Duddy, followed quite soon by Margaret Deery falling from a gunshot wound in the thigh. The fact that Peter Gallagher thought that Margaret Deery had been shot in the back of the thigh, whereas the entry wound was in the front, is in our view explicable on the basis that, as will have been noted from the medical evidence to which we have referred above,¹ the wound at the back of her thigh was much more extensive than that at the front.

55.114 Other evidence suggests that Margaret Deery was shot at the same time as, or very soon after, the arrest of William John Doherty. As will have been seen from the account of Leo Deehan that we have set out above,¹ he referred to a soldier beating an elderly man just before Margaret Deery pushed him and was shot. In our view that elderly man was almost certainly William John Doherty.

55.115 According to John Barry's interview note,¹ Neil McLaughlin told him that Margaret Deery fell shortly after he had seen an old man emerge from behind the APC in the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats, having been lifted by a soldier from (as Neil McLaughlin was sure although he could not see) the doorway at the north end of Block 1. The soldier was beating the man over the head and leading him into the waste ground, presumably to the other APC. Neil McLaughlin told John Barry that Margaret Deery had fallen after the soldiers had fired. Neil McLaughlin's description of the old man seems to us to be an account of William John Doherty being arrested and taken towards Lieutenant N's APC. In oral evidence² Neil McLaughlin said that he now had no recollection of this incident.

55.116 We should draw attention at this point to the fact that Billy Gillespie and Patrick McDaid gave accounts to the effect that it was after Margaret Deery had been shot and taken into 33 Chamberlain Street that Jackie Duddy was shot.

55.117 According to a note made by Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team,¹ Billy Gillespie "helped to carry mrs deery into 33 chamberlain st with michael bridge. went with bridge into the car park between the flats and saw duddy shot." However, in his written statement to this Inquiry,² Billy Gillespie told us that he "did not see Duddy shot", and in oral evidence³ he said: "I cannot recall young Duddy getting shot." In these circumstances we consider that no reliance can be placed on Billy Gillespie's original account of seeing Jackie Duddy shot a significant period after Margaret Deery had been shot and carried away.

² AG33.4

55.118 According to his accounts Patrick McDaid also helped to carry Margaret Deery into 33 Chamberlain Street, and after he had left the house he saw a man shot as he ran from the west gable end of that street towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹ However, as appears from these accounts, Patrick McDaid did not know at the time that the man was Jackie Duddy, but only afterwards learned his name. Since, from the evidence we have discussed above,² we are sure that Jackie Duddy was shot soon after the soldiers had arrived and that Margaret Deery was probably shot soon after Jackie Duddy, we take the view that Patrick McDaid's (second-hand) identification of the man he saw as Jackie Duddy cannot be correct. It is possible that the man Patrick McDaid saw was in fact Michael Bridge, another of the Sector 2 casualties whose shooting is discussed later in this report.³

Whether a soldier shot Margaret Deery

55.120 In our view this submission cannot be sustained. It involves a wholesale rejection of the evidence to which we have already referred, including the accounts Margaret Deery herself gave. As to the witnesses whose evidence is said to provide "persuasive" support for it,¹ we would make the following observations.

55.121 We have already considered¹ the account given to this Inquiry by George Nelis,² and for the reasons we have given we are of the view that it would be unwise to rely on his account as evidence that there was firing before or as the soldiers came into the Bogside. In any event his account does not contain anything to suggest that Margaret Deery was wounded at this stage.

He said that he “had heard no shots being fired” at this stage,² nor had he seen any soldiers or any Army vehicles in the Bogside.³ He also told us that he only learned later that the woman was Margaret Deery and he said that his recollection of the circumstances was “an area where I am not speaking with 100 per cent certainty”.⁴ For reasons given elsewhere in this report⁵ we are of the view that Martin McGuinness probably did see Margaret Deery, but that this was at a later stage and after soldiers had opened fire.

55.123 We have considered above¹ and rejected Billy Gillespie’s evidence that Margaret Deery was shot a significant time before Jackie Duddy. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² this witness told us that as he ran down Chamberlain Street, although he did not see the soldiers shooting, he heard live rounds and saw people falling on the Eden Place waste ground before he saw Margaret Deery. In his oral evidence he said that it was just rubber bullets that he had heard.³ However, even on his oral account, there must have been the shot that hit Margaret Deery, as according to him he then saw her lying on the ground. We are of the view that Billy Gillespie’s evidence falls far short of establishing that Margaret Deery was shot before the soldiers had arrived in Sector 2.

55.124 Patrick Moore gave evidence that he was in Chamberlain Street, saw soldiers at the Eden Place alleyway, and ran south down Chamberlain Street where he saw an elderly woman with a badly wounded leg being carried towards him. According to his account he then started to go across the car park when he saw two or three APCs arrive in the car park and soldiers taking up firing positions. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry he accepted that there might have been only one APC.¹

¹ AM417.3-4; Day 98/37

55.125 It seems likely that Patrick Moore saw Lieutenant N and the two soldiers with him at the Eden Place alleyway. However, Patrick Moore readily accepted the possibility that he had got the sequence of events wrong,¹ as in our view he had.

55.126 We have also considered Patrick McDaid’s accounts earlier in this chapter.¹ He too told us that he had heard no shooting as he ran down Chamberlain Street and saw Margaret Deery being carried.² As we pointed out in relation to the account given by Billy Gillespie, since she undoubtedly sustained a gunshot wound, someone must have fired. For the reasons given above, we are sure that Patrick McDaid was mistaken in his account of the sequence of events.

² AM172.26; Day 92/105-106; Day 92/123-124

55.127 In these circumstances we are sure that Margaret Deery was shot after the soldiers had arrived and disembarked in Sector 2, probably soon after Jackie Duddy. We have found no evidence to suggest that a paramilitary gunman shot her, deliberately or by accident. Margaret Deery consistently maintained that she was facing towards the soldiers when she was shot. The bullet entered the front of her left thigh. We are left in no doubt that she was shot by a soldier. No-one has suggested, nor is there any evidence to suggest, that when she was shot Margaret Deery was doing anything that could have led a soldier to believe, albeit mistakenly, that she was posing or about to pose a lethal threat.

Where Margaret Deery was taken

55.128 Margaret Deery said in her statement to the RUC¹ that after she was shot she called for help and a man took her to a house in Chamberlain Street. In her statement for the Widgery Inquiry of 29th February 1972,² in her interview with Philip Jacobson³ and in her account of 25th January 1983,⁴ she identified this man as Michael Kelly, who was himself shot in Rossville Street, as we discuss later in this report.⁵ However, for reasons we give later,⁶ it seems to us that Margaret Deery was mistaken about this and that Michael Kelly did not assist Margaret Deery after she was shot.

55.135 The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle was also present. He said in his Keville interview¹ that after attending to Michael Bridge, who had also been brought to 33 Chamberlain Street, he found Margaret Deery with a towel over her leg, and applied some triangular bandages over some more towels in order to control arterial bleeding. In his report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps,² Charles McMonagle said that he had applied the bandages after his colleague Majella Coyle, who had no first aid kit, had covered the wound with a towel. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he said that this might have been Majella Doherty, not Majella Coyle.

55.136 Majella Doherty said in her Keville interview¹ and in her report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps² that she bandaged Margaret Deery's leg with dressings borrowed from the other Ambulance Corps volunteer in the house, and with pillowcases provided by the occupants, because a soldier outside the house had asked to search her kit bag and had returned it held open and upside down, with the result that such supplies as remained in it after her treatment of various earlier minor casualties had fallen to the ground. She had been unable to retrieve them because she had heard gunfire.

55.138 Anna Nelis said in her NICRA statement,¹ and in her written statement² and oral evidence³ to this Inquiry, that after she had called the ambulance she returned to 33 Chamberlain Street and found that the wounded Michael Bridge had also been brought in. She was then told that an Army vehicle had drawn up outside the house, and she went out and asked the soldiers for help. Two soldiers of the Parachute Regiment then entered the house and saw both casualties before leaving. We return to this episode, and to the evidence of Anna Nelis and others about the attitude and language of the soldiers, when we discuss the actions of soldiers of C Company in Chamberlain Street.⁴

Michael Bridge

Biographical details

55.141 Michael Bridge was 25 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was then an unmarried man living in Tremone Gardens, Creggan. He was an unemployed labourer.¹

55.142 It was brought to our attention that Michael Bridge was convicted of an offence some years before Bloody Sunday. We considered this conviction but it did not affect our view on any material issue and accordingly we say no more about it.

Prior movements

55.143 Michael Bridge took part in the march on Bloody Sunday. He has said in several accounts that after the march had begun, he was approached by a girl who asked him to act as a steward. He agreed to do so and was given a white steward's armband.¹

¹ AB84.12; AB84.14; WT7.67; AB84.23; AB84.30; AB84.2; Day 93/26

55.144 Michael Bridge said in his statement to the RUC¹ that he and other stewards walked in front of the lorry at the head of the march, asking people to stay at the side of the road until the lorry had passed and then fall in behind it if they wished to join the march.

55.145 Michael Bridge can be seen in the following photograph, facing in the opposite direction to those who ran into the eastern end of William Street after the lorry had turned into Rossville Street. He explained to us in his oral evidence¹ that at this stage he was trying to tell people in this group to go back and follow the lorry.

55.146 Michael Bridge told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he and a number of other stewards went down William Street to Barrier 14, where they lined up facing the marchers and telling them to turn back and go to Free Derry Corner. His recollection was that initially the stewards succeeded in persuading some people to do this, but that stone-throwing began and that a stage was reached at which it became impossible to control the situation.

55.147 In two accounts given in 1972, Michael Bridge said that some of the youths in the crowd were carrying sticks, which he and other stewards removed from them.¹ In his written statement to this Inquiry,² he said that he did not now remember the youths having sticks.

² AB84.8

55.149 In his statement to the RUC,¹ Michael Bridge said that after the water cannon had been used at Barrier 14, he thought that he could “feel fumes come from the water”. He then “went into an alley at the back of Chamberlain Street and was sick on the waste ground”. As we have explained earlier in this report,² we are satisfied that CS gas was thrown from the crowd at Barrier 14 rather than by the soldiers. Michael Bridge confirmed in later accounts that he was affected by CS gas, and that he went down Macari's Lane onto the waste ground, where he was sick.³

² Chapter 15

55.150 Michael Bridge recorded, in his statement to the RUC,¹ that he then returned to William Street, where a few people were still throwing stones at the soldiers, who in turn began to fire baton rounds towards the stone-throwers. According to Philip Jacobson's and Peter Pringle's note of their interview of him,² Michael Bridge told them that the stoning had become a bit worse at this stage, and that he saw the stone-throwers carrying a big sheet of corrugated iron as a sort of shield. In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Michael Bridge said that he could not recall seeing the stone-throwers carrying the sheet of corrugated iron, but in his oral evidence to this Inquiry⁴ he said that his memory of this had been refreshed by looking at photographs.

⁴ Day 93/23-24

55.151 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge told us that when he returned to William Street, his intention had been to continue to act as a steward, although he did not think that he had given the matter much thought. However, in a report by Brian Woosey published in the Sun newspaper on 2nd February 1972,² Michael Bridge was quoted as saying that although there had been nothing in his hands when he was shot, he had "thrown a couple of stones at the barricades previously", and in his oral evidence³ Michael Bridge told us that this was correct. He acknowledged that the following photograph shows him adopting a confrontational position in William Street at a stage after the ground had been made wet by the water cannon, and said that he thought that by this stage he had been throwing stones.

Michael
Bridge

55.153 Michael Bridge said that he had thought at the time that if the soldiers had refrained from using their riot control weapons, the stone-throwers would either have become fed up or been persuaded by the stewards to leave, and that this view had probably influenced his actions after he returned to William Street.¹ He also said that when he returned to

William Street and joined in the stone-throwing, he was no longer wearing his steward's armband.² He thought it likely that he had used it to wipe his face after he had been sick, as he had said in his statement to the RUC³ that he had "got a piece of cloth" for that purpose.

Medical evidence

55.155 Mr HM Bennett, a consultant surgeon at Altnagelvin Hospital, described injuries to Michael Bridge's left thigh in a letter to the RUC dated 7th February 1972.¹ He reported that there was an entry wound in the anterior part of the lateral side (ie outside) of the thigh and an exit wound in the posterior part of the same area. He considered that Michael Bridge had sustained a comparatively minor wound and was likely to suffer little if any permanent disability.

55.156 Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, reviewed the medical records relating to the injuries sustained by those who received non-fatal gunshot wounds on Bloody Sunday. In their report on these cases,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan made the following comments about Michael Bridge's injuries:

"Mr Bridge had a through and through wound of the left thigh. In a letter of the 7th February 1972 to the RUC Mr Bennett states that the entry wound was on the front of the outside aspect of the thigh and the exit wound at the back of the outside aspect of the thigh. The track of the wound is therefore more likely to be from front to back than the reverse. No comment can be made concerning the nature of the projectile."

Accounts given by Michael Bridge

55.157 Michael Bridge gave the following accounts in 1972:

1. a Keville interview;¹
2. a statement to the RUC taken when he was still in hospital on 3rd February 1972;²
3. a further statement of which the Inquiry has only the first page.³ This page bears no date or signature, but it is clear that the statement was taken in 1972, since Michael Bridge described himself in it as 25 years old, which was his age in that year. The Inquiry obtained this document from a collection deposited in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland by the solicitor who acted for the next of kin of 12 of the deceased at the Widgery Inquiry. It is similar in form to other statements believed to have been sent to that solicitor on 29th February 1972, in order that he might pass them to the Widgery Inquiry, by an apprentice solicitor in the firm that represented the wounded. We think it highly likely that the statement of Michael Bridge was taken by that firm in preparation for the Widgery Inquiry;
4. a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 25th February 1972;⁴
5. oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry on 29th February 1972;⁵ and
6. an interview with the Sunday Times Insight Team journalists Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle, conducted on 2nd March 1972.⁶

² AB84.44-50

- 55.160 In his Keville interview Michael Bridge described people shouting that the Army vehicles were coming in, and said that he ran to the corner at the south end of Chamberlain Street with others.¹ The interviewer then asked him: “Did you see the young fella dead where was he lying?”

“He was lying at the, in the carpark at the walls there. He was lying up off the wall and there was a priest and two other blokes there was blood flying out of his mouth and nose but he was dead.

[Female voice] And then what did you do?

I cracked up and turned round faced the troops and started screaming at them I was shot then.

[Female voice] And can you tell which soldier shot you was it a soldier that you could see?

No the soldier that was facing me he didn’t shot [sic] me, he put his, the rifle up to shoot at me it was possible I was standing facing him you know.

[Female voice] Yes

... And I was no more than ten yards away I was standing facing him and the bullet went in the side of my leg.

[Female voice] So were you shot from your left side?

I was shot on my left side at the maisonettes at the waste ground [inaudible] I am nearly sure it was the soldier at the side of the flats.”

- 55.161 On 2nd February 1972 Michael Bridge refused to be interviewed by the RUC. He was apparently extremely agitated and, according to their reports, accused the RUC of shooting into the crowds from the City Walls on Bloody Sunday.¹ However, on the following day and in the presence of Fr Anthony Mulvey he made a statement to the RUC.² After describing what he had done on the march and being struck on the foot with a rubber bullet while near Barrier 14, Michael Bridge recorded that when people started shouting that the Army vehicles were coming:³

"I ran along Chamberlain Street and cut into Eden Place. On waste ground in front of me I saw an armoured personnel carrier parked with the back doors towards me. These doors were open. I saw two soldiers jump out of this vehicle and they were firing their rifles. I ran back into Chamberlain Street and a man aged about 30 to 40 years fell and I lifted him up. At this stage I saw a soldier standing with a rifle at the corner of the small shop at the rear of 12a Chamberlain Street. I heard a shot fairly close and I thought that this soldier had fired. I ran up Chamberlain Street towards the courtyard of the flats. There were about fifty other people running along Chamberlain Street as well. As I ran I heard a young lad say that there was a young fellow shot. His exact words were, "He's shot dead, he's shot dead". I ran into the courtyard and I saw a priest bending over a body. I had got to within two or three yards of the priest and I saw blood on the face of the person lying on the ground. I turned round, screamed at the soldiers and walked towards them. I saw a soldier about twenty yards from me with his rifle at his shoulder aiming at me. The next thing I felt was a thud on the left thigh. The soldier with the rifle at his shoulder could not have shot me but I was aware of another soldier at the bottom of Rossville Flats and to my left. I turned and walked a short distance and two fellows came running out and caught hold of me and told me I was shot. I felt the blood on my thigh and I was carried into the first house in Chamberlain Street."

55.162 Michael Bridge gave a similar account in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ He added the detail that as he approached the body he could not remember any shooting. His account of the time after he had approached the body was in the following terms:

"4. While I was standing in the car park, just before I was shot, I noticed a Saracen parked in the waste ground between the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street and the high flats in Rossville Street. I also noticed a soldier in a kneeling position with his rifle aimed into the car park at the corner of the Rossville Street flats. There was another soldier standing a few feet from the rear wall of one of the houses in Chamberlain Street. He had his rifle in his shoulder in an aiming position. I noticed that he did not have a riot visor down over his face. There was no camouflage paint on his face."

55.163 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Michael Bridge again gave a similar account. He referred to the two soldiers, one kneeling at the corner of the flats and one standing out from the rear wall of the houses in Chamberlain Street, and said: “I don’t know which one shot me.”¹

55.164 The note of Philip Jacobson’s and Peter Pringle’s interview with Michael Bridge records that he ran to Jackie Duddy, and then ran back “towards the saracen”:¹

“I recall very clearly that i was shouting at one soldier up against the back wall of the houses at the top of chamberlain street; he was no more than thirty yards away and i remember he had no visor on his helmet. he brought his rifle to the shoulder and aimed at me. next thing, there was a thump in my leg.

at first i thought I had caught another rubber bullet. i didnt go down and was hobbling towards chamberlain street when a couple of boys dashed out to help me. they took me into the [...], no 33, and i went through to the back yard and I think it was then that i realised i was shot, someone said, there s a woman shot in the leg in the front room. i didnt know then that it was peggy deery, who I know well.”

55.165 Sam Gillespie gave a statement in 1972¹ in which he recorded:²

“I was taking photos of the civil rights march. I was in William Street taking pircures [sic] of the confrontation with the British Army when the army charged. I ran over Chamberlain Street. I was one of the last to enter. When I got to the square at Rossville Flats I see a bloke lying on the ground with about 10 people around him. He was dead. I took a picture of this. While I was taking it a young fellow who seemed to be his friend turned and faced the soldiers shouting, “Shoot me, you bastards. Shoot me.” He was waving his hands in the air, and as he was moving toward the soldier who was taking cover at a Saracen he was shot twice in the leg. I believe his name is Michael Bridges.”

55.166 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ Sam Gillespie told us that he had taken two photographs of Michael Bridge, one before he was shot and one immediately after. In his oral evidence he said² that the time that passed between the taking of the two photographs was very short, and that after taking the first he had followed Michael Bridge's movements through the viewfinder of his camera, waiting to see what happened to him, until the shot was fired and he took the second photograph. We set these photographs out below in the order in which Sam Gillespie recalled that he took them.

55.167 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge told us that he was sure that he was not the man shown on the far right of the first of these photographs because it was his very clear recollection that only two or three people were bent over Jackie Duddy when he, Michael Bridge, was shot, whereas the photograph shows more; but by the time he gave oral evidence he had changed his mind, and he agreed that he probably was the man on the far right of the photograph.² He has never doubted that he is the man shown on the left in the second photograph.

55.168 Fr Daly also gave evidence in 1972 that suggested that by the time Michael Bridge was shot there were not many people around Jackie Duddy. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Fr Daly recalled that after he had reached Jackie Duddy a number of people gathered around, but he asked them to go away, which they did.¹ His statement continues:

“After a few minutes the gunfire got worse. We both lay down beside the boy as I gave him the Last rites of my church. I felt he was dying. Just as I had finished giving him the last rites, a young man dashed out past where we were lying towards the soldiers ... I screamed at him to get back. He danced up and down in front of the soldiers shouting something that I could not understand. He had his hands help up at full stretch over his head. I saw a soldier at the corner of the flats take aim and fire at this man ... he staggered and ran crazily around for a moment. I don't know where he went then ... I am certain that he was hit ... I think his name was Bridge.”

55.169 However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Fr Daly did not exclude the possibility that the first photograph showed Michael Bridge on the right.¹

55.170 The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers submitted that the first photograph did not show Michael Bridge, relying on his written evidence to this Inquiry and on the evidence of Fr Daly.¹ These representatives also submitted that an examination of the first photograph shows Jackie Duddy to be lying on his front because his heels are seen up and his toes down, whereas, as we have explained earlier in this chapter,² Fr Daly did not reach Jackie Duddy until he had been turned onto his back.

55.171 We do not accept these submissions.

55.172 In the first place, it seems to us that the location in which Jackie Duddy is shown lying on the ground is the same as that shown in the photograph taken by Gilles Peress, which we have considered when dealing with the shooting of Jackie Duddy. That photograph, reproduced below, shows Fr Daly with Jackie Duddy. On the basis of Willy Barber's account to the Sunday Times,¹ we are of the view that Jackie Duddy was turned on his back before he was surrounded by the group of people shown in Sam Gillespie's first photograph.

55.173 In the second place, we are not convinced that Sam Gillespie's first photograph, which is out of focus, does show Jackie Duddy's feet with his heels up and toes down. The poor quality of the image and the number of people around make it impossible to tell whether he was lying on his front or his back.

55.174 In the third place, in view of the gravity and fluidity of the situation, with most people's attention (particularly that of Fr Daly) concentrated on the casualty, recollections as to the number of people present at any particular moment are not in our view likely to be necessarily reliable.

55.175 There remains the question whether Sam Gillespie was correct in his recollection that he had taken the second photograph after Michael Bridge had been shot.

55.176 A note at the top of the statement made by Sam Gillespie in 1972¹ indicates that photographs accompanied the original statement. Those photographs are not attached to any of the copies of that statement obtained by the Inquiry. In his statement and oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Sam Gillespie told us that he thought that he had made his 1972 statement to a journalist from the Sunday Times, and that he gave the journalist his negatives, which were subsequently returned to him. He referred to this journalist as “Derek Humphries”, although in fact his name is Derek Humphry. However, Sam Gillespie accepted the possibility that his 1972 statement had been made to a representative of NICRA. Since the statement is in similar form to a large number of NICRA statements, we are satisfied that the statement was taken on behalf of NICRA, and that Sam Gillespie was mistaken in thinking that Derek Humphry took the statement, although we have no reason to doubt that Derek Humphry met Sam Gillespie and borrowed his negatives.

² AG36.6; Day 142/64-66

55.177 In June 1999 the Inquiry received, from the archives of Liberty (then known as the National Council for Civil Liberties) held at the University of Hull, copies of five photographs, which bear on the reverse manuscript annotations indicating that they were taken by Sam Gillespie. Two of these photographs are identical to the two shown above.¹

55.178 In October 1999, Sam Gillespie provided to the Inquiry some further copies of photographs taken by him on Bloody Sunday, some of which were annotated on the reverse. This set did not include the two shown above,¹ but included copies of the other three photographs supplied by the University of Hull, without annotations, and of some more photographs not found in the archives of Liberty. Sam Gillespie was shown one of the photographs in this last category and the annotations on the back during the giving of his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² and was asked in general terms when he had made the annotations on the copies of his photographs in the possession of the Inquiry. He said that he had done this not in 1972 but only after he had been contacted for the first time by solicitors acting on behalf of this Inquiry.

55.179 While we have no doubt that this answer was correct in relation to the photograph and annotations he was shown and the other annotations on the set of photographs provided to the Inquiry by Sam Gillespie, we are also satisfied that the annotations on the reverse of the five photographs from the archives of Liberty were made in 1972. As was explained in a circular letter dated 11th February 1972 from its General Secretary Tony Smythe,¹ that organisation acted as a “central clearing house” for the statements that we have described as NICRA statements. We think that it is highly probable that the five photographs held in the archives of Liberty were those that originally accompanied Sam Gillespie's NICRA statement, and in our view Sam Gillespie would have had neither reason nor opportunity to annotate those photographs after they had come into the possession of Liberty.

55.180 We are confirmed in this view by the fact that, in the annotations on the reverse of the photographs obtained from the archives of Liberty, Sam Gillespie gave the address at which he lived at the time of Bloody Sunday and not his current address.

55.181 The annotations on the reverse of the first of the photographs shown above,¹ which we are satisfied were made in 1972, are as follows:

"FIRST FRAME [1]

The death of McIlhenny with Michael Bradley (extreme right) running berserk away from body and shouting to be shot. He was.

Taken by Sam Gillespie [address]"

55.182 The name "Bradley" has been deleted and replaced by "Bridge". We do not know whether this amendment was made by Sam Gillespie or by someone else, but we have no doubt that the original reference to Michael Bradley was erroneous. We also have no doubt that "McIlhenny" should read "Duddy".

55.183 The annotations on the reverse of the second of the photographs shown above,¹ which we are satisfied were made in 1972, are as follows:

"NEXT FRAME [2]

Michael Bradley seconds before he was shot.

Taken by Sam Gillespie [address]"

55.184 On this photograph, the name "Bridge" has not been substituted for "Bradley", but it is clear to us that the same mistake has been made about the name as was originally made in the annotations on the previous photograph.

- 55.185 For these reasons we regard the annotations on this photograph as convincing evidence that Sam Gillespie believed in 1972 that he had taken his second photograph shortly before Michael Bridge was shot, rather than immediately after the shooting, which was his recollection when he gave evidence to this Inquiry. Since we consider that his original memory is more likely to be reliable, we have reached the conclusion that this photograph was taken shortly before the shooting of Michael Bridge.
- 55.186 Bearing these matters in mind, we are of the view that of the two photographs taken by Sam Gillespie, the first shows Michael Bridge advancing towards the soldiers while the second shows him very soon before he was shot. It may be that Michael Bridge had moved a little further towards the soldiers after this photograph was taken and before he was shot, but it seems that this cannot have been any great distance. Hence, by reference to the lines marking the car park bays, it is possible to show on an aerial photograph of the car park the approximate position (marked in red) where, on the basis of the evidence discussed above, Michael Bridge was when he was shot.

When Michael Bridge was shot

- 55.187 From the accounts that he gave in 1972, it seems to us clear that Michael Bridge had come along Chamberlain Street and seen Lieutenant N's APC and soldiers disembarking from it. From his description in his RUC statement of seeing a soldier standing at the corner of a small shop at the rear of 12a Chamberlain Street (in other words, on the north side of the entrance to the Eden Place alleyway from the waste ground), and of hearing a shot, we have little doubt that he saw Lieutenant N in that position and heard one of his shots. His descriptions of hearing, as he ran further along Chamberlain Street, a young lad saying that someone had been shot dead, and of seeing, as he ran into the courtyard of the flats, a priest bending over a body, make us sure that Michael Bridge arrived in the Rossville Flats car park at some stage after Jackie Duddy had been shot and after Fr Daly and others had gone to Jackie Duddy.

55.188 Michael Bridge's account to the Sunday Times of being told, after he had been wounded and taken to 33 Chamberlain Street, that a woman (in our view Margaret Deery) was in the front room of that house indicates to us that she had been wounded and carried there before Michael Bridge was wounded, possibly even before Michael Bridge had reached the southern end of Chamberlain Street, as he made no other mention of seeing her.

55.189 There are other witnesses who in our view confirm that Margaret Deery was taken into 33 Chamberlain Street before Michael Bridge.

55.190 At the time 33 Chamberlain Street was the home of Bridget Nelis and her daughters Anna and Margaret Nelis. The only evidence we have from Bridget Nelis (who died before this Inquiry was established) is a statement that she gave to the RUC in 1972. In this she noted that an injured woman was brought into her house, and that later two wounded civilians were carried away. It appears that she did not see the second casualty arrive.¹ Anna Nelis told NICRA that she was at home when a woman with a leg wound was carried into her house. Anna Nelis stated that she subsequently went to the home of Mrs Donahoe in High Street in order to telephone for an ambulance; during the time she was gone Michael Bridge was carried into 33 Chamberlain Street.² In her evidence to this Inquiry, Anna Nelis gave a consistent account of this sequence, and stated that she subsequently learned that the injured woman was Margaret Deery.³ Margaret Nelis also stated to NICRA and the RUC in 1972 that Michael Bridge was brought into 33 Chamberlain Street after Margaret Deery.⁴ In her evidence to this Inquiry, Margaret Nelis stated that she remembered Margaret Deery being carried into her home, but although she understood that an injured man might also have been brought into the house she did not have any recollection of this happening.⁵

- 55.191 George Nelis (Bridget Nelis's son) recorded in his NICRA statement that he was in his mother's house (33 Chamberlain Street) when: "An injured woman (Mrs. Deery) was carried by a few men into the kitchen. A few minutes later there was an injured man carried into the house." Soldiers arrived at the house "Approx 5 minutes later".¹

What Michael Bridge was doing when he was shot

- 55.192 Philip Jacobson's and Peter Pringle's notes of their interview of Michael Bridge carry the following handwritten annotation: "He did chuck a half brick just before getting hit." Philip Jacobson told us that this annotation was in his handwriting and that he thought that it must have been based on something that Michael Bridge had told him and Peter Pringle.¹ However, later in his evidence he agreed that the annotation might have been made as the result of information obtained elsewhere.²

² Day 191/168-170

- 55.193 As already noted, Paul Mahon interviewed Michael Bridge. During the course of this interview, which was video-recorded, Michael Bridge played Paul Mahon a tape recording of an interview that he had earlier given to a local radio station, BBC Radio Foyle.¹

- 55.194 Paul Mahon's interview of Michael Bridge was transcribed,¹ including the recording played during it. Some of that recording is indecipherable, but its transcription includes the following:²

"Yeah, he was dead, he was down, obviously dead. [Even, in my, you know, sort of ... umm ... there was a stone just beside the wall.] A priest was with him. Well, even then, like, it's [still not there]. There are no functions or registrations in the head. [You see it's there] in full sight. You see it, but it's not believable. You know it's ... [indecipherable]. [I turned anyway, and I gathered up a number of stones] and the soldiers at this time were ... the Saracens, were [just at the high flats on the wasteground]. There was one soldier in particular. He was [along a well]. I started throwing stones at him.

[Indecipherable references to hands in the air and verbal abuse] ‘You can shoot anybody, so shoot me?’ It sounds stupid, but you’d never believe that they would do it, you know. But he shot. He shot five or six shots [at me into the leg. [Indecipherable] [but I didn’t feel it]. [I thought I was hit by a rubber bullet.] I could sense the bullets flying around me. [A boy run out from Chamberlain Street. He grabbed me.] [I was spinning, he grabbed me. He pulled me down to the first wee house in Chamberlain Street.”

² X4.3.5

55.195 In his supplementary statement to this Inquiry,¹ made after he had given oral evidence, Michael Bridge told us, as he had in his earlier evidence to us,² that he threw no stones in the Rossville Flats car park. His explanation of what he had said in the Radio Foyle interview was: *“If I said otherwise in the radio interview about gathering up or throwing stones, it was a point of detail which, on reflection, is probably wrong.”*³

² AB84.5; AB84.6; Day 93/51-55

55.196 However, there is other evidence to the effect that Michael Bridge was throwing stones or bricks at the soldiers shortly before he was shot.

55.197 William McClintock gave a NICRA statement¹ in which he recorded that he had been watching from his mother’s flat at 9 Mura Place. This was in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

“I could see a wounded man lying in the car park, – Fr. Daly and the Knights of Malta were giving him aid. Paratroopers were lined along the wall opposite the back of the Flats and they opened up fire on the group. A man stepped forward with about half a brick and threw it at the Paratroopers. He then opened his coat and roared ‘Go ahead and shoot me’ and the Paratrooper did, in the leg.”

55.198 In the light of the evidence we have already considered, it seems to us that the man William McClintock saw was Michael Bridge.

55.199 We have also taken into account the evidence of Billy Gillespie,¹ Hugh Barbour² and Bernard Doherty. We have expressed some doubts earlier³ about the sequence of events in the account of Billy Gillespie, and Hugh Barbour appears to have mistakenly thought that Michael Bridge was protesting about the shooting of Michael Bradley, another casualty in Sector 2, to whom we turn later in this chapter.⁴ Bernard Doherty gave evidence that when he was in the car park he saw someone with a piece of brick in his hands, advancing towards the soldiers, and this may have been Michael Bridge.⁵

³ Paragraphs 55.117 and 55.123

55.200 Our assessment of the evidence considered above leads us to conclude that Michael Bridge had thrown at least one stone or piece of brick at the soldiers shortly before he was shot. It follows that in this regard he gave inaccurate evidence to us. However, we consider that at the moment he was shot Michael Bridge no longer had anything in his hands, as Fr Daly told us was the case,¹ and that he was instead advancing towards the soldiers shouting and gesticulating. Sam Gillespie's second photograph, which we believe was taken shortly before Michael Bridge was shot, in our view supports this conclusion, since it contains no indication that at that stage Michael Bridge was still holding a stone or a brick.

55.201 This photograph also shows that there was no-one in front of or beside Michael Bridge. As a number of witnesses told us, including Fr Daly, he was advancing towards the soldiers on his own. There is nothing to suggest, and no-one has suggested, that Michael Bridge was armed or posing or about to pose a lethal threat. Whether at the time he was shot his actions could have led a soldier mistakenly to believe that he was or might have been about to throw a bomb is a matter to which we return,¹ when we consider whether it is possible to identify the soldier who shot Michael Bridge.

Where Michael Bridge was taken

55.202 Michael Bridge was taken to Bridget Nelis's house at 33 Chamberlain Street after he had been shot.

55.203 In his statement to the RUC,¹ Michael Bridge recorded that after he had been shot, he turned and walked a short distance. Two men came running out, caught hold of him and told him that he had been shot. He was carried into the first house in Chamberlain Street.

55.204 In Peter Pringle's and Philip Jacobson's note of their interview of Michael Bridge,¹ he is recorded as saying that he "didn't go down and was hobbling towards chamberlain street when a couple of boys dashed out to help me".

55.205 In his statement to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge said that the shot spun him round and that two boys ran out of Chamberlain Street and grabbed him. One of them told Michael Bridge that he had been shot. Michael Bridge then collapsed and was either carried or dragged to Chamberlain Street.

55.206 William McCloskey,¹ Maurice McColgan,² Hugh McMonagle³ and OIRA 8⁴ all said that they carried or dragged Michael Bridge into 33 Chamberlain Street. Maurice McColgan explained⁵ that the house was so crowded that there was nowhere to put Michael Bridge, and on the advice of an Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer he and William McCloskey took Michael Bridge out into the back yard of the premises.

55.208 The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle said in his interview with Kathleen Keville¹ that he attended to Michael Bridge at 33 Chamberlain Street. There was no severe haemorrhaging but he bandaged the wound and covered Michael Bridge with a blanket in the hope of concealing him from the soldiers. He also referred to this in his report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he said that he believed that he had treated Michael Bridge, although he no longer recalled doing so.

55.209 Michael Bridge was taken to Altnagelvin Hospital in the same ambulance as Margaret Deery. We are satisfied that he is the man with leg injuries described in statements made on 2nd February 1972 by the ambulance driver John Holmes¹ and the attendant William Gray.²

Michael Bradley

Biographical details

55.211 Michael Bradley was 22 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was recently married and lived in Rinmore Drive, Creggan. He was an unemployed painter.¹

Prior movements

55.212 Michael Bradley went on the march on Bloody Sunday with some of his brothers and friends.¹

55.213 Michael Bradley stated in several accounts given in 1972 that he was part of the crowd in the area of William Street between Barrier 14 and the junction with Chamberlain Street. When the water cannon was used, and when CS gas was released, as he thought by the soldiers but as we have found by civilians, Michael Bradley moved back up William Street and paused for some minutes as he was affected by the gas. He then proceeded down Quinn's Lane, otherwise known as Macari's Lane, and across the waste ground towards the Rossville Flats.¹ In his written statement to this Inquiry² he gave a similar account, although he said that while the rioting was taking place at Barrier 14 he was standing outside James Porter's shop. As can be seen from the following photograph, that shop was in the part of William Street west of Macari's Lane, and hence further from Barrier 14 than the position indicated in the accounts that Michael Bradley gave in 1972.

² AB66.2-AB66.3

55.214 In his notes of his research interview of Michael Bradley,¹ Tony Stark of Praxis Films Ltd wrote that Michael Bradley was “AMONG THOSE STONING THE TROOPS” at Barrier 14. According to the transcript of the fuller interview that followed, Michael Bradley did not in that interview say that he had thrown stones at Barrier 14, although he described a confrontation with the soldiers at the barrier and said that “of course we grabbed for the barbed wire fences or whatever you call them, pickets, we grabbed for those trying to part them, trying to make our way through”.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Michael Bradley was asked whether there had been attempts to part the barrier, and said that he presumed so, but that he had been several rows back from the front.

Medical evidence

- 55.217 Mr Fenton, the consultant orthopaedic surgeon at Altnagelvin Hospital, gave the following description of injuries to Michael Bradley's arms and chest in his letter to Detective Sergeant Cudmore dated 7th February 1972:¹

- 55.218 An X-ray of Michael Bradley's right forearm showed that several small metallic foreign bodies were projected in the soft tissues opposite the head of the radius.¹

¹ D982

- 55.219 In a letter to Michael Bradley's general practitioner dated 22nd March 1972, Mr Fenton expressed the opinion that a bullet had struck the left forearm first and passed across the chest and into Michael Bradley's right forearm, to which it caused much more severe damage, probably because by that time it was spinning.¹

¹ D960

- 55.220 Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, reviewed the medical records relating to the injuries sustained by those who received non-fatal gunshot wounds on Bloody Sunday. In their report on these cases,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan made the following comments about Michael Bradley's injuries:

"Mr Bradley had a through and through wound right forearm, a through and through wound to the left forearm and two apparently minor injuries to the front of the right lower chest. The injuries to the right arm were the most severe of these injuries.

In a discharge summary of the 22nd March Mr Fenton suggests that the injuries to the left arm are less severe because it was struck first and a bullet 'went straight through'. Mr Fenton also suggests that the right arm was the more severely injured because the bullet was 'probably spinning' when it struck. It is clear that there was damage to both the bones and the nerves of this arm.

A report on an X ray of the right forearm of the 30th January 1972 indicates that 'Several small metallic foreign bodies are projected in the soft tissues...' The presence of these fragments is confirmed on the X ray films made available to us. However no foreign bodies were recovered at operation and neither are there any records or reports from DIFS [the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science].

It is not possible to determine if the injuries to the arms were caused by one or more than one projectile or if they originated from left or right. No comment can be made concerning the nature of the projectile or projectiles.

The injuries to the chest are only described as 'a superficial wound' in the operation note of 30th January 1972 and as 'two small wounds' in the operation note of the 11th February 1972. The injuries to the chest may have been caused by fragments of bone, by fragments of one bullet or of several bullets or by some other object or objects."

55.221 Despite the caution shown by Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan, we accept the view of Mr Fenton that Michael Bradley was hit by a single bullet. This conclusion is consistent with the evidence of Michael Bradley himself.

Accounts given by Michael Bradley

55.222 Michael Bradley gave the following accounts in 1972:

1. answers to some questions put to him by Detective Sergeant Cudmore on 4th February 1972;¹
2. a written statement dated 7th February 1972, witnessed by Brian Rainey.² Although this is not in the usual NICRA form, we are satisfied that it is a NICRA statement. Brian Rainey (then a schoolteacher) recalled taking a statement from Michael Bradley for, he believed, "the Civil Rights Association".³ The Inquiry has in its possession a handwritten copy of this statement, bearing the same date and what appear to be the signatures of Michael Bradley and Brian Rainey;
3. an interview with Fulvio Grimaldi, an account of which appears in Fulvio Grimaldi's book Blood in the Street (published in March 1972);⁴
4. a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 28th February 1972;⁵ and

55.225 Michael Bradley died on 2nd May 2009.

55.226 The answers Michael Bradley gave to the questions put by Detective Sergeant Cudmore¹ revealed little more than that Michael Bradley had been hit by gunfire at the rear of the Rossville Flats. He said he was heading home from William Street and, when asked how he received his injuries, replied: "I don't know, I was just standing there, then I was out."

55.227 Another RUC officer, Detective Constable Gillanders, wrote a report to his Detective Inspector in which he recorded that during the evening of 4th February 1972 John Hume MP had stopped Michael Bradley from giving an interview to the police and had advised him to appoint a solicitor.¹ There appears to have been no further attempt by the RUC to interview Michael Bradley.

- 55.228 In his NICRA statement,¹ Michael Bradley described how he had gone from William Street through Macari's Lane (he called it Quinn's Lane) into the Eden Place waste ground, with a view to going towards the courtyard behind the Rossville Flats (ie the car park):

"I was still on the waste ground, no yet having reached the courtyard, when I looked round and saw the saracens driving along Rossville Street. There were several other people near me and when we saw the troops we began running and shouting, 'There's the Army.' The crowd ran in all directions. I ran straight ahead across the courtyard towards the far top corner of the flats – that is, the corner that leads out to the steps towards Fahan Street and to Joseph's Place. There was quite a few people running towards this corner also. After I went through the opening at the corner I stopped to catch my breath. I heard gunfire and ran back out through the opening towards the courtyard and it was then I saw a body lying on the ground about five to ten yards away. I observed it was the body of a young man and there was a small group of men around him.

I was standing there with my back towards the back of the shops and I was looking across the courtyard in the direction of the Army, whom I could quite clearly see at the Rossville Street end of the courtyard. There was also a saracen just stopping in the courtyard. It was this saracen in particular that caught my attention. I could see soldiers jump out and take up firing positions at the front of the saracen. All during this time I could hear the sound of gunfire.

Suddenly, I felt a heavy pain in my right arm. I realised I had been shot but didn't know how serious the wound was. I pulled myself back over the small wall behind the shops. I was still on my feet. I hadn't lost consciousness. In a bent over position I stumbled along towards the opening which leads out of the courtyard towards Joseph's Place and which I had come through a few minutes earlier. As I came near the opening a few men reached forward, grabbed me and carried me through to a house. I cannot remember exactly the house I was carried to. My main thought at the time was – would I live or die."

- 55.229 Michael Bradley gave a similar account in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ In this statement he recorded that it was because he had heard that Jackie Duddy (whom he knew personally) had been shot that he decided to go back into the forecourt of the flats:

“I jumped over the small retaining wall at the back of the shops in Joseph Place and went towards a small crowd which was positioned near the children’s playground on the north-eastern corner of the forecourt. I noticed blood on the ground where the people were standing. I was not able to see the body at this stage as the people were surrounding it. I was about five or six yards from this crowd when I looked over towards the waste ground at Eden Place. I saw two Saracens in the forecourt. One was near the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street and the other was positioned in line with it but more towards Rossville Street. I saw soldiers come out of the Saracens and take up position around the vehicles. I noticed that they did not appear to have visors on their helmets. Just as they had taken up these positions I heard shooting. Then I felt a heavy thud on my left arm. I clutched my arm and I then turned and staggered over the small retaining wall again and made my way towards the alleyway I had come out of.”

55.230 In this statement Michael Bradley recorded that he was not armed with a weapon or a nail bomb at any time.

55.231 According to the notes of his Sunday Times interview,¹ Michael Bradley again gave a similar account, this time adding that when he saw a body lying in the car park with Fr Daly and a group of others around it, he ran out into the car park and was shouting abuse at the troops when he was hit.

55.232 The Sunday Times map, reproduced below,¹ which bears the annotation “Michael Bradley 1/3/72”, puts what is marked as “duddy’s body” in or near the recreation ground in the car park of the Rossville Flats. This is consistent with the description given by Michael Bradley in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry.

55.233 We have no doubt that what Michael Bradley saw was the group of people (including Fr Daly) around the body of Jackie Duddy and the body itself. However, as will have been seen from our discussion of the shooting of Jackie Duddy, the location Michael Bradley described is clearly wrong. Michael Bradley himself acknowledged this during his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ though it appears that he was for many years under a misapprehension about the location.²

¹ Day 94/30

² As in his Mahon interview (X4.2.25-31).

Where Michael Bradley was shot

55.234 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bradley told us that he was shot when standing about six feet in front of the low wall that ran along the northern side of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, and about five or six feet from the body of Jackie Duddy. He sought to illustrate this by reference to a plan² and to the following photograph,³ which shows what he described as his approximate position, that of Jackie Duddy and that of an APC.

² AB66.29

55.235 The position shown for the body of Jackie Duddy is close to where (for the reasons given earlier in this chapter)¹ we are confident that he was lying. The position shown for Michael Bradley in this photograph is indeed a few feet from the body, but substantially more than six feet away from the low wall. Thus it is not clear from Michael Bradley's account exactly where he was, though it should be noted that the Sunday Times map puts him in the general area where we know (contrary to what is shown on that map) that Jackie Duddy was lying.

55.236 Michael Bradley told us that he had always thought that he had dragged or pulled himself back over the wall after he had been shot.¹ As can be seen from the following photograph taken by Gilles Peress, the height of the low wall above the ground on its south side reduced as the wall ran towards Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

55.237 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Michael Bradley recorded that he had jumped over “the small retaining wall”. To our minds the fact that this wall reduced in height towards the north-west, together with Michael Bradley’s description of it and of how he crossed back over after being shot, lend support to the view that he is likely to have been towards the north-western end of this wall both when he jumped over and when he dragged or pulled himself back. This is further supported by the fact that he recalled that after the shooting he returned along the back of this wall in an endeavour to go through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, and by the accounts that he gave to Jimmy McGovern and Don Mullan.¹

55.238 Brian Doherty,¹ James O’Kane² and James Rowe³ gave evidence to this Inquiry to the effect that Michael Bradley was shot rather further to the south-east (ie nearer to the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats) than would appear to us to be the case from an examination of Michael Bradley’s own accounts. None of these witnesses gave an account in 1972 that indicated where Michael Bradley was shot. Although we cannot be certain, we consider it more likely than not that Michael Bradley was shot when he was further along the low wall in a north-westerly direction than these witnesses suggested, and a short distance out from it (he told Jimmy McGovern that he had taken “about two steps forward” from the wall), though this would put him a substantially greater distance from the body of Jackie Duddy than the five or six feet he estimated.

² AO81.3; AO81.11

55.239 We mark below on an aerial photograph of the car park the approximate position where in our view Michael Bradley is likely to have been shot.

When Michael Bradley was shot

55.240 In his NICRA statement Derrik Tucker Senior, who was watching events from 31 Garvan Place, a flat in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, gave the following account:¹

“Two Saracens turned into the car park of the Flats from Rossville St. In doing so, they drove through the crowd and the first Saracen knocked down one man, sending him spinning away. The Saracens stopped and soldiers deployed from the back of them. One soldier ran to the front nearside wheel and took up a firing position. Another ran to the wall at the backs of the Chamberlain St. houses and started pushing people with his rifle held in a port position.

The soldier at the nearside front wheel of the Saracen started firing and I saw a man fall to the ground. Someone, running in front of the man, stopped, turned and went to his aid. The shot which that soldier fired was the first shot that I heard that day. Shooting continued and I saw two other men shot in the car park. The first of these was roughly in the middle of the car park with his hands raised in the air. He appeared to be shot in the leg as he suddenly grasped his right leg with his right arm and hopped into the top corner of the carpark where the kiddies play area is.

The second man who was shot, was crouching at the little wall dividing the service area of the shops from the car park. He got up from his crouching position. I saw him clutch his stomach and bend over.”

55.241 To our minds, this account puts the shooting of Michael Bridge before that of Michael Bradley. We know of no other evidence that is inconsistent with this.

What Michael Bradley was doing when he was shot

55.242 Although Michael Bradley stated in his written statement dated 7th February 1972 that “at no time during all this had I any object in my hands”,¹ and was recorded by Fulvio Grimaldi as having said “I was carrying nothing at the time, I had neither brick, stone or nothin’ in my hand”,² there is a body of evidence to the effect that this was not true, and that Michael Bradley had in fact been throwing stones at the soldiers immediately before and perhaps even at the time he was shot.

² AB66.27

55.243 There is a manuscript annotation at the side of the typed notes of Philip Jacobson’s and Peter Pringle’s interview of Michael Bradley,¹ which Philip Jacobson told us was in his handwriting.² It reads:

“He agrees he was almost certainly stoning then, can’t really recall.”

² Day 191/146; Day 191/169

55.244 It appears that Michael Bradley may earlier have told another Sunday Times journalist, Derek Humphry, that he had been throwing stones. According to a draft article¹ that was not published, Michael Bradley had said:

"I was throwing stones at the soldiers – my blood was up, you know. I had just finished throwing a stone when I saw a soldier aiming at me from about 20 yards away and I was hit in the arm and chest. I just caught a glimpse of him – he was to one side of me and I didn't throw the stone at him, at a saracen."

55.245 According to an article in the Irish Times of 30th January 1985,¹ Michael Bradley had told this newspaper:

"I came back into the forecourt of the flats. I saw the body and my nerves got to me. I lifted stones and started throwing. The army were sitting there. A Saracen was on the forecourt at the Chamberlain Street corner. I saw soldiers shooting. I could see soldiers taking aim and shoot."

55.246 In his interview with Tony Stark, Michael Bradley was recorded as saying:¹

"... I automatically with the anger being in me and the bitterness being in me, I looked around, looking around the ground for something to throw. Picking up these two stones, which I had held one in my right and one in my left hand. I threw the stones, I just threw them. I didn't even know where I was throwing them. I just threw them straight in front of me, straight in front of me just. And as I thought when I let the stone go, I went to throw, I felt this heaviness in my right arm, right upper arm and I grabbed my arm such as this. I thought someone had given me a thump, like a thump in the arm and I grabbed the arm like this. I looked over, and there I was in astonishment. The blood was just flowing out of me. Blood was flowing down out of my arm."

55.247 The Derry Journal's Bloody Sunday 20th anniversary publication records Michael Bradley as saying:¹

"I lost the head and looked around to see what I could pick up to throw at the soldiers who were pouring into the area. I grabbed two pieces of brick and was just about to throw them when I was shot. I know I had been hit, but I was still on my feet. At first I thought I had been struck by a rubber bullet, but then I felt a heavy thud on the top muscle of my right arm and saw blood pouring from my hand."

55.248 Michael Bradley said in his interview with Paul Mahon that having seen Jackie Duddy:¹

“... I just looked. And all of a sudden I could hear the name, ‘It’s Jackie Duddy, it’s Jackie Duddy.’ Well when I seen that, I sort of lost everything. I lost control. I was angry, I was frustrated, and I thought, ‘Oh Jesus no, not poor Jackie, it couldn’t be Jackie’ and I looked around me and I found two stones on the ground and I picked them up and I was about to throw them at the soldiers that was directly in front of me. There was a Pig directly in front of me, about 50–60 yards in front of me, say, and I went to throw these two stones and obviously I didn’t get to throw them. The first thing I felt was a terrible, heavy, thud, a massive thud.”

55.249 Although in his written statement to this Inquiry Michael Bradley told us that he definitely had nothing in his hands when he was shot,¹ his evidence to us as a whole was to the effect that he had no recollection of throwing stones but could not say that he had not done so. When asked about what he had said to Tony Stark, he said:² “Well, I do not have any recollection of it, sir, because as I said, everything happened so quick. It was within seconds, but I make no apologies if I did throw a stone.” He also said:³

“... I know I have said on several occasions, sir. It is because, when speaking to so many people, you get the reaction that maybe you did pick up a stone and maybe you did not, and do not forget I was angry, so I had every option to pick up the stone. I possibly could have picked it up, but my recollection today is I do not remember.”

³ Day 94/19

² Day 94/22

55.250 In these circumstances, while we take the view that Michael Bradley was not trying to deceive the Tribunal into believing that he had not thrown stones, and that by the time he came to give evidence to us he had no recollection of having done so, nevertheless his accounts to others in the past lead us to conclude that very shortly before he was shot he had been throwing stones, and that he was probably on the point of throwing more when he was shot.

Where Michael Bradley was taken

55.251 After Michael Bradley was shot, he pulled himself over the wall to the north of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats and stumbled towards the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. From there he was assisted to a house in Joseph Place, where he was put down in the hall.¹

55.252 Much of the evidence was to the effect that the house to which Michael Bradley was taken was the northernmost house in Joseph Place. Michael Bradley so stated in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and more recently in his interviews with Don Mullan² and Jimmy McGovern,³ although in his NICRA statement⁴ he had said that he could not remember exactly which house it was.

⁴ AB66.31

55.253 The evidence of some witnesses suggests that the house to which Michael Bradley was taken was further south in Joseph Place. Mary Anne Murray said in oral and written evidence to this Inquiry¹ that an injured man was carried into the house of Anna Brennan at 13 Joseph Place, and that this was the fourth house from the north end. She heard someone mention the name Bridge but accepted² that the injured man might have been Michael Bradley. Kay Campbell said in her written statement to this Inquiry³ that Michael Bradley was taken into the flat of “Robert Bremen” but that she could not remember where in the north block of Joseph Place this was. In his interview with Jimmy McGovern,⁴ Michael Bradley said that the house into which he was carried was 13 Joseph Place, and that this was the northernmost house, although he had previously believed that it was 1 Joseph Place. He told Don Mullan,⁵ Jimmy McGovern⁶ and this Inquiry⁷ that the house was that of Michael McConnell.

55.254 While there seems to have been a degree of confusion on this point, in our view nothing turns on it.

55.255 Those who assisted Michael Bradley to Joseph Place included Eugene Lafferty¹ and John McIntyre.² Eugene Lafferty said that Michael Bradley was taken to the first house in Joseph Place, and John McIntyre that he was taken to the first or second.

55.256 The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Noel McLoone stated in his report to the Ambulance Corps¹ that he gave first aid treatment to Michael Bradley. In his written statement to this Inquiry² Noel McLoone explained that he knew Michael Bradley and had helped to carry him into the northernmost house in Joseph Place. He applied a shell dressing to the wounds on Michael Bradley's arms.

² AM359.2-AM359.3

55.257 Fr Thomas O'Gara briefly attended to Michael Bradley in a house in Joseph Place before leaving to attend to others who had been fatally injured.¹

55.258 In due course Michael Bradley was taken from the house in Joseph Place to an ambulance in Rossville Street and driven to Altnagelvin Hospital with a number of other casualties. We are satisfied that he is the man described in a statement made on 4th February 1972 by the ambulance driver John Gilchrist¹ as having had injuries to both his arms and his left side, and as having been brought to the ambulance from the hall of the first house in Joseph Place.

55.259 Michael Bradley is shown being moved from Joseph Place to the ambulance in the following photographs, taken respectively by Colman Doyle, Constable Robert S Simpson, Gilles Peress and Larry Doherty.

55.260 We have found no evidence to suggest that Michael Bradley was hit by non-Army gunfire. Since he was more or less facing the soldiers, not far from the low wall in front of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, there is no conceivable reason why a paramilitary gunman should have fired in his direction. We are sure that a soldier shot Michael Bradley.

55.261 There is nothing to suggest, and no-one has suggested, that Michael Bradley was armed or posing or about to pose a threat of causing death or serious injury. Whether his actions could have led a soldier mistakenly to believe that he was or might have been about to throw a bomb is a matter to which we return¹ when we consider whether it is possible to identify the soldier who shot Michael Bradley.

Patrick McDaid

55.262 Unlike the casualties in Sector 2 whom we have discussed above, who we have no doubt were hit by Army rifle fire, we are sure, for the reasons set out below, that while Patrick McDaid was wounded in Sector 2, this was not the result of him being hit by a lead bullet.

Biographical details

55.263 Patrick McDaid was 24 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was then an unmarried man living with his parents in Dunaff Gardens, Creggan. He was a plumber employed by the Londonderry Development Commission.¹

Prior movements

55.264 Patrick McDaid went on the march on Bloody Sunday with his brother-in-law.¹ In several accounts given in 1972, he said that he followed the march down William Street and turned into Rossville Street, where he stood among the crowd for a time. He saw people stoning the soldiers in the area of Sackville Street and Little James Street. The soldiers fired CS gas and baton rounds at the stone-throwers. He then moved up Rossville Street away from the gas, and along Eden Place into Chamberlain Street.²

² AM172.21; AM172.14; AM172.33; AM172.12

55.265 In his statement to the RUC,¹ Patrick McDaid said that when he reached Chamberlain Street he headed towards the Rossville Flats. In another statement made in 1972,² he said that he looked towards William Street but turned to walk towards the Rossville Flats. According to Philip Jacobson's interview note,³ Patrick McDaid told him that he "went to turn left" towards William Street, but could see that there was more trouble there, with clouds of CS gas and the water cannon being used, and decided to turn right instead. In a further statement made in 1972,⁴ Patrick McDaid said that he looked up Chamberlain Street from the end of Eden Place and saw stones being thrown, but did not see any soldiers, and then moved down Chamberlain Street towards the Rossville Flats.

55.266 On the other hand, in his note of his research interview of Patrick McDaid,¹ Tony Stark wrote that Patrick McDaid was at the junction of Chamberlain Street and William Street, and watched the marchers approach Barrier 14 and begin to throw stones. In his interview with Paul Mahon,² Patrick McDaid also said that he reached the corner of Chamberlain Street and William Street. A lot of stones were being thrown but he did not think that there was as much rioting as usually occurred on a Saturday afternoon. After a while he made his way back down Chamberlain Street. As he did so, people started to run past him and he began to run too. Patrick McDaid gave a similar account in his written statement to this Inquiry.³ He confirmed this in his oral evidence,⁴ but explained⁵ that he had remained some distance to the south of the junction of Chamberlain Street and William Street while watching the rioting. He also gave a similar account in his interview with Jimmy McGovern.⁶

55.267 In these circumstances Patrick McDaid's movements before he reached the southern half of Chamberlain Street remain uncertain, but there is no evidence that he took part in the rioting at Barrier 14.

Medical evidence

55.268 Mr HM Bennett, the consultant surgeon at Altnagelvin Hospital, gave the following description of an injury to Patrick McDaid's back in a letter to the RUC dated 7th February 1972:¹

"This patient was admitted about 4.45 p.m. on Sunday, 30th January, 1972 with laceration over the upper part of the left scapula.

Later the same evening he was operated on by Mr. Malhotra who excised the wound edges noting that many carbon particles were present. The wound affected merely the supraspinatus muscle along the back of the left shoulder – i.e. a glancing wound which had been fired as the patient was ducking down and did not indicate a direct hit from behind. The wound was noted to be full of carbon particles which would indicate a fairly close range discharge.

The patient's life appears to be in no danger and he should make an excellent recovery."

55.269 In his notes¹ Mr Malhotra, the surgeon who debrided the wound, referred to "black edges (carbon)" and a "lot of carbon particles".

¹ D841

55.270 The wound is shown in two photographs, not reproduced here, which were taken by Eamon Melaugh in the house in Joseph Place to which Patrick McDaid went after he had been injured.

55.271 Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, reviewed the medical records relating to the injuries sustained by those who might have received non-fatal gunshot wounds on Bloody Sunday. In March 2000, in their report on these cases,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan made the following comments about Patrick McDaid's injury:

"Mr. McDaid had a ragged 3" x 2" lacerated injury over the upper part of the left scapula. No true entrance or exit wounds are described. The wound was surgically debrided by Mr Malhotra who recorded that the wound had 'black edges (carbon) lot of carbon particles'

A letter to the Royal Ulster Constabulary from Mr Bennett, Consultant Surgeon, dated 7th February suggested that the injury was a 'glancing wound' fired as the patient was 'ducking down' which 'did not indicate a direct hit from behind'. He drew attention to the carbon particles which he suggested 'would indicate a fairly close range discharge'. In a discharge summary dated 11th February it is again suggested that this is possibly a glancing wound with tearing of the skin and superficial tissues.

[One of the photographs] shows a wound with sharply demarcated margins. The carbon soiling of the edges cannot be confirmed in this photograph.

Comment

The nature of the projectile(s) cannot be determined and in the absence of any further evidence no meaningful conclusions can be made about the 'black edges' of the wound. There is no evidence that would allow any conclusions to be drawn about the position of Patrick McDaid at the time he received this injury."

55.272 In August 2001, after consideration of the photographs and of enlargements made from the negative of one of them, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan commented in a supplementary report:¹

"The photographs show an, essentially, semi-circular wound with little apparent bleeding. The wound seems shallow, as if the tissues had been sliced.

The top edge of the wound appears to be composed of a flap of skin pushed or folded upward exposing the underlying tissue.

There is a relatively straight margin at the right side and a rather more curved margin at the left.

Conclusions

Even with these photographs, a fresh interpretation of the injury remains difficult, mainly due to the overall lack of reliable information. However, the appearance of the injury suggests that it may have been caused by a thin 'disc' or 'sliver' of material moving rapidly, which has sliced through the skin of the back from a generally right to left direction leaving a flap of tissue at the upper margin. It does not have the appearance of a typical bullet wound.

There are no obvious features visible in the photographs to help explain or identify the 'black particles' described by Mr. Malhetra [sic]."

55.273 In August 2002, having again reviewed the medical records and photographs, and having been invited to consider the possibility that Patrick McDaid had been injured by a modified baton round or by a non-standard object fired from a baton gun, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan made the following comments:¹

"1. We are of the opinion that Patrick McDaid was not struck by a bullet.

2a. Objects that could cause such a slicing wound include a penny (old coinage), other metal discs, the top or bottom plates of a 'U2' type battery etc and we understand that these items were attached to or fired in place of baton rounds in Northern Ireland in the period of time around Bloody Sunday.

2b. The 'black particles' might be explained by the disc being contaminated by either the contents of the battery or by soiling of a penny if it were placed against the charge in the baton round gun. No material suggestive of 'black particles' can be seen in the photographs of the wound.

3. There are no specific features that would allow us to make a positive interpretation and we cannot distinguish between the possibilities noted above and we accept that other possibilities may exist."

55.274 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Shepherd was asked what significance might be attached to the presence of carbon particles around the wound if, contrary to his view, the wound had been caused by a lead bullet. He replied:

“Carbon particles around the wound are commonly associated with a close discharge of a weapon. That would be of significance, but one would need to see them, in this case also on the overlaying clothing and on other points adjacent to the wound for that conclusion to be drawn.”

55.275 However, Dr Shepherd said that he thought that it would be fair to say that he and Mr O’Callaghan were “confident” in the view that they had reached that Patrick McDaid’s injury was not caused by a lead bullet.¹

55.276 Dr Shepherd was asked¹ whether he and Mr O’Callaghan had considered a metal nut as a possible cause of the injury. He replied:

“No, I do not believe we had considered nuts and bolts because I think the appearances of the injury, having considered it, were so suggestive of this flat slicing action that I do not think you could achieve with a nut or a bolt. If there was a flat base, a tin can lid, for instance, placed on the bottom of a nail bomb or some other explosive device or within it, and it flew in the correct way, then that possibly could be one force. But I could find nothing of the appearances of explosive injuries in the injury to the back of Patrick McDaid.”

55.277 Dr Shepherd made it clear that the penny and the U2 battery plates were put forward only as two possible causes of the injury, and that he and Mr O’Callaghan did not exclude others. He said:¹

“That injury is an extremely difficult one to interpret. I think I understand now the mechanism that caused it, but I do not have any particular idea of – other than the broadest terms of a sliver or disc – of the object that actually damaged the skin in that way.”

55.278 We accept the evidence of Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan that the appearance of Patrick McDaid’s wound indicates that it was caused by something other than a lead bullet. We return later to the question of what that object might have been.

Accounts given by Patrick McDaid

55.279 Patrick McDaid gave the following accounts in 1972:

1. a statement taken by Detective Sergeant Cudmore on 4th February 1972 in the presence of a solicitor acting on behalf of Patrick McDaid;¹
2. a statement witnessed by Marjorie Donaghy on 7th February 1972;²
3. an undated statement,³ which the Inquiry obtained from a collection deposited in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland by the solicitor who acted for the next of kin of 12 of the deceased at the Widgery Inquiry. It is similar in form to other statements believed to have been sent to that solicitor on 29th February 1972, in order that he might pass them to the Widgery Inquiry, by an apprentice solicitor in the firm that represented the wounded. We think it highly likely that the statement of Patrick McDaid was taken by that firm in preparation for the Widgery Inquiry;
4. a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 27th February 1972;⁴
5. oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry on 29th February 1972;⁵ and
6. an interview with the Sunday Times Insight Team journalist Philip Jacobson on 7th March 1972.⁶

55.282 In his statement to Detective Sergeant Cudmore, Patrick McDaid described how he had gone along Rossville Street to get away from the CS gas, and then through the Eden Place alleyway into Chamberlain Street, and had headed towards the Rossville Flats. His statement continued:¹

“I was walking up Chamberlain Street whenever crowds started to run pass me going towards the Rossville high flats because somebody had shouted, ‘The Armys coming’. I ran along with this crowd to the top of Chamberlain Street where I slowed down. Two or three youths then appeared from the direction of the Rossville flats and to my right. They were carrying a woman who I now know to be a Mrs. Deery and I saw that she had been shot in the leg. I went over and helped then to carry Mrs. Deery into a house in Chamberlain Street where I tied a piece of scarf around her leg to stop it bleeding. I went outside and started to shout for first aid or an ambulance. I then heard shooting going on in the area and I saw a young fellow fall and I believe his name was Duddy. He fell in the square of the flats but I didn’t see who had shot him. I then moved in along the side of a woman’s house to a wall and I made a run for it over towards an entrance between the flats, that is the flats facing onto Fahan Street and the flats with the shops in them. As I neared the entrance between the flats I bent my head forwards in order to fall to the ground as there was still lots of shooting going on. I then felt a blow to the back of my shoulder and this made me fall to the ground. Another fellow, whose name I don’t know, fell nearly on top of me and he said, ‘You’ve been shot’. This man then dragged me through to the front of the shops and then I was assisted into a maisonette where someone treated my wound.”

55.283 The other accounts that Patrick McDaid gave in 1972 are to similar effect, as are the accounts he gave later. As we have explained above,¹ we are of the view that the young man he described seeing fall was not Jackie Duddy, but could have been Michael Bridge. Patrick McDaid told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not know who this man was.²

Where Patrick McDaid was injured

55.284 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Patrick McDaid described being hit as he bent to take cover behind some steps when trying to reach the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.¹ In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that he was just at the top of three steps that led down to the passage for which he was heading.² According to Philip Jacobson’s note Patrick McDaid told him:³

“i carried on running but just before i got to the end, it goes down over a small wall and i was going to sort of dive over behind it, just then i felt something flick my shoulder.”

³ AM172.34

55.285

In the course of his interviews with Don Mullan,¹ Paul Mahon² and Jimmy McGovern,³ and in his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ Patrick McDaid recounted that at the time when he was hit he had been diving to get behind the wall (which must have been the low wall mentioned in Philip Jacobson’s note) and did not appreciate that the steps were there until after he had landed on the ground. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ Patrick McDaid confirmed this and said that he did not know whether he had jumped over the steps or over the wall beside the steps.

Patrick McDaid marked his position on the following photograph with the long red arrow.¹

55.287 The tip of the red arrow marks where a set of steps led down to the area immediately to the north of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. The top of these steps can be seen in the following photograph, which was not taken on Bloody Sunday.

55.288 Although in recent years Patrick McDaid recalled that he did not feel anything before he was told he was shot,¹ in statements made soon after the event he said that he did recall feeling something hit him. As noted above, in his statement to Detective Sergeant Cudmore he said that he felt a blow to the back of his shoulder, and in his interview with Philip Jacobson he said that he felt something flick his shoulder just as he was about to dive over the small wall. In his statement of 7th February 1972² he said that he was struck on the back left shoulder as he bent forwards to fall. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ he recorded that a bullet hit him on the back of the left shoulder as he bent down, and that initially he thought that the shot had missed him but hit his coat. In oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry⁴ he said that until someone told him that he had been shot he thought that he had just hurt his shoulder. In his undated statement⁵ he said that he dived for cover and felt something hitting the back of his shoulder.

55.289 In these circumstances we are sure that something hit Patrick McDaid in the back of his shoulder as he reached the area of the steps and jumped or was about to jump over the steps or the low wall beside them.

55.290 Earlier in this chapter,¹ in our discussion of the shooting of Jackie Duddy, we have reproduced a photograph taken by Gilles Peress showing Fr Daly and Charles Glenn attending Jackie Duddy in the car park of the Rossville Flats.

55.291 In his written account for the Widgery Inquiry, Gilles Peress described how, having taken that photograph, *“I went over towards the centre block taking cover along the wall past Chamberlain Street. I went to the end of the small wall in the centre of the centre block but the body had been taken away.”*¹ Gilles Peress said that he then took the photograph showing the low wall running parallel to Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, which can be seen above,² where we deal with the wounding of Michael Bradley.

55.292 Gilles Peress told the Widgery Inquiry that he then went back a few yards towards the big concrete wall between the flats, by the children’s playground.¹ He said that “Shooting was heavy at this time”.

55.293 At this stage Gilles Peress took six more photographs. The first he described as showing seven men hiding from gunfire, which was coming from two soldiers, “one at the far corner of the high flats and one at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street”.¹

55.294 Gilles Peress said that he took the next photograph about 30 to 40 seconds later.

55.295 Gilles Peress took four more photographs of the scene at the bottom of the concrete wall. We return to consider these in our discussion of events in Sector 5,¹ to which they are relevant for reasons there explained.

55.296 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick McDaid told us that he did not recognise himself in either of the photographs shown above. In his interview with Paul Mahon,² he said that although it was hard to say, it was possible that he was in these photographs. However, in his oral evidence³ he said that he believed he was the man seen lying on the ground on the right of the group in the first photograph; and it is clear that the second shows the same individual. Furthermore, the balding man seen in the first photograph apparently looking at the back of the man lying on the ground, and in the second holding the right side of that man's back, is Patrick Walsh; and while Patrick Walsh did not recall the incident when making his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ in his interview with Philip Jacobson on 13th April 1972⁵ he described seeing an injured man whose wound looked as it would if flesh had been scooped away with a butter knife.

³ Day 92/117; Day 92/128

55.297 The account Patrick Walsh gave to Philip Jacobson¹ was that he had decided to run from the steps shown in Gilles Peress's photographs to the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats; as he was getting into his stride the youth who turned out to be injured cannoned into him and they both fell; he then felt the youth's back and found a rent in his jacket. Philip Jacobson has added in the notes of the interview that this is shown in "gilles first shot" (ie the first of the photographs shown above), in which "walsh has his hand on mcdaid's back". When he gave oral evidence to this Inquiry, Patrick Walsh's memory had been refreshed to a limited extent and he agreed that the first two photographs showed him with a man who could have been Patrick McDaid.²

² Day 171/30-32

55.298 In the light of the evidence discussed above we have no doubt that the first two of these photographs show Patrick McDaid lying face down on the ground.

When Patrick McDaid was injured

55.299 It seems to us that Gilles Peress's photographs of Patrick McDaid must have been taken very soon after he was injured. This in turn leads us to conclude that Patrick McDaid was injured after both Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley, since at the time these two were injured Jackie Duddy was still lying in the car park, whereas Gilles Peress took the photographs of Patrick McDaid after he had gone along the low wall running along the car park side of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats to find that Jackie Duddy had been taken away.

What Patrick McDaid was doing when he was injured

55.300 There is nothing to suggest, and no-one has suggested, that Patrick McDaid was doing anything except trying to run away from the shooting when he was injured.

What injured Patrick McDaid

55.301 It was submitted by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that Patrick McDaid might "have been hit by a malfunctioning nail bomb".¹ It was submitted by the representatives of the majority of the families that "It is overwhelmingly likely that he was wounded by a projectile fired from a rubber bullet gun"² and that the round had been "doctored" so as to cause an injury of the kind sustained by Patrick McDaid. By "doctored" was meant that some object, such as a razor blade or coin, had been inserted into the nose of the baton round.

55.302 We are not persuaded by either of these submissions. As to the first, no witness who was near Patrick McDaid gave evidence of any explosion close to him. Had a nail bomb exploded in the area, we have no doubt that the Mortar Platoon soldiers who were in or around the entrance to the car park would have heard and reported it. Having considered their evidence, we have already concluded earlier in this report¹ that no nail bombs exploded in Sector 2.

55.303 As to the suggestion that Patrick McDaid was hit by a doctored baton round, it was submitted that of the four baton gunners in Mortar Platoon, Private 013 was “a prime contender” to have fired the round in question.¹ As we have explained earlier in this report,² his evidence was that he had advanced to the forecourt of the Rossville Flats where he fired his baton gun at the crowd in the car park. He did not say that he had fired towards the area where Patrick McDaid was injured. He did fire a baton round into the stairway at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and in our view injured Patrick “Barman” Duffy. However, the distance from this area to where Patrick McDaid was injured was about 100 yards. According to the then current standard operating procedures of 22 Lt AD Regt, baton rounds were ineffective at ranges greater than 50m.³ For this reason it seems to us unlikely that a baton round fired by Private 013 could have been responsible for Patrick McDaid’s injury. In addition, there is no evidence either that anyone saw a baton round hit Patrick McDaid, or that one was afterwards found in the area.

² Paragraphs 26.30–32 and 46.23–24

55.304 Of the other baton gunners, Private 017 was, as we have explained above,¹ in Rossville Street, and there is no evidence that Private 019, who had accompanied Lieutenant N to the Eden Place alleyway, later fired baton rounds in the area of the car park. Private 112 was at the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and did fire into the car park, but doubted whether he would have fired towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, because of the distance.² As with Private 013, it seems to us that even if he had done so, the distance was such that he would have been unlikely to have injured Patrick McDaid.

55.305 As already noted,¹ the Inquiry’s experts were of the view, which we accept, that a live round did not hit Patrick McDaid. In these circumstances, since we do not accept the submission that he was hit either by shrapnel from a nail bomb or by a doctored baton round, it seems to us that the most likely cause of his injury was a piece of debris sent flying when an Army bullet hit the ground or some other object. As Gilles Peress told the Widgery Inquiry, there was heavy Army fire at what must have been about the time Patrick McDaid was hit, and Sergeant O, Private Q and Private R all gave accounts of firing towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, only a few yards from where Patrick McDaid was injured.

Where Patrick McDaid was taken

55.306 After he was injured, Patrick McDaid was helped to a house in Joseph Place where his wound was dressed by Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteers.¹ In his statement made on 7th February 1972² he said that he was taken by the back entrance into the second or third house in Joseph Place. In later accounts he said either that it was the second house,³ or that it was the first,⁴ or that it was one of the first two houses.⁵

55.307 The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Noel McLoone recorded in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he treated a man with a wound in the centre of his back in the second house in Joseph Place. He stated that this man seemed elderly to him but in his oral evidence² he said that this recollection was not completely clear. He said that the man's wound was similar to that shown in Eamon Melaugh's photograph of Patrick McDaid's wound,³ although he could not tell from the photograph whether this was the wound that he had treated.

² Day 175/151-153

55.308 In his report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps,¹ another volunteer, James Norris, described how he and Noel McLoone treated a man with a back wound. He said that the bullet had "scooped a piece out and left an overlap of skin". In his written statement to this Inquiry,² James Norris said that this happened in one of the houses in Joseph Place and that he thought that Michael Bradley had been in the same house. He could not recall the identity of the man with the back wound, but in our view it was Patrick McDaid.

55.309 In due course Patrick McDaid was taken from the house in Joseph Place to an ambulance in Rossville Street and driven to Altnagelvin Hospital with a number of other casualties, including Michael Bradley. We are satisfied that he is the man described in the statement made on 4th February 1972 by the ambulance driver John Gilchrist¹ as having said that he had been shot in the shoulder.

55.310 Patrick McDaid is shown being escorted from Joseph Place to the ambulance in a photograph found in the Sunday Times archive, and in one of Jeffrey Morris's photographs.

Patrick Brolly

Biographical details

55.311 Patrick Brolly was 40 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was a married man who lived with his wife and children in Leenan Gardens, Creggan.¹

Prior movements

55.312 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick Brolly said that he took part in the march on Bloody Sunday and reached the front of the crowd at Barrier 14. When the soldiers came in, he went down Macari's Lane and across the waste ground to Rossville Street, and entered Block 1 of the Rossville Flats by the main entrance at the south end of the block.

Medical evidence

55.313 We have no medical evidence relating to Patrick Brolly's injury.

55.314 In a letter to the secretary to the Widgery Inquiry dated 2nd March 1972,¹ the Patient Services Officer at Altnagelvin Hospital confirmed that Patrick Brolly had received treatment at the hospital for “Lacerations to face”. In her written statement to this Inquiry,² Marie Dunne, the Communications Manager at Altnagelvin Area Hospital, told us that Patrick Brolly’s hospital record contained no reference to injuries sustained on Bloody Sunday, and that it was likely that he had been treated and discharged on the same day, in which case the records of his treatment would have been destroyed.

55.315 This is consistent with Patrick Brolly’s written statement to this Inquiry,¹ in which he said that he was sent home on the evening of Bloody Sunday.

Accounts given by and relating to Patrick Brolly

55.316 Although he made a written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick Brolly was not well enough to give oral evidence. He died on 27th January 2002.

55.317 According to Patrick Brolly’s account,¹ while in the flat of Kathleen Cunningham (she was his brother-in-law’s sister) in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, which he marked as being towards the end nearest Block 1, he saw Fr Daly giving the last rites to a young boy in the car park. As he turned away from the window he heard a loud bang and was hit by a bullet “which came through the window and skimmed the left side of my head just above my forehead. I fell to the ground and was knocked out for a while.”

55.318 Patrick Brolly was taken to Altnagelvin Hospital in the same ambulance as Alana Burke and others but was discharged the same day. Samuel Hughes, the attendant in the ambulance, confirmed that one of the casualties had a cut on his left forehead.¹

55.319 Patrick Brolly’s wife Celine Brolly made a NICRA statement¹ in which she described going into a second floor flat and, from the back bedroom, looking with her husband at the scene in the car park. They could see three soldiers by an Army vehicle and tried to “draw their attention that Father Daly wanted them as the other soldier against the wall was shooting away”. A small blond stout soldier directly behind the vehicle “aimed the gun and my husband threw me to the ground and they fired right in at the bedroom window. My husband [was] hit in the head with glass and a rubber bullet and was unconscious for half an hour.”

55.320 The account given by Celine Brolly in her written statement to this Inquiry¹ differs in a number of ways. She there stated that she and her husband had seen Fr Daly escorting Jackie Duddy out of the car park of the Rossville Flats while two soldiers on either side of the exit into Chamberlain Street were shooting into the crowd. Her husband told her that one of the soldiers was pointing his gun at them, and threw her to the floor. A bullet then smashed the window and Patrick Brolly was wounded on the top of his head. Celine Brolly told us that for a long time afterwards she thought that a baton round had been fired at the window and that splinters of glass had caused her husband's injury. According to this account, however, the hole in the window was only small, and she was later told that the projectile was a lead bullet.

55.321 Kathleen Cunningham was the owner of the flat. Celine Brolly told us that according to one of Kathleen Cunningham's relatives the bullet had lodged in the top of a wardrobe in the sitting room.¹ According to Celine Brolly's NICRA statement² her husband was in the back bedroom when he was hit.

55.322 Celine Brolly told us that Kathleen Cunningham's flat was on the second floor of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats towards the end nearest Block 3¹ (ie much closer to Block 3 than the position indicated by her husband).

55.323 In her oral evidence¹ Celine Brolly, while evidently in a state of some confusion on the point, ultimately reverted to saying that the blond soldier by the vehicle had fired the shot that hit her husband.

55.324 In her written statement to this Inquiry Celine Brolly told us that in the last few years she had suffered a stroke and had also had a nasty fall as a result of which she was unconscious, lost her memory and was unable to speak for some months. She admitted that her recall was therefore not as clear as it had been in 1972.¹ In these circumstances we treat the evidence that she gave to us with caution, though there is no doubt that she was doing her best to help us.

55.325 As Celine Brolly recorded in her NICRA statement, Annie Curran (Patrick Brolly's sister) was also in the flat at the time. In her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Annie Curran told us that from the living room she saw her brother go into the bedroom, and that through the open door she saw him fall with blood streaming from his head. She could not remember whether the bullet had completely shattered the window or just made a hole. They looked for a bullet but could not find one.

Where Patrick Brolly was injured

55.326 As we have explained, in their accounts to us, both Patrick and Celine Brolly described the flat as being in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, though in different positions in that Block. However, Annie Curran told us that Kathleen Cunningham's flat was 3 Garvan Place, on the first floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. She marked the position of this flat on a photograph, reproduced below.¹

55.327 3 Garvan Place was in fact where Annie Curran marked it.¹

55.328 In her NICRA statement,¹ Celine Brolly did not specify which block the flat was in. However, she recorded that she and the others looked out of the living room windows and “saw the Saracen tanks charging up”. They then went to watch from the back bedroom, which was where her husband was injured. Had the flat been in Block 2, Celine Brolly could not have seen the Army vehicles moving in from the front windows, though they would have been visible from the front of Block 1.

55.329 Marie Cregan is Patrick Brolly’s daughter. She was not present when her father was injured, but told us in her written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he had been in a flat in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats when it happened. According to this account, Patrick Brolly initially thought that a baton round had hit him, but in fact it had been a live round. Someone apparently removed a lead bullet from a wardrobe in the flat on the day after Bloody Sunday.

55.330 In the light of this evidence it seems to us that Patrick and Celine Brolly’s recollection that the flat was in Block 2 was mistaken; and we are sure that the flat was in fact in Block 1, where Annie Curran marked it. This conclusion is supported by the evidence of Patrick Friel¹ and Gearóid Ó hEára.²

² AO79.3-AO79.5; Day 406/209-212

What Patrick Brolly was doing when he was injured

55.331 There is nothing to suggest that Patrick Brolly was doing anything that could have led a soldier to believe, albeit mistakenly, that he was either posing or about to pose a threat of causing death or serious injury or doing anything to justify the firing of a baton round.

What injured Patrick Brolly

55.332 As noted above, Celine Brolly originally believed that her husband had been hit by flying glass and a baton round while he was in the bedroom. Annie Curran told us that she and the others looked for a bullet but could not find one, and so she did not know whether a rubber bullet or a live bullet had hit Patrick Brolly.¹ At the same time, in her statement to this Inquiry Celine Brolly told us that there was only a small hole in the bedroom window; and there is the evidence, to which we have referred,² that a bullet was later found in a wardrobe in the living room. We consider that Patrick Brolly was injured in the bedroom, as he, Celine Brolly and Annie Curran have all said.

² Paragraph 55.321

55.333 The matter is complicated by the fact that, according to Celine Brolly's NICRA statement,¹ after her husband had been injured and a "First Aid man" was attending him, she went to the window in the living room, at which point a soldier shot a rubber bullet at her "and Mr McGill who was in the flat helping to attend my husband". Celine Brolly, in her oral evidence to this Inquiry, said that this incident had gone out of her mind.²

² Day 94/66

55.334 James McGill, who is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry, gave a Keville interview¹ in which he said that he went into the flat with a "boy of the Red Cross" after hearing Celine Brolly shouting that her husband was dead, and looked after Mr Brolly. Asked what had happened to Patrick Brolly, James McGill said that a bullet had come through the window, hit Patrick Brolly and then hit the ceiling. He does not appear to have witnessed a later incident of a rubber bullet coming in through the living room window.

55.335 The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Bernard Feeney said in his NICRA statement¹ that he was called to attend to a man (in our view Patrick Brolly) who was "said to be shot in the head" but that on arrival "it turned out that a rubber bullet had come through the window and glass had embedded in his head". In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Bernard Feeney told us that when he arrived at the flat he found a man slumped "on the chair immediately in front of the window which looked out on Rossville Street. People thought that he had been shot in the head, as his head was bleeding. The window had been entirely shot away but as it then turned out, in fact he was simply bleeding from the glass in the window." In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Bernard Feeney said that he knew that a rubber bullet had come through the window because he saw the bullet lying in the apartment.³

³ Day 141/54-55

² AF8.4

55.336 In these circumstances it could be the case that Bernard Feeney wrongly concluded that Patrick Brolly had been injured by a rubber bullet that had come in through the living room window.

55.337 Gearóid Ó hEára told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he was called into a flat from the lowest balcony of Block 1. According to this account Patrick Brolly and others were there. He stood with Patrick Brolly at the front window, overlooking Rossville Street. Patrick Brolly hammered on the window to attract the attention of two photographers, and shouted to them to take photographs of what was happening. The photographers had come from behind two soldiers who were lying on the ground near the ramp at the north-east corner of Glenfada Park North, firing down Rossville Street. Suddenly the window blew in. Patrick Brolly fell into the room with blood on his face. At first those in the flat thought he had been shot in the head, but after he had been cleaned up it turned out that the window had been hit by a baton round at close range. It must have been fired either from the west side of Rossville Street or from the Ferret scout car which was beneath the window. In his supplementary written statement,² Gearóid Ó hEára told us that the two soldiers could have been at the ramp at the south end of Kells Walk, but he did not think so. He believed that Patrick Brolly had been trying to make a photographer take pictures of the soldiers firing. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Gearóid Ó hEára said that the two soldiers were by the ramp at the north-east corner of Glenfada Park North. The projectile, which was later found to have been a baton round, seemed to come straight through the window and hit Patrick Brolly “on the face, glass and all”. He said⁴ that despite other evidence to the contrary he was “pretty clear” that the shot came from Rossville Street. He thought that someone had found the baton round in the living room, or at least that “that was the explanation we then had”.

² AO79.17

⁴ Day 406/209-215

55.338 In our view Gearóid Ó hEára’s memory was playing him tricks. He might have witnessed a rubber bullet coming through the living room window, but in our view this was after Patrick Brolly had been injured.

55.339 In his NICRA statement¹ Patrick Friel recorded that he went into Kathleen Cunningham’s flat after hearing her call out that there was a man dead. “I went into this lady’s flat and there was a man lying on the floor, his face covered in blood with glass splinters stuck in his face and forehead ... I was later informed that an army rubber bullet had been shot through the window.” He did not claim to have direct knowledge that this was so. Patrick Friel is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

55.340 In these circumstances it is not possible to be certain whether a live round or a rubber bullet caused Patrick Brolly's injuries. In the end we have concluded that it was probably a live round. If it had been a rubber bullet, it would have been found without difficulty, whereas a bullet lodged in a wardrobe in another room could well have escaped immediate notice. Bernard Feeney's and Gearóid Ó hEára's evidence of the window being entirely broken, and the former's evidence about seeing a baton round, appear to us to be more likely to relate to the later incident in the living room. We cannot tell whether the round itself hit Patrick Brolly, or whether his injuries were all caused by flying glass. If a live round hit Patrick Brolly, it must have only lightly grazed him, for otherwise he would have been killed or seriously injured.

55.341 The only soldier who admitted firing live rounds into the south-east side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats was Private T. We have considered earlier in this report¹ the evidence relating to the two shots that he said that he fired towards somebody who had thrown down bottles containing acid or some other corrosive liquid.

55.342 In the course of that analysis¹ we noted that the Loden List of Engagements records that this person was on the "top floor" of the flats.² This contrasts with Private T's Royal Military Police (RMP) statement in which he referred to the bomber being on a balcony "some 20 to 30 feet above me".³ Private T told the Widgery Inquiry that the "verandah" on which he saw his target was "about three storeys up".⁴ Private T's trajectory photograph⁵ shows a position on the fifth floor balcony of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Private T told the Widgery Inquiry that both his shots missed and that the second shot hit "the wall a few feet above his [the man's] head"⁶ or "the roof of the building".⁷

55.344 In the end, it is our view that it was probably one of Private T's shots that went through the bedroom window of the flat and caused Patrick Brolly's injury. If we are wrong about this and the injury was caused by a rubber bullet, then in our view this is likely to have been fired by Private 013. In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ this soldier told us that he fired a number of rounds at windows in the Rossville Flats "as these were also good firing positions. I wanted to keep people away from the windows to prevent them shooting at us. I cannot now recall which windows I fired at." He was the only one of the soldiers in Mortar Platoon equipped with a baton gun to admit to firing it at windows in the Rossville Flats.

When Patrick Brolly was injured

55.345 According to Celine Brolly's NICRA statement and her husband's written statement to this Inquiry, Patrick Brolly was injured when Jackie Duddy was still lying in the car park attended by Fr Daly. We take the view that we should not, because of her later health problems, rely on the different account given by Celine Brolly in her evidence to us. Gearóid Ó hEára told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that it was only after he had seen Michael Bridge fall that he went into the flat in which he witnessed the incident in which Patrick Brolly was injured. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that some time elapsed between the two incidents, possibly about five minutes. However, as we have pointed out above,³ we are of the view that Gearóid Ó hEára did not witness Patrick Brolly being injured. Thus all that we can say is that Patrick Brolly was injured after Jackie Duddy was shot but before he had been carried from the car park.

Where Patrick Brolly was taken

55.346 Patrick Brolly said in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he was taken to Altnagelvin Hospital in the same ambulance as Alana Burke. In their statements made on 2nd February 1972,² John Rafferty and Samuel Hughes, respectively the driver of that ambulance and the attendant, said that they carried a man with an injured forehead who came and sat in the ambulance. We are satisfied that this was Patrick Brolly.

Pius McCarron

55.347 Pius McCarron made no statement in 1972 and was unable through ill health to give evidence to this Inquiry. He died in 2004. We have no biographical details of him, save that James Deeney told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that Pius McCarron was about 30 years old on Bloody Sunday. We have no medical evidence either. His name does not appear on a list, submitted to the Widgery Inquiry on 2nd March 1972 by the Patients' Services Officer at Altnagelvin Hospital, of the names of those who had been treated at the hospital for injuries sustained on Bloody Sunday.²

55.348 However, there is evidence that he was injured in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.

55.349 In his NICRA statement¹ Patrick Clarke described running along Chamberlain Street towards the Rossville Flats and seeing, when he reached the car park area, someone lying flat on his back being tended by two people. He continued:

"At this particular point I was able to see British soldiers in firing positions and shooting over the head of the priest at other people who were taking cover behind a low wall at the rear of the steps in the high flats. I made my way round to the passage at the lower intersection of the two blocks of High Flats and here I came upon a member of the Knights of Malta in attendance on another injured person. He asked for assistance. We were unable to determine there and then what was wrong with him as he did not seem to have any wounds. I knew the man to be Pius McCarran [sic]. Another fellow and myself started to carry him to one of the nearby houses, and while doing so some shots were also fired at us, hitting the wall above our heads.

When we got him into a house we found out that he had been hit in the head by a piece of masonry from a ricochet. This he told us himself when he recovered. In that same house was a young girl who had been hit by a Saracen and was in great pain from back injuries."

55.350 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Patrick Clarke told us that he had discovered Pius McCarron at the car park entrance to the small alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. He said that he saw Pius McCarron lying on the ground. He thought that he had been shot dead. He stopped and looked for a bullet wound but could not see one.

He saw the piece of masonry lying next to Pius McCarron. It was a piece of cladding from the wall of the Rossville Flats. He did not see a hole in the wall but saw a gash on Pius McCarron's head. He and someone else carried him to a house in Joseph Place, on the other side of the Rossville Flats.

55.351 Patrick Clarke's oral evidence¹ was to the same effect, though he agreed, on being shown his NICRA statement, that it was likely that he had come across Pius McCarron in the passageway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.

55.352 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Eamonn Baker described running along Chamberlain Street to the Rossville Flats car park, where he saw the body of Jackie Duddy. He then decided to leave the car park through the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. He told us that he saw Michael Bradley shot and helped to get him round the corner into the passage:

"There was another lad in the gap between Block 2 and Block 3 who I knew, called Pius McCarron. He was rushing through the gap trying to escape with his back to a wall and the position where I think this wall was is marked with a C on the attached map (grid reference L18). I have a blurred feeling of shots being fired into this wall at just above head height. Just as the bullets struck the wall, Pius seemed to faint and he slumped to the ground. I am unable to say how many shots hit this wall, but there was more than one."

55.353 The position marked by Eamonn Baker was indeed on the concrete wall below Block 3 just by the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. During his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ he marked with a blue arrow on the following photograph the approximate position where he recalled the bullets striking.² This photograph was not taken on Bloody Sunday.

55.354 James Deeney also gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement¹ he told us that as he ran for the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 he saw Pius McCarron, whom he knew, running ahead of him. “Before we made it through the gap there were, I think, two shots fired. At this point Pius fell in front of me and I thought he had been shot. However, the shots hit the masonry above us, and the dust from the masonry had got into his eyes and stunned him.” In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, James Deeney said that he recalled Pius McCarron stumbling rather than actually falling: *“he was able to go up and carry on, so I think he was okay.”*² He also marked on a photograph where he recalled the masonry had come from,³ which was almost exactly the same spot as that marked by Eamonn Baker and shown above.⁴

² Day 75/132

³ AD27.6

⁴ Day 75/131

Where Pius McCarron was injured

55.355 From the evidence examined above, we have no doubt that Pius McCarron was injured at the entrance to the passageway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.

What Pius McCarron was doing when he was injured

55.356 From the evidence of Eamonn Baker and James Deeney it seems clear to us that Pius McCarron was running away when he was injured. There is no evidence that before this he was doing anything that could have justified shots being fired towards him.

What injured Pius McCarron

55.357 Patrick Clarke recorded in his NICRA statement that Pius McCarron told him that he had been hit by a piece of masonry dislodged by a ricochet. From this and the other evidence examined above we are sure that he was hit on the head by masonry dislodged by a bullet or bullets striking the concrete wall in or near the position shown in the photographs marked by Eamonn Baker and James Deeney.¹

¹ In the Derry Journal newspaper of 29th January 2010 it was reported that Donna McElhinney (daughter of Pius McCarron) had said that her father had been grazed by a bullet on Bloody Sunday, and that this was the cause of a brain haemorrhage that developed a year and half later. At this stage of the Inquiry it is not possible to investigate whether the injury sustained by Pius McCarron on Bloody Sunday was causative of his later illness. In the light of the evidence to which we have referred above, we remain of the view that Pius McCarron was hit by masonry, and not by a bullet.

55.358 We should note at this point that it was submitted by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that a far more likely explanation is that Pius McCarron was “knocked unconscious by a blast from a bomb of some description”.¹ We have found no evidence of any kind that to our minds supports this submission, which is inconsistent with the accounts that we have considered above.

55.359 According to their accounts Sergeant O, Private Q and Private R fired in total six rounds in the direction of the passageway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. According to their trajectory photographs, which we have considered earlier in this report,¹ these shots, unless they hit an intermediate target, would have hit the concrete wall in more or less the very place where Eamonn Baker and James Deeney recalled bullets striking. It is impossible to tell which bullet or bullets may have indirectly injured Pius McCarron. For reasons explained later,² we cannot eliminate the possibility that Private S fired one or more shots in this direction and thus he might have been responsible for the injury to Pius McCarron.

² Paragraphs 64.81–90

When Pius McCarron was injured

55.360 It seems to us from Patrick Clarke’s NICRA statement that he saw Jackie Duddy lying in the car park before he came across Pius McCarron. According to Eamonn Baker, it was after he had seen Jackie Duddy lying in the car park, and Michael Bradley injured, that he saw Pius McCarron slump to the ground. Eamonn Baker,¹ Patrick Clarke² and perhaps also James Deeney³ saw Jackie Duddy lying on the ground in the car park, and yet none said that he had seen Jackie Duddy lifted and carried away before he saw Pius McCarron. In our view it is likely that Pius McCarron was injured before Jackie Duddy was carried away, but after Michael Bradley was injured. The fact that Gilles Peress took no photographs of Pius McCarron is to our minds an indication that he was injured and helped away before Gilles Peress got to the low wall parallel to the side of Block 2 and took the photographs of the men below the high retaining wall beneath Block 3, to which we have referred⁴ when considering the wounding of Patrick McDaid. In our view, therefore, it is probable that Pius McCarron was injured before Patrick McDaid.

² AC64.1; AC64.5

⁴ Paragraph 55.293

Where Pius McCarron was taken

55.361 In his NICRA statement¹ Joseph Doherty described going to the “maisonettes near the flats”, where there were two men carrying Pius McCarron, “and I helped get him into a house. He was unconscious but only from a graze atop his head, he came around alright.” It seems to us that the house to which Joseph Doherty referred must have been one of the maisonettes in Joseph Place, where Patrick Clarke said that he had taken Pius McCarron.

55.362 We have no evidence of Pius McCarron’s movements after he reached Joseph Place. He may simply have gone home.

Chapter 56: The order and position of the known casualties in Sector 2

- 56.1 In the light of the evidence relating to the casualties in Sector 2 that we have considered above, it seems to us that the first person to be shot was Jackie Duddy, soon followed by Margaret Deery.
- 56.2 Patrick Brolly was injured after Jackie Duddy was shot but before the latter had been carried from the car park, as were Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley.
- 56.3 Pius McCarron was injured after Michael Bradley had been shot and was followed by Patrick McDaid.
- 56.4 We do not know how much time elapsed between the first and the last of the casualties, but our overall impression from our examination of the evidence relating to Sector 2 is that it could only have been a matter of a very few minutes.
- 56.5 From the evidence that we have considered above, it is possible to mark on a map the positions of these casualties when they were shot or otherwise injured.

1 Jackie Duddy

Casualties who were wounded in this area

2 Margaret Deery

3 Patrick Brolly

4 Michael Bridge

5 Michael Bradley

6 Pius McCarron

7 Patrick McDaid

56.6

As will have been seen from the photographs reproduced above,¹ anyone looking from the northern side of the car park must have seen Jackie Duddy's body lying there, and also the group carrying his body away. Michael Bridge was on his own in the car park when he was shot and again must have been clearly visible to anyone looking from the north, as must Margaret Deery who was shot near the wall at the back of the houses at the Rossville Flats end of Chamberlain Street and then carried round the corner to 33 Chamberlain Street. Michael Bradley would not have been as clearly visible as a casualty, since he quickly moved back over the low wall that ran parallel to Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. Patrick Brolly probably could not have been seen by anyone in the car park area, while it may not have been apparent that either Pius McCarron or Patrick McDaid had been injured.

57.2 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant N said that he had no recollection of seeing the body of a boy in the car park or of seeing a group of men gathered around what might have been the body of a boy. He said that he had no recollection of seeing the scenes shown in Gilles Peress's and Sam Gillespie's photographs of Jackie Duddy and the group around him,² which we have reproduced above.³ He told us that he did not see anyone other than his own target shot in the leg in the area shown in Sam Gillespie's photograph of Michael Bridge on his own in the car park,⁴ which we have also reproduced above.⁵

Sergeant O

57.4 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that he had no recollection of seeing a group including Fr Edward Daly around a body at any stage, or of the scene shown in Sam Gillespie's photograph of the group round Jackie Duddy. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he had no recollection of seeing Fr Daly attending to a body on the ground. He completely missed the shooting of Jackie Duddy, and the group of people attending to him. His only explanation of this was that he had "tunnel vision" while engaging his first two gunmen and was then concentrating on the location towards which Private S was firing. Private INQ 1918

57.31 Private INQ 1918 gave no evidence of seeing any of the known casualties in Sector 2. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ he said that he had no idea when he first learned that civilians had been killed and wounded.

57.32 As we have observed earlier in this report,¹ none of the soldiers has admitted shooting any of the gunfire casualties in Sector 2. With the exception, perhaps, of Private R, none admitted even the possibility that any of the gunfire casualties could have been hit by accident. When this is added to the fact that, while Lance Corporal V and Private S each said that he saw a body, none of the soldiers has admitted seeing any of the known gunfire casualties and many have asserted that they did not do so, our view, that the evidence of one or more of them must be inaccurate and incomplete, is reinforced. Some at least of them must have seen Jackie Duddy lying in the car park and then being carried away, Margaret Deery shot and being carried away and Michael Bridge out on his own facing the soldiers and then shot in the leg, if not Michael Bradley being shot as well.

- 58.1 We now turn to consider evidence from others (apart from the members of Mortar Platoon) of paramilitary gunmen in Sector 2.

The gunman described by Fr Daly

- 58.2 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Fr Edward Daly, after describing giving Jackie Duddy the last rites and seeing Michael Bridge shot, recorded that he and the others there decided to try to carry Jackie Duddy to a position where he could receive medical aid.¹ His statement continued:

“Just as we were about to get up and make a dash for Chamberlain a civilian gunman appeared at the gable of the last house in Chamberlain Street. I first of all saw the man move along the gable of the house. I thought his movements were strange and suddenly he produced a gun from his pocket ... it was small hand gun and made a very different bang than the soldiers’ rifles ... he fired two or three shots at the soldiers at the corner of the flats ... I think they fired back although I am not sure. I shouted at him to go away or he would get us all killed. He looked round at us lying out in the middle of the car park and then he moved away. After lying for a few more moments, I got up on my knees and was just about to rise when the army opened fire again. We all dived to the ground again and lay there for another while.”

- 58.3 Fr Daly gave a similar account in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry:¹

“LORD WIDGERY: Is that the way you went?

A. That is the way we decided to go.

Q. We see this in the film?

A. There was an incident happened before that. Just as we were about to get up I saw a man with a brown jacket move along this gable here of this house here. He suddenly appeared on the corner of the house and moved along. I thought that his movements were rather strange and suddenly he produced a gun from his right hand pocket of his jacket, or it appeared in his right hand. It was a small gun, a hand gun and he fired two or three shots around this corner here at the soldiers. I think there were two soldiers; there certainly was one who stepped out from time to time. I remember the time he shot this boy here and he fired two or three shots at them.

We screamed at him to go away because again we were frightened the soldiers might think the fire was coming from where we were and he looked around and then he just faded out across here and I do not know where he went to; he must have gone into Chamberlain Street or somewhere. Then we decided to make a dash for it and we got up first of all on our knees and I waved this handkerchief and there was a burst of gunfire that came at the time. I remember we had to lie down again.”

58.4 Fr Daly told the Widgery Inquiry that this was the only firearm that he saw that afternoon “outside of Army hands”.¹

58.5 Fr Daly gave similar accounts of this gunman in:

- an interview with Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team on 16th March 1972;¹
- an interview with the journalist Tony Parker, published in the New Statesman and Society at the time of the 20th anniversary of Bloody Sunday in January 1992;²
- an interview in 1991 with the journalist Peter Taylor, who was carrying out research for the BBC television documentary Remember Bloody Sunday;³
- his written statement to this Inquiry;⁴
- an interview with Jimmy McGovern on 29th January 2001;⁵ and
- his oral evidence to this Inquiry.⁶

⁶ Day 75/36-39

58.6 According to Fr Daly's accounts, the gunman moved along the gable end at the southern end of Chamberlain Street and fired from the corner in the direction of the soldiers. That corner was at the end of the garden wall that extended westwards from the gable end of the last house (number 36) on the west side of Chamberlain Street. An enlargement of one of the photographs taken by Derrik Tucker Senior from Block 2 of the Rossville Flats on Bloody Sunday, reproduced below, shows this gable end and the wall extending from it. It will be noted that on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street there is also a gable end and a wall running eastwards that formed the southern wall of the garden of the last house (number 33) on that side of Chamberlain Street. Many of the witnesses described the wall along which Fr Daly (and others) told us the gunman moved as “the gable end” or “the gable end wall”. We use these expressions in this report, though, as will be seen, in some cases it is necessary to distinguish between the western and eastern gable ends and their adjoining walls.

58.7 Because this gunman was seen and described by Fr Daly, he has become known as “Fr Daly’s gunman”.

OIRA 4

58.8 OIRA 4 gave written evidence to this Inquiry in the form of two statements, one prepared by his solicitors and one taken by the Inquiry.¹ He was called to give oral evidence, but unfortunately fell ill soon after starting to do so and was unable for that reason to complete his evidence then or thereafter. As a result Counsel to the Inquiry could not finish his questioning of this witness, and the other interested parties were deprived of the opportunity to ask him any questions.

58.9 OIRA 4 told us that in 1972 he was a member of the Official IRA Command Staff in the north-west of Ireland, that he was based in Derry, and that he was the Adjutant and Finance Officer.¹ He told us that on Bloody Sunday he was carrying a .32in pistol “to protect myself from the security forces”.²

² AOIRA4.15; Day 394/11-12

“There seemed to be lots of shooting going on and I could see the paras firing but I cannot now recall exactly how many shots they fired because it all happened so quickly. I don’t know whether the paras I could see were firing all of the shots I could hear, but all the shots I could hear were high calibre, heavy duty fire and I took them all to be coming from the army.

I just lost my temper. The Brits were gunning down innocent civilians. I took my short weapon out of my pocket and fired two, possibly three, shots towards the Saracen at point D. I did it out of pure anger at what was happening around me. As I have said, my gun was a .32 calibre, a small, and looking back, pretty pathetic weapon, and I was probably well out of range to do any damage to the paras or their Saracen. I didn’t hear any pings or anything to suggest I hit the Saracen. Not only do I think I was out of range, I don’t even know if I fired well enough to hit it, but I was just firing out of pure frustration.

I never even thought about what was around the corner of the wall (northwards) because I was only concerned with firing at the Saracen and obviously not thinking straight. I wasn’t holding my gun around the corner shooting blindly northwards as has been suggested. I was shooting in a westerly direction towards the Saracen in front of me, and the paras near to the Saracen. I wasn’t aiming at anyone in particular, I was just firing towards where I could see the shooting coming from. Someone told me later that at the end of the wall, around the corner where I couldn't see, were a couple of paras and I know now that I was very lucky not to be seen and to have got out of the whole situation alive.

I don't think the soldiers even noticed me. I have a vague feeling as I stood there that I could feel bullets going over my head, but this might be a false memory. If there were bullets going over my head I think they must have been getting fired at someone else rather than me. If those paras had seen me they wouldn't have been firing over my head – I'd be dead now. They would have shot me to pieces. Even if I'd been caught with a weapon, let alone caught firing it, I would have been shot dead by the Brits. Of course, I didn't think of any of this at the time; I was just so angry and firing out of frustration. At no time did I hear any shots coming from the area around me or above me from the Rossville Flats. Also, I have no recollection of any shots striking anywhere near me, so I could just be imagining this sensation. The only shooting I heard coming from our side that day was mine. I never heard any explosions that day at all.

The minute I had fired I was confronted by people shouting at me to stop. They were yelling at me words to the effect of 'pack it in!' or possibly 'pack it in OIRA 4' if they knew me. I can't remember whether I knew any of the people who shouted to me, only that they wanted me to stop. Even Father Daly seemed to be shouting at me to stop from where he was attending to Jack Duddy. I was still mad as hell but these people brought me to my senses and I put my gun away in my coat pocket. It never left the pocket after that."

² AOIRA4.17-AOIRA4.18

58.11 The "point D" to which OIRA 4 referred in the second paragraph quoted above was, according to the map accompanying this statement, at about the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹

58.12 OIRA 4 told us that just after he had fired he saw Michael Bridge shot. He then went back to try to get into 33 Chamberlain Street, saw a group of people outside wondering what to do, and after a while followed the photojournalist Fulvio Grimaldi and his assistant Susan North, who had been in this group, through the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. According to his account he then left the area and went back to the Creggan.¹

58.13 The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers did not accept that OIRA 4 was Fr Daly's gunman.¹ For reasons that we give below, we consider that he probably was.

58.14 There is no evidence from the soldiers that any or them saw or reacted to a gunman firing from the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Fr Daly had said that he thought, but was not sure, that the soldiers had fired back, but in his evidence to this Inquiry he was more than doubtful that they had done so or that they had even seen the gunman.²

² H5.6; Day 75/36-39

58.15 The first photograph reproduced below is an image of a photograph that was shown in a BBC documentary programme broadcast on 19th April 1972.¹ The reason why it is of poor quality is that the Inquiry does not have in its possession a print or negative of the original photograph. The image was produced from the 16mm film of the BBC programme by Alexis Slater of the Forensic Science Service, who also prepared two enlargements of sections of the photograph, which are reproduced beneath the complete image.² We set out and discuss later in this report³ the evidence relating to the provenance of this photograph. For the reasons there set out we are of the view that the photograph was probably taken by Fulvio Grimaldi, despite his reluctance to admit that he had taken it. We are also of the view that this photograph probably does show Fr Daly's gunman, again for reasons given below.

³ Paragraphs 58.86–108

² E14.001; KS1.43

58.16 When he made his second statement to this Inquiry, OIRA 4 had been shown images of the photograph taken from a videotape of the BBC programme.¹ These were similar to the images produced by Alexis Slater albeit of lesser quality. OIRA 4 told us that he did not “necessarily” recognise himself, but he said: “I know it must be me because of the location.”²

² AOIRA4.20-21

Robert Brady

58.17 Robert Brady died in 1996 and gave no evidence to this Inquiry, but he did give a statement to the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) in 1972.¹ He gave a description of a gunman: “short, about 5’ 7” and he had black hair which just hung over his ears. He was wearing a black checked overcoat with a fur collar and black trousers.” According to this account, the gunman fired two shots from the gable end of the last house in Chamberlain Street towards the waste ground, at a time when Fr Daly was assisting Jackie Duddy. Although OIRA 4 told us that he thought he was wearing a dark blue or black duffel coat,² while Fr Daly described the man he saw as wearing a brown jacket,³ it seems to us that the man Robert Brady saw was probably the one seen by Fr Daly, since both describe a man firing from this position while Fr Daly was assisting Jackie Duddy. We return later in this report⁴ to consider a submission based on the fact that a number of witnesses gave different descriptions of the gunman that they said that they saw.

⁴ Paragraph 58.81

Gerard Grieve

58.18 We formed the same view of the evidence of Gerard Grieve¹ who told us that as he went across the car park from Chamberlain Street to the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, he passed the group that included Fr Daly and looked back to see a civilian with a handgun walking along the gable end wall of Chamberlain Street: *“All I can remember about this man is that he was approximately 5’ 6”, tall with grey hair and a grey moustache. I did not see him fire his gun.”*²

¹ At the beginning of his oral evidence he told us that his name had been misspelt as “Greeve” in his written statement (Day 147/1).

² AG55.4

William Harley

58.19 William Harley told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he watched events from 37 Donagh Place, which was on the top floor in the centre of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. He stated:²

“One final recollection concerns a civilian gunman. I knew him from work but I will not name him. While I was standing at the balcony looking out on the Rossville Flats car park (before going inside my flat as I have described above) I noticed him at the gable end of Chamberlain Street at the south western corner of grid reference M15. His hair was black with a moustache and he wore a black coat and black trousers. I saw him before the armoured car reached point B described above. I remember him looking out around the western corner of the gable end in a northerly direction across the waste ground in Rossville Street. It was only a quick, furtive look after which he stepped back behind the gable end and took out a revolver with a 3" barrel from his right hand coat pocket. With his back to the gable end wall, the man reached out his right hand and bent his wrist around the corner of the wall and fired five or six shots without looking. From my vantage point in Block 2 of Rossville Flats, I watched the five or six shots simply fire into the ground. As far as I can recall, this all happened before I saw any soldiers on foot and before I saw or heard any gunfire from the soldiers. I do not believe that the soldiers were aware of this man or his actions. I then watched the man turn and walk towards the southern end of Chamberlain Street in a south easterly direction.”

² AH36.5-AH36.6

58.20 The grid reference M15 refers to the area of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street and point B is the position where, from other evidence discussed above, Sergeant O’s Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) stopped in the car park. William Harley gave this Inquiry the name of the gunman that he said he saw. This was the name of OIRA 4.¹

58.21 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ William Harley corrected what he had stated about when this incident occurred:

“Q. You say that you saw this all happen before you saw any soldiers on foot and before you saw or heard any gunfire from the soldiers. Had you seen Jack Duddy’s body on the ground before this?

A. May I correct that statement, please?

Q. Yes, certainly.

A. That was a, an error on my part. The incident is exactly as I have described it, but the timing is completely wrong. The reason, at the time there were no soldiers anywhere near that gunman and that is what confused my thinking as to the time. I know now that he fired round that corner while Jack Duddy’s body was lying on the ground.”

58.22 It was submitted by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that this correction by William Harley of his written statement was “simply not credible” and that he (apparently dishonestly) later altered his evidence “to fit in with the accepted explanation”.¹

58.23 We reject this submission. William Harley was in our view doing his best to assist this Inquiry and we do not find it surprising or suspicious that on reflection he changed his mind about when he saw the incident in question. In our view what he was recalling was a sighting of Fr Daly’s gunman.

Maureen Gerke

58.24 Maureen Gerke gave evidence to this Inquiry that “Quite late on” she saw from Block 3 of the Rossville Flats someone flattened against the wall at the gable end of Chamberlain Street with his right hand poking something round the corner into Chamberlain Street.¹ In her oral evidence to this Inquiry² she told us that this was after Jackie Duddy had been taken from the car park. She said that she did not know whether the man had a gun, but did recall people shouting at him to go away.³

² Day 133/91

58.25 Since people were, according to Maureen Gerke, shouting at the man to go away, it is reasonable to infer that they may have seen that he was armed. In our view this man was probably OIRA 4, since on his own account he did not leave this area until he followed Fulvio Grimaldi and Susan North to the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats; and their evidence was that this was after Jackie Duddy had been taken along Chamberlain Street, and after Fulvio Grimaldi had photographed Margaret Deery and Michael Bridge in 33 Chamberlain Street.¹ Maureen Gerke did not suggest that she saw this man fire into Chamberlain Street. We return to her evidence below² after considering the accounts of those who suggested that a gunman fired up Chamberlain Street from its southern end.

¹ M34.1-2; M34.10; M34.59-61; M35.4-7; Day 130/25-37

² Paragraph 58.38

Evidence of shots fired up Chamberlain Street

Bernard Gilmour

58.26 Bernard Gilmour, a brother of Hugh Gilmour who was killed on Bloody Sunday, told us in his written statement¹ that he saw a gunman near Chamberlain Street after Jackie Duddy had been shot. He stated that he knew who the gunman was, described him as “a big, tall fellow wearing a mask” and stated that he saw him fire some shots up Chamberlain Street.

58.27 During his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Bernard Gilmour wrote down the name of this man.¹ It was the same man as William Harley had identified, namely OIRA 4. However, Bernard Gilmour also told us that he could have been mistaken in recalling that the man had fired up Chamberlain Street, and on being shown one of the images of the gunman taken from the videotape of the BBC programme, to which we have referred above, said:²

“Q ... Anyway, you cannot specifically recall now whether he fired up Chamberlain Street or into the waste ground?

A. No. I still get the recollection it was up Chamberlain Street – well, maybe I was wrong, but I thought he was firing up Chamberlain Street. This photograph here, he was firing up towards the waste ground, is he not?

Q. Yes, undoubtedly, if that is the same man?

A. Well, there was only one man there at that wall at the time, so I assume he must have been firing at the waste ground.”

² Day 88/15

58.28 Bernard Gilmour’s description of the gunman’s appearance does not fit OIRA 4’s evidence that he was not a big, tall man and never wore a mask.¹ But the name matches OIRA 4, and in our view Bernard Gilmour probably saw OIRA 4 fire. It seems to us that his recollection of the description of the gunman may well have become distorted over the years. Again, we return to consider below² his recollection that the gunman fired up Chamberlain Street.

² Paragraph 58.38

58.29 In addition to Maureen Gerke and Bernard Gilmour, there are two other witnesses who gave evidence that a gunman fired up Chamberlain Street from its southern end.

Frank Lawton

58.30 Frank Lawton made a Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) statement of which two typescript versions exist.¹ The texts of the two versions of this statement are substantially identical. Frank Lawton then made a further statement, which was witnessed by a Londonderry solicitor.² This statement is undated but was clearly made in 1972. In large part it reproduces the content of the NICRA statement but it contains some additional material. Frank Lawton also gave written and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.³

² AL6.29

58.31 In all the written accounts that he gave in 1972 Frank Lawton said that he had seen no-one other than members of the security forces carrying guns. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he made no reference to, and was not asked about, any paramilitary gunman.¹ However, in his interview for Praxis Films Ltd² in 1991 he told Tony Stark that he had seen an elderly man wearing a long raincoat and a flat cap: “And he was running about and he fired a handgun, as far as I could see, along the street where the soldiers were coming down, and then he disappeared out of sight, I don’t know where he went after that, you know?” This interview continued:

“Q: Where was he when he fired the gun?

A: He was running about in the middle of the – the car park at the back. In actual fact er – as far as I remember Father Daley at the time, he passed – he passed him on his way to the corner of the flats where they were running for cover, you know.

Q: And when he fired at the soldiers, when was this?

A: It was – it was – as I say, it was er – as they were bringing the body across the back of the square, he – he appeared from somewhere. Where he appeared from, I do not know, but he started firing a gun and he fired about five or six shots as far as I could see along the street, and then he disappeared.”

58.32 The note made by Tony Stark’s colleague John Goddard concerning this witness¹ included the following: “Gunman ran along wall, pulled out pistol, idiot, fired at troops, stopped by three people thrown against wall and ‘admonished’. Could have been .22 or even starting pistol.”

58.33 Frank Lawton gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. He said nothing in his written statement¹ about the gunman, but he was asked about him during the course of his oral evidence.² He told us that he did not know why he had not mentioned the gunman in his written evidence to this Inquiry. He said, *“I may not have been asked that question.”*³ He initially told us that he did not know why he had not mentioned the gunman in the accounts that he gave in 1972,⁴ but said that *“I just must have overlooked that particular piece; there was so much going on and there was so much I wanted to get down on that paper while it was still fresh in my mind that I must have just overlooked this particular incident.”*⁵ He told us that his recollection was that the gunman had fired up Chamberlain Street⁶ and, though later in his evidence he agreed that the gunman could in fact have fired from the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street towards the armoured vehicle,⁷ at the end of his evidence he again said that to the best of his recollection the man had fired round the corner of Chamberlain Street.⁸

Peter McLaughlin

58.34 Peter McLaughlin was watching events from 27 Garvan Place in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, moving between one of the bedrooms overlooking the car park on the north side and the living room overlooking Joseph Place on the south side.¹ He gave us the following account in his written statement to this Inquiry:²

“Between five and ten minutes after I first became aware of the shooting, I saw a civilian man armed with a gun inching his way west along the southern gable end of the houses on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street. He particularly stood out because when I first saw him there was a lull in the shooting. There was a group of people sheltering in the fenced play area to the east of the gable end and the gunman was within 60 feet of this group of people. There is attached to this statement marked Photo 3, a photograph of the south gable end of the houses on Chamberlain Street. I saw the gunman along the gable end indicated by the arrow and the fenced play area I have described is in the area marked by the asterisk.

The man seemed to be a fairly young, in his early twenties. I could not see the colour of his hair. He seemed to be wearing casual clothing. I cannot remember the colour of his clothes although he was not wearing anything bright that stood out. I cannot be more specific than that.

I remember seeing the man with a hand pistol in his right hand although I cannot be not certain [sic] about the exact nature of the gun; I do not have the necessary expertise to tell one weapon apart from another. The crowd in the fenced play area also seemed to be aware of him although, it appeared to me, that they had no reason to believe he was armed or any idea of what he was going to do.

As the man reached the south western corner of the gable end he stretched his right arm and wrist around the corner and pointed the gun in a northerly direction up Chamberlain Street. He then fired, to the best of my recollection, between three and five shots. The man did not take aim before he fired. In fact he couldn't see what he was shooting at. The shots he fired were markedly different from those I had heard previously since they produced low velocity sounds rather than the high pitched crack of high velocity shots. He then put the gun away. I thought to myself, 'how stupid,' because this was clearly a danger to the people in the play area. I had a general sense of people in the play area and other people in the flats shouting their disapproval to him. No one moved or went near to him. It would have been dangerous in an open area to move towards a gunman.

I was afraid that soldiers were going to come from any direction towards the gunman and to the other people in the play ground, however, there was no response by the army. I have no recollection of where the man went. I only watched the scene for a couple of minutes."

² AM352.2-3

58.35 On the photograph to which Peter McLaughlin referred, the gable wall is shown, consistently with his statement, as being the one on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street. As we have described earlier in this report,¹ there was a fenced area to the east of this wall, as Peter McLaughlin stated.

58.36 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Peter McLaughlin's attention was drawn to the evidence given by his father, Charles McLaughlin, who had been watching events from the same flat.¹ Charles McLaughlin's evidence was that he had seen a gunman move along the gable wall on the western side of Chamberlain Street and fire from the end of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street into the waste ground.² In other words, his account of this man's movements was similar to that given by Fr Daly. When shown his father's account, Peter McLaughlin agreed that it was possible that he had seen the same gunman as his father, and when asked how certain he was as to which gable wall the gunman was at, he said that he could not be absolutely certain, but that for 30 years it had been his recollection that the gunman was against the east gable wall.³

Joe Nicholas

58.37 We should note at this point that we have considered the evidence of Joe Nicholas, who told us that after he had seen Jackie Duddy lying in the car park and another person shot (in our view Michael Bridge) he saw a man at the south end of Chamberlain Street holding a handgun down by his side, but did not see him fire it or see where the man went.¹ In our view this was probably OIRA 4, who on his own account was in that area at that time.

Assessment of the civilian evidence of a gunman firing up Chamberlain Street

58.38 There are thus four witnesses whose accounts can be said to support the suggestion that a gunman fired up Chamberlain Street, namely Maureen Gerke (though she did not say that she saw the gunman fire), Bernard Gilmour, Frank Lawton and Peter McLaughlin. However, for the following reasons we are not persuaded that there was, or even might have been, any shooting by a man with a handgun into Chamberlain Street from its southern end.

58.39 There is no doubt that a gunman fired from the end of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street, as Fr Daly and others have described. Yet none of the four witnesses mentioned in the previous paragraph (nor indeed any other witnesses) suggested either that the gunman they said they saw fired from two different positions, or that one gunman fired from one position and another from a different position. It seems to us that had either of these things occurred, one or more of the witnesses would have been bound to have seen and remembered it. There is no obvious reason why any of the witnesses should have wished to conceal one incident while being prepared to tell us of the other. At the same time, apart from the position in which the four witnesses put the gunman, their accounts of him firing from a corner and of the reaction of the people near him are similar to the descriptions given by Fr Daly and others. Finally, none of the witnesses gave an account in 1972 of a gunman firing up Chamberlain Street. In the light of these matters it is our view that the four witnesses saw the same gunman as Fr Daly, firing from the western end of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street as Fr Daly described, but that over the years their recollection of where he was has become faulty.

58.40 For these reasons we reject the submission made by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that OIRA 4 may have fired an additional shot or shots up Chamberlain Street. However, we should note that in addition to relying on the evidence of Maureen Gerke (who they mistakenly suggested gave evidence of seeing a man firing up Chamberlain Street), they also relied on some evidence given by the BBC cameraman Cyril Cave about a sound heard at a certain point in the soundtrack of his footage.¹

Cyril Cave

58.41 In Cyril Cave's oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ he gave these answers:

"Q. Is there anything in the previous clips of film that you may be able to spot from them but that we cannot simply by looking at the film?

A. In this sequence?

Q. No, in the whole sequences that I have been showing you?

A. There is one sequence where the troops are running across ground where there is a zip of a bullet which could have been incoming fire. There is only the one zip, you can hear it very close and I would assume that in Father Daly's statement, he saw a man fire a revolver and that would coincide with that particular sequence in my film. That could have been – I did not notice it until the Inquiry sent me out a clip of the film and I was running through it – because I never had a clip of the film and I was running it through and I noticed this, so I ran it very slowly and there is one, just zip and – as soldiers run across. We would assume the soldiers would not have been firing at their own men, somebody was firing at them. That is the only occasion I heard any or seen any incoming fire – I did not see it, I did not know it existed until I saw that clip.

Q. I wonder if we can identify whereabouts – what is the piece of film you are talking about. Have you seen that as we were looking through it?

A. Yes.

Q. I wonder if you could stop it when we get there.

A. The troops are running towards the camera.

Q. Let us run it forward, please.

(Video played)

A. There, that was the zip. You will have to run it back, it comes earlier in the sequence.

Q. It is just after the sequence with Father Daly. I for my part heard what could be called a zip on the film: that is not a defect in the soundtrack, is it?

A. (Witness shaking head)."

58.42 A little later in his evidence,¹ he was asked:

"Q. So we have the picture complete, Mr Cave: your understanding and your confirmation of the order of your film is that the whining shot we hear with the whine of the shot on the film, that of course takes place on the film and took place in your recollection of where the film was, after Father Daly is already escorting the body of the young man carried down Chamberlain Street?"

58.43 Cyril Cave replied: "That is correct."

58.44 As for Cyril Cave himself, as noted, he said that he was not aware of the sound that he identified as an incoming shot until he was sent a copy of his footage by the Inquiry.¹ The evidence that he gave in 1972 contains no indication that he was aware of an incoming shot while he was standing in Eden Place filming the soldiers running towards him.² In his written evidence to this Inquiry he stated that while he was filming on the (Eden Place) waste ground he was only aware of shots fired by soldiers: "There was no incoming fire that I witnessed."³

58.45 We consider first the question of when this part of the film was taken.

58.46 Cyril Cave's colleague John Bierman edited the BBC footage in 1972, and although the latter told us that he thought that it was in the correct sequence,¹ it is clear that in fact the surviving material does not always follow the order in which the footage was filmed on Bloody Sunday. For example, after the section under discussion here, there are shots of soldiers taking an arrested civilian away towards William Street, at a time when APCs were parked in Rossville Street.² By the time Cyril Cave came to film the soldiers running towards him in Eden Place, those vehicles had moved south to the area immediately north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

² Vid 1 05.35

58.47 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Cyril Cave stated that he filmed events in the following order:

- He filmed Fr Daly leading the group carrying Jackie Duddy up Chamberlain Street and into Harvey Street.
- The BBC crew ran out of film and asked a lady in Harvey Street if they could change their magazines. This they did in her house, where they were also given a cup of tea. Cyril Cave estimated that they were in the house for five to eight minutes.
- They returned to Harvey Street and filmed some ambulances in the Eden Place and Chamberlain Street area.
- They filmed an Army ambulance with a red cross on it as it reversed along Rossville Street.
- He noticed, and then filmed, some prisoners who were being lined up against a wall at Kells Walk.
- Then they filmed “troops running across the waste ground on the east side of Rossville Street ... more or less opposite where we were at Eden Place, towards us in Eden Place”.²

² M13.6

58.48 It is in the last of these clips that the sound can be heard.

58.49 Cyril Cave told this Inquiry that in one respect he did not think that the sequence of events that he gave in 1972 was correct. He believed that he changed the magazine of his camera (and re-attached a filter to the lens) before taking the shots of Fr Daly.¹ He told us² that the filter on his lens became detached when he was in Columbcille Court, as a result of which he was unable to film properly, and that he was only able to fix it in the house of the lady in Harvey Street. He said in his oral evidence³ that without the filter he “could not have taken any pictures because colour bands from the pictures would have been all completely wrong”, although he said⁴ that if something had been happening he might have filmed it anyway, “knowing basically that it probably was useless”.

² M13.25-M13.26

⁴ Day 141/144-145

58.50 In our view Cyril Cave was right to correct the sequence of events he had given in 1972, and that the visit to the house in Harvey Street must have preceded the filming of Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy, and of the soldiers coming across the waste ground. It seems highly unlikely that the crew would have spent any more time in the house than the minimum necessary to change the film and re-attach the filter if they had just seen Fr Daly with the group carrying Jackie Duddy, from which they would have known that a major news event was in progress. Finally, John Bierman, the reporter in the team (to whose evidence we refer below), told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that the crew went into the house of the lady in Harvey Street before they filmed Fr Daly. They spent about five minutes in the house, recovering from the effects of CS gas and having a cup of tea. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² John Bierman said repeatedly that they would not have spent time having tea with the lady if they had known that the soldiers had entered the Bogside and that live rounds were being fired, and that it was his “very clear recollection” that they had gone to the house in Harvey Street before they saw Fr Daly with the group carrying Jackie Duddy.

² Day 111/17-23; Day 111/43-45; Day 111/76-80

58.51 According to Cyril Cave, it was before taking the portion of film under discussion that he saw and filmed two ambulances. According to his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ one of the ambulances was pointing up Chamberlain Street towards the Rossville Flats. This must have been the ambulance with registration number 4491 WZ in which Margaret Deery and Michael Bridge were taken from 33 Chamberlain Street. That registration number is faintly visible in the BBC footage² which would appear to show the ambulance moving forward into Harvey Street after having reversed into Eden Place to turn. According to the second entry in the emergency calls log,³ that ambulance had reached the scene of the emergency at 4.27pm and arrived back at Altnagelvin Hospital at 4.50pm. According to the same statement, Cyril Cave saw the other ambulance moving from Eden Place across the waste ground and out of sight. This would seem to be the ambulance with registration number 7449 WZ shown entering the waste ground in the BBC footage.⁴ According to the fourth entry in the emergency calls log, that ambulance was called at 4.30pm to deal with two injured people in Rossville Street, and reached the scene of the emergency at 4.37pm. Hence if Cyril Cave was correct in saying that he filmed the ambulances before he filmed the soldiers coming across the waste ground, then the section of the soundtrack which it is suggested may record the sound of an incoming shot cannot have been recorded before about 4.35pm. We have found nothing to suggest that in this respect Cyril Cave's sequence of events was incorrect.

Jim Deeney

58.52 Jim Deeney, the sound recordist who accompanied Cyril Cave throughout the day, made a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, in which he too stated (in our view, for the reasons given above, mistakenly) that it was after seeing Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy that the team went into the house in Harvey Street and were there for "about 10 minutes".¹ He did not mention the sound under discussion in his written evidence to either Inquiry.² He did not give oral evidence to us.

John Bierman

58.53 John Bierman, the reporter in the team, told the Widgery Inquiry that he could hear "sporadic" rifle fire when they were filming from Eden Place, but did not say from which direction it came, and did not refer to hearing any pistol fire.¹ John Bierman told the Widgery Inquiry² that "Soon after" filming Fr Daly "we moved down to the bottom of Eden Street. We looked across the open ground that f[ronts] the Rossville flats. There was still sporadic rifle fire. We filmed some more scenes from this position, as the film shows."

58.54 In his written evidence to this Inquiry John Bierman stated that while they were at Eden Place, "we kept hearing the 'crack, crack, crack' of live fire, although because we were still partially surrounded by the houses it was not possible to tell where it was coming from".¹ In his oral evidence, which was given earlier than Cyril Cave's oral evidence, he said that once he moved on to the waste ground he formed an impression that the firing was coming from the direction from which the soldiers had deployed, and that he did not hear any shots going in the opposite direction at any stage.² John Bierman gave the following evidence in relation to the portion of film that Cyril Cave believed recorded an incoming round:³

“Q. This is a shot of a whole lot of soldiers going down the back of Chamberlain Street to the south, which looks as if it was taken by your cameraman. Again, apart from what we can see for our own eyes on the film, is there anything you can add to what appeared to be going on at this stage?”

A. Not really, no.”

Private INQ 5

58.55 Private INQ 5, a signaller in 7 Platoon, C Company, identified himself as one of the soldiers running towards the camera in the BBC film footage.¹ His evidence to this Inquiry was that he had moved on to the Eden Place waste ground after being ordered through Barrier 14, but was forced to take cover because of heavy incoming fire.² We consider his evidence about this firing later in this report,³ where we conclude that he ran across the Eden Place waste ground at a late stage and did not come under fire.

The absence of stationary Army vehicles in Rossville Street

58.56 No stationary vehicles are present in the parts of Rossville Street shown on the relevant part of the film footage. Army vehicles can be seen moving north. This shows that by the time the events were filmed, Support Company had moved its vehicles to the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

Assessment of the evidence relating to the sound on the film clip

58.57 On the basis of the evidence to which we have referred above, we are of the view that this part of Cyril Cave’s film was taken after Fr Daly went along Chamberlain Street with Jackie Duddy; and indeed after all the casualties had been sustained in Sectors 2, 3, 4 and 5, which was before any ambulances arrived. As we describe later in this report,¹ some minutes after these casualties had been shot, there was further shooting by soldiers in Sector 3 at a flat on the western side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. On the soundtrack of the BBC film footage of the soldiers running towards Chamberlain Street, about a second after the sound that Cyril Cave believed might have been an incoming shot, a loud bang can be heard. In our view this bang was probably the sound of one of those shots.

58.58 There remains the question as to whether Cyril Cave was correct in his belief that the sound under consideration could have been that of an incoming round. As to this it is noteworthy that none of the BBC team, including Cyril Cave himself, said either in 1972 or in their evidence to this Inquiry that they had heard an incoming round. It seems to us that had the sound on the film clip been that of an incoming round, one or more of the team would have heard it and mentioned it in their evidence. Furthermore, by this stage soldiers of C Company, as we discuss later in this report,¹ are likely to have reached the south end of Chamberlain Street and gone into number 33 where they made arrests. It seems to us unlikely that a paramilitary gunman would have fired from that area with soldiers close by. While we cannot exclude the possibility that the recording equipment did pick up the sound of an incoming round, it seems to us more likely, despite Cyril Cave's denial, that this was a fault in the recording.

Summary of the civilian evidence of a gunman

58.59 We have already commented on the fact that witnesses have given differing descriptions of the gunman that they said they saw at or in the vicinity of the gable wall or garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. These differing descriptions led to the submission that there may have been more than one gunman operating in the area of the Rossville Flats car park.¹ For reasons already given, it is our view that there was only one incident of firing, namely as Fr Daly had described, and not another incident of firing into Chamberlain Street from its southern end. However, it is convenient to bring together at this point the descriptions that the witnesses gave of the gunman that they said they saw. We include in this list not only descriptions given by witnesses whose evidence we have considered above but also accounts given by other witnesses which in our view clearly relate to a gunman or possible gunman at the gable wall or garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street.

Consideration of the evidence describing a gunman

58.81 If these various descriptions are taken at face value and in isolation from the rest of the evidence, it could be said that they indicate that the witnesses saw a number of different gunmen. But once the rest of the evidence of these witnesses is taken into account, together with the reasons we have given for concluding that those who thought that a gunman had fired or pointed a gun into Chamberlain Street were mistaken, we are left only with accounts that in our view show that the gunman seen by Fr Daly was probably the only gunman in the area of the gables at the end of Chamberlain Street. To our minds the explanation for the differing descriptions lies in the fact that people were trying to recall details that they had seen in the middle of fast-moving and frightening events.

58.82 We should add that we have considered the accounts relating to a gunman in Sector 2 given by Patrick Walsh,¹ Gerard Doherty,² Daniel McGowan³ and Joseph McKinney.⁴ All these seem to us to relate to the gunman seen by Fr Daly, but not to add materially to the evidence that we have discussed above on this topic.

⁴ AM304.24; X4.26.22

58.83 In these circumstances we have concluded that the gunman seen by Fr Daly was probably OIRA 4.

58.84 According to Fr Daly, the gunman fired two or three shots after Michael Bridge had been injured and as Fr Daly and the others with him were about to stand up and carry Jackie Duddy away.¹ According to OIRA 4, he fired two or possibly three shots before Michael Bridge had been injured.² We have also considered the evidence of others as to the number of shots fired and when they were fired. Some gave accounts to the same effect as Fr Daly, though others gave differing accounts both with regard to the number of shots fired and when they were fired.³ We have considered all this evidence but have no doubt of the accuracy of Fr Daly's evidence both as to the number of shots fired and when they were fired. OIRA 4's evidence, unlike much of that given by Fr Daly, was only given many years after the event and in our view he was mistaken in his recollection that he fired before Michael Bridge was injured.

58.85 There is no evidence from any soldiers of Mortar Platoon that any of them saw a gunman approach the corner of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street or fire from that position. This is understandable if, as OIRA 4 indicated was the case, he did not go beyond the corner, for although in the background of the first of the photographs shown above¹ at least one soldier can be seen further along the back (western) wall of the gardens of the Chamberlain Street houses, OIRA 4 would have been out of that soldier's sight so long as OIRA 4 remained around the corner of the wall.

58.86 We now turn to consider the provenance of this photograph.

58.87 On 19th April 1972, following the publication of the Widgery Report, the BBC broadcast a programme on Bloody Sunday as part of its 24 Hours documentary series. In the course of the programme, as we have explained above,¹ a still photograph was displayed of a man said to be in possession of a handgun against the southern wall of the garden of 36 Chamberlain Street. The programme linked this man with the gunman seen by Fr Daly.

58.92 This Inquiry obtained, principally from the records of the Widgery Inquiry and the archives of the Sunday Times,¹ copies of several photographs known to have been taken by Fulvio Grimaldi. Some of these photographs were displayed in the BBC programme and appear to match the descriptions given in the list. However, the photograph described as “Gunman by wall” was not among those obtained by the Inquiry.

58.93 The 24 Hours documentary was produced by David Mills. He recalled, in his evidence to this Inquiry, that Fulvio Grimaldi had taken his film to Dublin to be processed, in order to ensure that none of his material could be seized by the authorities in Northern Ireland. Although David Mills had in the course of his research for the documentary seen some of Fulvio Grimaldi’s photographs in Londonderry, he had thought that one or two might be missing. He had therefore visited the offices of RTÉ (Radio Telefís Éireann) in Dublin, where the photographs had been developed, and found there a copy of the photograph of the gunman, which he used in his documentary. David Mills recalled that he took the print, possibly the only one, and that he might have used it without speaking to Fulvio Grimaldi, who he feared would object to the photograph being broadcast. He could not recall what happened to the print afterwards, and neither the BBC nor RTÉ has been able to assist on this matter.¹

58.94 David Mills’ evidence was that the photograph had been taken by Fulvio Grimaldi, who would have been paid a royalty.¹

58.95 John Barry, the editor of the Sunday Times Insight Team, also gave evidence to this Inquiry that Fulvio Grimaldi had taken, but had then withheld, the photograph of a gunman at a gable end wall:¹

“So far as I recall we found only one sequence of photographs showing an IRA gunman on that day. A pair of pictures showed a man holding a pistol while standing against a gable-wall abutting the car-park of the Rossville Flats. In the later of the images he appeared to be aiming the pistol round the gable-end. These came to light when we noticed photographs were missing from a sequence supplied to us by an Italian photographer named Fulvio Grimaldi. We demanded his contact sheets and identified the missing images. We had skilled photo-technicians work to enlarge and lighten these but they remained too murky to be reproduced in The Sunday Times.”

58.96 During his oral evidence John Barry told us that he became aware of the missing photographs after he was told by another photographer that Fulvio Grimaldi had a photograph of a gunman that he had not published.¹ John Barry remained confident that there were two photographs, the first being the one that appeared in the BBC documentary. He recalled that in the second the gunman had advanced towards the corner of the wall: *“I recall you could see the pistol in profile jutting beyond the end of the gable wall; it was quite a striking image.”*²

² Day 193/98

58.97 Although the photographs were not used in the Sunday Times Insight article of 23rd April 1972, reference was made to them. The journalists quoted Fr Daly’s account of seeing a man firing with a revolver from the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street, and then wrote: *“The photographer, Fulvio Grimaldi, also saw this gunman, and took a picture of the gunman. He also is certain that the gunman did not appear until after the Army had killed [Jackie] Duddy and wounded others.”*¹ When asked how confident he was that his attribution of the photographs to Fulvio Grimaldi was correct, John Barry said that while he could have been mistaken, after 30 years, had he been relying solely on his memory, the text of the article made him sure that his team would not have made “so elementary an error so close to the time”.²

² Day 193/99

58.98 Material from the Sunday Times archive suggests that John Barry’s colleague Peter Pringle interviewed Fulvio Grimaldi during their investigation.¹ Peter Pringle himself recalled meeting him a few days after Bloody Sunday.² The notes of the interview do not refer to a gunman at the wall of 36 Chamberlain Street, and make no reference to the existence of a picture or pictures of such a man.³ However, Peter Pringle did record that: *“He [Fulvio Grimaldi] took many pix ... The material is in Dublin and he cannot get at it before the weekend.”*⁴ As well as being consistent with the evidence of David Mills, this would suggest that at this point the Sunday Times journalists had not seen Fulvio Grimaldi’s photographs, and it may be the case that they had not by then been told that Fulvio Grimaldi’s shots included one of a gunman.

² Day 190/45

⁴ M34.21

58.99 Peter Pringle could not help this Inquiry as to why the Sunday Times article attributed the photograph of the gunman to Fulvio Grimaldi.¹ Philip Jacobson, another of the Insight journalists, was similarly unable to assist further; he said that he did not realise that the attribution of the photograph had been questioned.²

² Day 191/151-152

58.100 There are, therefore, two pieces of documentary evidence dating from 1972 that attribute the photograph to Fulvio Grimaldi. The evidence to this Inquiry of David Mills and John Barry suggests that Fulvio Grimaldi took the photograph but wished to withhold it from publication. Indeed, John Barry's evidence was that there was a second photograph, although his article only referred to "a picture" in the singular, and David Mills apparently only found one. Peter Pringle's interview notes provide circumstantial support for David Mills' account of how he discovered the photograph in Dublin.

58.101 There are two further indications that Fulvio Grimaldi took a photograph of a gunman on Bloody Sunday. In his book Eyewitness Bloody Sunday, which was published in 1997, Don Mullan wrote that Fulvio Grimaldi took a photograph of a man who fired a revolver from the gable end of Chamberlain Street. Susan North, who was with Fulvio Grimaldi on Bloody Sunday, told this Inquiry that she had seen, at the time of the Widgery Inquiry, a photograph taken by Fulvio Grimaldi, which she thought had shown a man with a pistol in his hand among a crowd of people. She was shown the photograph used in the 24 Hours documentary, but said that this was not the one that she had in mind as the gunman in the photograph that she recalled was not alone. She said that she had not seen the 24 Hours photograph until an image taken from the videotape of the programme was shown to her when she came to make her written statement to this Inquiry.¹

58.102 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Fulvio Grimaldi said that he did not see a gunman in the Rossville Flats car park, and he did not know whether he had taken the photograph.¹ He stated that if he had, in fact, taken that photograph it was not intended to be specifically of that man: "If I took that picture, I would liken it to taking a picture of an ant in a flowerbed. The photographer takes a picture of the flowerbed before him and on magnification, one can observe an ant."² Fulvio Grimaldi said that he did not accept that the photograph, whoever took it, showed a gunman, and added that if he had been aware that he had photographed a gunman he would have said so in his statements.³ He denied that he had taken the photograph and then held it back.⁴

³ Day 131/43

⁴ Day 131/47

58.103 Fulvio Grimaldi accused the Sunday Times of “utter and total manipulation” in attributing a photograph of a gunman to him.¹ He also criticised the accuracy of Peter Pringle’s interview notes.² He accepted that Susan North and Don Mullan had been told or had come to believe that he took a photograph showing a gunman, but denied again that he was aware of having done so.³

³ Day 131/44–47

² M34.74–75

58.104 Despite his denials to this Inquiry, when he was interviewed by the researcher Paul Mahon on 5th July 1998, Fulvio Grimaldi had agreed that he had taken a photograph of a gunman at a wall.¹ Paul Mahon told Fulvio Grimaldi that this photograph had “mysteriously gone missing from the public records office”, but that he had a copy of it “taken off the television”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Paul Mahon confirmed that this was the photograph shown in the BBC documentary. He said that he believed that it had gone missing from the Public Record Office because a certain numbered photograph was “classed at the PRO as missing”. It is true that the records of the Widgery Inquiry deposited in the Public Record Office included a set of photographs taken by Fulvio Grimaldi, numbered from 1 to 26, and that photograph 11 is recorded as missing. However, we do not know in what circumstances that photograph came to be missing, nor is there any proof that the missing photograph was the photograph of the gunman. Later in his interview of Fulvio Grimaldi, Paul Mahon referred again to the photograph of the gunman and asked Fulvio Grimaldi whether he had seen him fire. Fulvio Grimaldi said that he had not.³ The transcript of the interview continues:⁴

“Paul Mahon: Were you aware that he had a gun, is that why you took the photograph?

Fulvio Grimaldi: I don’t think so, I don’t remember.

Susan North: No, you wouldn’t have been.

Fulvio Grimaldi: But, I don’t think that I was aware, I only remember that people grabbed a person with a revolver.

Susan North: Mmm.

Fulvio Grimaldi: And said ‘you’re mad’, ‘you’re crazy’ and ‘fuck off’ and things like that.

Paul Mahon: Right, right so that’s why you took his picture?

Fulvio Grimaldi: No. I think this happened afterwards because he's still moving undisturbed or as other people might have noticed that and they really grabbed him and...

Paul Mahon: Right.

Fulvio Grimaldi: ... and shouted at him and...

Paul Mahon: Did you take that photograph before you took the photograph of Jack Duddy?

Fulvio Grimaldi: I don't think so, I think that this picture was taken on the way after Jack Duddy and moved back towards...

Paul Mahon: Chamberlain Street?

Fulvio Grimaldi: No, uh yes, it could be that we moved back first to Chamberlain Street then we moved back to the back of the flats and that's the time when I tried to climb the wall and she said 'don't, don't'.

Paul Mahon: Yeah right."

³ X4.48.52-53

² Day 412/52-53

⁴ X4.48.53

58.105 Fulvio Grimaldi was not asked about this interview during his evidence to this Inquiry, as the Inquiry was not in possession of the recording of it at that time.

58.106 Later in this interview, Fulvio Grimaldi explained how he went to Dublin in order to process his photographs, before returning to Londonderry.¹ This is consistent with the evidence of David Mills and the interview notes of Peter Pringle, to which we have referred above.

58.107 If Fulvio Grimaldi did not take the photograph used by 24 Hours it is not clear who did. Two other photographers were present in the Rossville Flats car park at the relevant time, Gilles Peress and Sam Gillespie. However, there is no evidence to suggest that the photograph should be attributed to either of these men. Gilles Peress told this Inquiry that he had never seen the photograph before,¹ and both he and Sam Gillespie said that they were not aware of any gunman firing in the manner described by Fr Daly.²

² WT6.72; Day 213/113-119; Day 142/90

58.108 In our view the evidence considered above establishes that Fulvio Grimaldi took the photograph; and that it was of a gunman at the garden wall at the end of Chamberlain Street. We have earlier concluded that the gunman was probably OIRA 4. It is possible that Fulvio Grimaldi also took another photograph or photographs of the gunman. We formed the impression from his evidence that he was anxious not to be associated with any photograph of paramilitary gunmen.

The gunman described by Monica Barr

58.109 In 1972 Monica Barr was living with her husband in the ground floor flat of 36 Chamberlain Street. As already noted, this is the house at the south-western end of that street.

58.110 Monica Barr gave a Keville interview.¹ She also gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.²

² AB16.1; Day 148/1-45

“Well I did not see the man stepped back then whenever the soldier fired the bullet the man went right on back and I did not see the man come out again I took it that the bullet hit the man and the soldier he came away then. Then there was a couple of soldiers then came round the side of the personnel carrier towards just near the window where we were standing. One of them I saw lift a rifle and I said to my husband he’s going to shoot he’s going to shoot but at the same time I just kept hoping you know I was just imagining things and he lifted the rifle and fired and this was the first shot that I saw fired and then I heard a scream and I took it then that someone had been hurt then there was a few other shots fired then by the soldiers and there was a soldier then on the far side of the personnel carrier from me and he was more to the back of the personnel carrier and he looked up towards the flats and he fired three shots. Well then after this there was no one whatsoever at the windows and after this there was a couple more shots fired and we heard a lot of screams and he fired three shots. Well then after this there was no one whatsoever at the windows and after this there was a couple more shots fired and we heard a lot of screams and we just took it people were being hurt because normally a few times down there we hear gunfire and people are that used to it they do not scream unless someone has been hurt. Then on the window above the eighth floor I saw a man at one of the windows and he had a gun in his hand and he fired down one shot and he had his hand back in the window and he went to lift his head back and one of the troops fired a shot which landed above his head up at the top of the window and then I happened to look around and there seemed to be a lot of troops around. Over opposite in the garage opposite there was troops lined along there and they had no protective helmets they had just on their berets with no other shots being fired towards them.”

² Paragraph 55.303

58.112 In her written statement to this Inquiry¹ Monica Barr told us that she had a recollection of seeing a hand stick out of an open window on the eighth floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats: “I think the flat was approximately in the middle of Block 1 but I am unable to be more precise.” She continued:

“The window, as I recall it, was tilted inwards at the top and outwards at the bottom. The hand which was holding a pistol appeared from over the top of the window pane and pointed downwards. I remember one shot being fired from the pistol. The shot had a ‘pop’ sound and was certainly different from the other shots I had heard earlier. Almost immediately I heard a ‘crack’ and saw the wood at the top of the window frame splinter where I presume a bullet fired by a soldier below the flats had hit. At around the same time the hand disappeared. I think there may have been net curtains over the window as I am unable to describe the face or shape of the individual who fired the shot from the Rossville Flats.”

58.113 In her oral evidence to this Inquiry, Monica Barr gave a similar account of seeing this gunman, though she said that the gunman was on the ninth, not the eighth, floor.¹ The difference is important, because on the eighth floor the windows were set back behind the balcony. In her Keville interview, Monica Barr had described the gunman as being “on the window above the eighth floor”, which to our minds is likely to be a description of a window on the ninth floor.

58.114 Monica Barr was closely questioned by counsel for the majority of the families and wounded, who among other things suggested that what she had heard was the firing of a handgun much closer to where she was and that it would have been difficult for anyone to have fired over the top of one of the tilting windows of the Rossville Flats. Monica Barr maintained that she had seen a gunman fire from the position she had described:¹

“Q. What you said, to be fair to you in your evidence today, was that you heard – this pop seemed to occur, it seemed to happen when the pistol came out of the window. When you say it ‘seemed’ to happen, can we take it from that that you are not sure that it did happen at the same time?

A. Well, it is how I remember it now.

Q. What I have to ask you is whether it is possible that you heard a pistol shot when you were looking out of your window; you saw a man in the upper flats, on the top floor of Rossville Flats, perhaps with a camera, perhaps with a bottle. You saw a soldier fire in that direction and you formed the mistaken impression that the man or the hand at the window was firing a gun when in fact it was a man just under your own window; is that possible?

A. No, it is not possible. I saw the man on the top floor with a gun and I heard the pop when he fired.”

58.115 The representatives of the majority of the families and wounded submitted that Monica Barr could “only be mistaken in her recollection”.¹ They drew attention to the difficulty of firing over the top of the tilting window, and to the fact that no soldier in Mortar Platoon claimed to have seen or reacted to a gunman at the top of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

58.116 Monica Barr’s original account was given soon after the event, when her recollection would have been fresh; and there is no doubt that she believed that she had seen a gunman fire one shot from the ninth floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. However, she also believed that a soldier had fired back almost immediately and hit the window. We have considered whether this could have been one of the shots fired by Private T, though he was not aiming at this window; but the difficulty with this possibility is that earlier in the account that Monica Barr gave in 1972, she described a soldier firing up at the flats, which might well have been Private T. It is the fact that no soldier of Mortar Platoon claimed to have seen or reacted to a gunman at the top of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats; and no soldier apart from Private T admitted firing up at Block 1. Had a soldier seen and fired at a gunman in this block he would in our view have reported that he had done so. It is of course possible that Monica Barr was mistaken in believing that a shot from a soldier had hit the window in question, but if she was so mistaken, this casts some doubt on the accuracy of her account as a whole.

- 58.117 In the end we are left in doubt as to whether Monica Barr did witness a gunman firing from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. It is possible that she did so, but to our minds it is equally possible that she was mistaken.
- 58.118 If Monica Barr did see a gunman, it is clear from her 1972 account that the gunman only fired after the soldiers had opened fire in the car park area. On the basis of Monica Barr's evidence there is thus no question of the shot fired by this gunman having precipitated what happened in that area.
- 58.119 No-one has admitted firing a shot from a window in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and no paramilitary organisation has accepted responsibility for the firing of such a shot.

The gunman described by Billy Gillespie

The Sunday Times notes

- 58.120 According to interview notes compiled by Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team and dated 6th April 1972:¹

"billy gillespie, 22. bro of above. helped to carry mrs deery into 33 chamberlain st with michael bridge. went with bridge into the car park between the flats and saw duddy shot. he threw some stones at the soldier on the corner of the flats and saw bridge shout at the army and get shot.

n.b. he also claims that he saw a gunman on the 5th floor of the flats with an M1 carbine. he says the gunman fired seven shots and had three shots returned at him by the army. he went up to see if there were any bullet marks where he had seen the man and there weren't any. Story suspect and as yet unconfirmed but as far as i know we haven't had statements from people who came out of chamberlain st. at that end as the army moved into the car park area. let's face it no one in their right minds would have done."

58.121 “Bro of above” indicated that the subject of this note was the brother of Daniel Gillespie, who sustained an injury in circumstances that we consider later in this report,¹ when discussing the events of Sector 4.

58.122 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Billy Gillespie told us that he had no recollection “at all” of talking to journalists and denied both that he had seen a gunman on the fifth floor of the Rossville Flats and that he had told journalists that he had.

58.123 The evidence of Peter Pringle satisfies us that this note is an accurate record of what he was told by Billy Gillespie.¹ This conclusion is supported by the fact that other details in the note, such as the reference to Billy Gillespie having helped to carry Margaret Deery into 33 Chamberlain Street, correspond with the evidence that Billy Gillespie gave to this Inquiry.

58.124 Peter Pringle was asked during the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry why he thought at the time that the account of the gunman was suspect. His answer was:¹

“Well, one of the reasons is that we had never heard a story like this, we did not hear another one like this. The second reason is that firing from flats was a very exposed position and I think I have a note on that. That is reflected in the last sentence here, ‘let us face it, no-one in their right minds would have done this’.”

58.125 Notwithstanding this, in the Insight article published by the Sunday Times on 23rd April 1972 there was the following passage:¹

“... one civilian, whose name we agreed to withhold, told us that he did see someone with a carbine firing at the soldiers from the 5th floor of the flats. The man fired seven shots and three were returned at him. This gunman corresponds exactly with the man at whom Soldier O said he fired three shots and hit.”

58.126 It seems to us that the civilian referred to in this passage must have been Billy Gillespie, since Peter Pringle told us that he heard the account from only one source.

58.127 As to the comment that the gunman corresponded exactly with the man at whom Sergeant O said he fired three shots, and whom he said he hit, there is nothing in Billy Gillespie's account to indicate that the gunman was hit, nor anything in Sergeant O's accounts to the effect that the gunman fired seven shots, though in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he had said that the gunman was "triggering it off fairly fast".¹ At the same time, it is noteworthy that, according to Sergeant O, the gunman at whom he fired three times after seeing the flash of his weapon was on the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, which was on the same level as the fifth floor of Block 2. That level was also regarded as the fifth floor in Block 3, although because that block was built on higher ground it was in fact only the third level, as can be seen in the photograph below.²

² AG27.6; GEN3.14

58.128 There is therefore some correspondence between the account given by Sergeant O of seeing a man with a weapon like an M1 carbine or small rifle on the lower balcony of Block 3 and firing three shots at him, and the account given by Billy Gillespie to Peter Pringle.

58.130 It is true that the gunman would have been in a very exposed position, but the same could be said of the gunman seen by Fr Daly. It is also true that there is no other civilian or journalistic evidence to support what Billy Gillespie said, but we do not accept that this should necessarily lead us to reject it, though it leaves us, like Peter Pringle, less than certain of its accuracy. On his own account,¹ Billy Gillespie was a rioter and witnessed some of the shootings in Sector 2, and to our minds, though possible, it is unlikely that he would have invented an account of seeing a paramilitary gunman firing at the Army.

58.131 In these circumstances we have concluded that Billy Gillespie probably did see a gunman firing from the lower balcony of Block 3; and that his account to Peter Pringle supports the evidence given by Sergeant O in this regard.

Whether Eileen Collins saw the body of a gunman

58.132 At this point it is convenient to deal with a submission made by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers to the effect that Eileen Collins saw the body of this gunman.¹

58.133 According to an article written by Tony Parker and published in the New Statesman and Society at the time of the 20th anniversary of Bloody Sunday in January 1992,¹ Eileen Collins, using her maiden name Eileen Shiels, told him:

“Where we lived, my flat was on the first floor of the block, so I went round and up the back staircase to it. Inside the children were all safe: when he’d heard the shouting and shooting, the young boy looking after them’d made them all take shelter in the sort of boiler cupboard we had. All of them were wild with excitement, they wanted me to let them go out on the balcony and watch what was happening. I thought ‘Well I’ll look out of the windows first to see if it’s safe’. And still to this day I can’t tell what I saw without the horror of it coming back to me. Right there outside my window lying on the balcony was a dead man, crumpled up with blood all over him. I straight away pulled the curtains together and told the children they weren’t to open them: then I ran out of the door along the corridor, to go down and see if I could fetch someone to help. At the bottom of the staircase at the front was another body lying. I had to step over it to get out, and it was someone I recognised: it was young Tony Doherty’s father, who I knew.”

² GEN3.13

58.135 In her oral evidence to this Inquiry, Eileen Collins told us that she had no recollection of talking to Tony Parker and that what he had written about her seeing a dead man outside her window on the balcony was “lies”: “... there was no body outside my apartment.”¹

58.136 In our view Eileen Collins was interviewed by Tony Parker and may well have given him an account of seeing a dead man outside her flat. However, we doubt the accuracy of this account, so far as the position of the body is concerned.

58.137 In her written evidence to this Inquiry¹ Eileen Collins had told us that on her way into her flat she saw an injured man behind a door receiving attention from an Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer, but was unable to say whether he had been shot. In her oral evidence² she said that she did not think that he had been shot, but was not sure.

² Day 161/157-158

58.138 As we discuss later in this report,¹ one of the casualties in Sector 3 was Kevin McElhinney, and there is evidence to the effect that after being shot and mortally wounded in Rossville Street he was taken into the lobby at the south-west end of Block 1, and then carried up the stairs leading from that lobby by the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer James Norris and the photographer Liam Mailey.²

58.139 In order to reach her flat, Eileen Collins told us that she went up these stairs and crossed the walkway to Block 2.¹ In none of her accounts did Eileen Collins suggest that she saw more than one casualty outside or near her flat.

58.140 There are two other considerations.

58.141 Firstly, as is explained more fully later in this report,¹ following a ruling of the Tribunal dated 1st June 2001,² the Inquiry sought and obtained access to a substantial quantity of intelligence material held by the RUC and other agencies in relation to witnesses or those who might become witnesses in the Inquiry. Relevant documents obtained in the course of this exercise were disclosed to the interested parties subject to such redactions as were necessary to comply with our obligations under the Human Rights Act 1998. A small amount of this material related directly to the events of Bloody Sunday but the great majority was relevant only to the extent that it contained information about the membership of paramilitary organisations in Londonderry at the time of Bloody Sunday and in the months thereafter. The nature of the material is such that we believe it to be highly likely that if a paramilitary gunman had been killed on Bloody Sunday some reference to his death would appear in it. However, there is no indication in any of the material provided to us that such an event occurred.

58.142 Secondly, we accept the evidence given by Fr Daly that it amounted to “offensive nonsense” to suggest that there could have been secret burials of people killed by the Army on Bloody Sunday.¹ We do not believe that the local community would have considered it desirable or acceptable to try to conceal such deaths, nor do we believe that it would have been possible to conceal them.

- 58.143 In these circumstances we are of the view that the body that Eileen Collins saw was that of Kevin McElhinney; and that what Tony Parker recorded may have been the result of misunderstanding by him or a degree of exaggeration by her, or a combination of both these things.
- 58.144 It remains to say that there is no evidence of any kind that suggests any link between the body Eileen Collins said that she saw near her flat, and the gunman that Sergeant O said that he had shot towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, a location that was over 60 yards away, and four floors up, from Eileen Collins' flat in Block 2.

The gunman described by Gunner 030

- 58.145 Gunner 030 was a soldier in 22 Lt AD Regt. According to his first Royal Military Police (RMP) statement, timed at 2343 hours on 2nd February 1972,¹ he was on duty at the Platform on the City Walls. This Platform is shown on the following map and photograph.

58.146 In this statement Gunner 030 recorded that he was on duty with Sergeant 001. He stated that he heard the sound of baton rounds and gas cartridges being fired, which seemed to be coming from the area of Rossville Street/William Street: “By about 1620 hrs the crowd had built up to about 2–300 people situated around Rossville Flats. At this time the sound of baton guns being fired grew closer.” Gunner 030’s statement continued:¹

“Suddenly I heard one (1) low-velocity shot. I then heard a number of low-velocity shots. It was then I saw a youth standing firing a pistol. He was in between Blocks Nos 1 & 2 Rossville Flats. Taking cover slightly between Block No 2. There were about 10–15 people crowding around him, therefore I did not shoot for fear of hitting a member of the crowd. The gunman was wearing a brown jacket, faded blue jeans and he had long dark well kept hair.

At this time I saw a body lying on the floor by the telephone box, at the far end to the right of No 2 Block. I had heard no high velocity fire at this time.”

58.147 Gunner 030 gave another account in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹

“Suddenly I heard one low velocity shot. I said to soldier 001 that this was not a baton round but a low velocity shot. Then I heard a number of low velocity shots and I could see a youth who was holding what I could clearly see was a pistol from which I could see puffs of smoke coming in the gaps between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. I could not shoot him as there was a crowd of about 10 to 15 people gathered round him. I could see quite clearly that he was wearing a brown jacket, faded blue jeans and he had long dark well kept hair, he was about 75 yards from me and I had a good view of him from the platform.”

58.148 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, there was the following passage:¹

“Q. Then the low velocity shots – where did they appear to come from?

A. I could not say exactly where it came from.

Q. You cannot say right, left, or –

A. I believe it would be to my right.

Q. Did you observe its strike or not?

A. No, sir.

Q. After that shot did you hear any more?

A. Yes, sir, I heard a number of low velocity shots coming from my right.

Q. How long after the first ones?

A. Just a matter of seconds, sir.

Q. And how many more came?

A. I would say five or six rounds, sir, were fired.

Q. Could you see anyone who was firing?

A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you see?

A. It was a youth, sir.

Q. Where about?

A. Between Blocks 2 and 3, sir, of Rossville Flats.

LORD WIDGERY: You are seeing it from my side, are you not?

A. Yes.

LORD WIDGERY: Just show me where he was.

The WITNESS: I was about there, sir, and he was between there that he came through, from behind.

Mr. GIBBENS: The south-east corner.

LORD WIDGERY: Is he inside?

A. There is a small wall round there about three feet high and he was behind there, sir.

Mr. GIBBENS: What was he doing?

A. He was firing towards William Street.

Q. Was he firing up the side, parallel with Block 3 of Rossville Flats? I do not quite understand.

A. Something like that. If you are between Block 2 and 3 you can see William Street.

Q. I am afraid I do not quite understand. This is William Street here.

A. Yes, that is William Street. He was between here.

Q. Take the pointer and give us his line of fire.

A. His line of fire would be from about there across that way.

LORD WIDGERY: He was inside the courtyard, was he?

A. Yes, this small wall here. He was behind that wall kneeling down.

Q. You were looking at it through that alleyway between the two blocks?

A. Yes.

Mr. GIBBENS: That is behind the small wall inside the courtyard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see what he was using to fire with?

A. I seen a small pistol, sir, but what type it was I do not know.

Q. Could you see further into the courtyard, what he was firing at?

A. No, sir, but after I looked back I seen a body lying there. It was a civilian, but whether he had been shot or not I do not know.

Q. Was it the same man lying, a body there, or was the man still upright?

A. He was lying down there.

Q. The body was lying down, but what happened to the man with the pistol?

A. Well, I was going to shoot, but there was too many round him, you know. In case I hit a civilian, an ordinary person, I did not shoot. After that I turned round and he was gone.

Q. Had you seen him before he went or after he went?

A. This was before he went, sir.

Q. You saw the body before he went?

A. Yes, sir."

58.149 Later in his oral evidence Gunner 030 told the Widgery Inquiry that he had heard self-loading rifle (SLR) fire "after the first set of pistol shots", coming from what he described as "the back end", by which he said that he meant the area of William Street and Little James Street.¹

"Q. Did you hear any SLR fire from right inside the area of the forecourt of the flats?

A. No.

Q. You didn't?

A. I couldn't see.

Q. You could not identify any as coming from that area?

A. No.

Q. How far away would you be from the corner of blocks 2 and 3?

A. To there?

Q. Yes. About 30 yards?

A. Forty to fifty yards.

Q. I think the measurement has been given before as thirty metres, but would it be around forty metres?

A. Yes sir.

Q. You were forty metres, or so, from the corners of the inter-section of blocks 2 and 3?

A. Yes.

Q. And at no stage did you identify SLR fire coming from that area?

A. It was coming from the back end."

58.150 Gunner 030 told the Widgery Inquiry that he was within shouting distance of an Army Observation Post (OP) which was equipped with a radio,¹ but that at the time neither he nor Sergeant 001 shouted any report of seeing the man with the gun. He said that this was because he and the sergeant were too busy looking at other places, but agreed that there could hardly be anything more important than reporting gunmen at the time they were supposed to be present. He said that he had reported seeing the gunman to his officer later on, at a time when ambulances had arrived. Gunner 030 also told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not know that soldiers had come down Rossville Street and were in the area; and that the first soldiers he saw were in Glenfada Park North.²

¹ This was called Charlie OP. We refer to Charlie OP again in the context of Sector 5, where we provide a photograph (paragraph 116.29). ² WT16.30-31

58.151 Gunner 030 gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.¹ In our view he had little clear recollection of events. He told us himself that he might have mixed up events that had occurred on Bloody Sunday with other things that had happened when he was in Northern Ireland.² In view of this, we consider that his evidence to us, where it differed from the accounts that he gave in 1972, is unreliable, though, as we point out below, there are significant difficulties with those accounts. He did say to us, however, that he stood by the accounts that he had given in 1972.³

³ Day 366/82

² Day 366/81

- 58.152 From his vantage point on the Platform, Gunner 030 would have had a limited view through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, and would have been able to see a portion of the low wall running parallel to the northern side of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats and a small portion of the car park. This can be demonstrated from stills taken from the Channel 4 Secret History documentary Bloody Sunday, which was made by Praxis Films Ltd and first broadcast on 5th December 1991. By the time this documentary was made, the Rossville Flats had been demolished, and so the makers used archive footage, from which the two stills reproduced below have been taken. The date on which this footage was filmed is not known, but the physical features shown in it appear to be as they were on Bloody Sunday.

Low wall

58.153 Since Gunner 030 would not have been able to see the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats from his vantage point, it seems that his reference to this gap in his RMP statement must have been an error for the gap between Blocks 2 and 3, which, as can be seen, he corrected in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

58.154 According to his RMP statement, it was “at this time” that Gunner 030 saw a body lying “on the floor” by the telephone box.¹ This must be a reference to the telephone box that was situated at the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. There was a body in that position, that of Bernard McGuigan, who was shot dead in Sector 5. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Gunner 030 recorded that he had been shown photographs of the body of Bernard McGuigan lying near the telephone box, and he confirmed that this was the body that he had seen. Representatives of some of the soldiers suggested that this identification might not be reliable,³ but we see no good reason for doubting it. However, as will be seen later in this report,⁴ this shooting took place after all or virtually all the events of Sector 2. Nevertheless, on an examination of the whole of the evidence that he gave in 1972, we consider it possible that Gunner 030 may not have intended to say that he saw this body at exactly the same time as he saw the gunman. It must be borne in mind that all the events of Sectors 2 to 5 took place within a few minutes.

⁴ Paragraphs 118.207–213 and 227–261

58.155 It was submitted on behalf of the majority of the families and wounded that we should reject the account Gunner 030 gave of seeing, through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, a man firing a pistol in the direction of William Street.¹

58.156 There are significant difficulties with the evidence that Gunner 030 gave in 1972. He did not report seeing the “pistol man” at the time. His sergeant, Sergeant 001, who was near him on the Platform, made no mention of seeing this pistol man, or that Gunner 030 told him that he had seen one. Lieutenant 227, who was stationed at Charlie OP,¹ gave no evidence of any report and did not recall him being on the Platform.² Major 159, the Battery Commander, gave no evidence of a report being made to him. In his RMP statement, Gunner 030 described the pistol man as standing between the blocks of the Rossville Flats; while in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that the pistol man was kneeling behind a low wall, which would appear to be the low wall running along the side of Block 2. Gunner 030 does not appear to have heard any high velocity firing in Sector 2, of which there was on any view a large amount, though this may be explicable on the basis that the Rossville Flats might have dampened the sound of high velocity fire and made it harder to recognise or appear to come from further away. He gave accounts of hearing and seeing Thompson sub-machine gun fire in Glenfada Park North, which we consider later in this report,³ but which in our view cannot be correct for the reasons we give there. He gave no account of seeing or hearing military firing from the south-east corner of Glenfada Park North, of which, as we explain later,⁴ there was a considerable amount, even though this was more or less directly in front of his position.

¹ B2184

³ Paragraphs 119.128–141

² Day 371/116; Day 371/118

⁴ Chapter 119

58.157 In these circumstances we have grave doubts about the reliability of Gunner 030’s accounts of seeing a pistol man firing in Sector 2. Had he done so, we consider that he would have immediately reported what he had seen, but he made no report. We return to the evidence of Gunner 030 when considering the events of Sector 5,¹ where we express the view that Gunner 030 (and Sergeant 001) were probably keeping their heads down most of the time, but were loath to admit this was what they had done; or, or as well, were simply wholly muddled and confused about what they saw and heard. We should add that we have considered the possibility that Gunner 030 saw the same gunman as Fr Daly, firing from the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. However, since his accounts are not consistent with the other evidence of that incident, which we have discussed above, and since we are satisfied that he would not have been able to see the garden wall from his vantage point, this possibility can be rejected. We should also note that the possibility exists that Gunner 030 saw the gunman that, according to Susan North, Fulvio Grimaldi may have photographed, with a pistol in his hand among a crowd of people, as we have discussed above, but this is no more than speculation.

58.158 We have concluded that it would be unwise to rely on the accounts given by Gunner 030 of seeing a pistol man firing. It remains to note that Sergeant O's evidence was that he had seen a man firing a pistol from behind a car, not from behind a low wall and not surrounded by other people; and no other soldier who was deployed in Sector 2 gave evidence of seeing a man with a handgun in a crowd as described by Gunner 030.

The evidence of Patrick Gerard Doherty

58.159 Finally, we have considered the account given by Patrick Gerard Doherty, who told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that on seeing the APCs come in, he had run from the waste ground, through the Eden Place alleyway, down to the southern end of Chamberlain Street. There he saw someone carrying a woman who he afterwards learned was Margaret Deery. He then ran to the area beneath Block 3 of the Rossville Flats. From there he saw soldiers firing rubber bullets into the crowd in the car park. He told us that at this stage, which according to his account was before Jackie Duddy had been shot and before live rounds had been fired:

“There were two other boys standing in between the walls with me. Suddenly, one of them shouted ‘look, there’s a sticky bastard and he’s got a short’. By this he meant that there was a member of the Official IRA carrying a handgun. I immediately started looking into the crowd in the middle of the car park, particularly at peoples hands but I couldn’t see anyone carrying a gun. The boy who had shouted was hysterical and moved to climb over the wall into the car park – I remember the other boy grabbed his collar to restrain him.”

58.160 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Patrick Gerard Doherty told us that the boy had not indicated where he had seen the man with the handgun.¹

¹ Day 85/10; Day 85/54-55

58.161 In our view Patrick Gerard Doherty was mistaken in his recollection of the order of events, as he acknowledged might be the case.¹ For the reasons we have given earlier in this report,² we are of the view that Margaret Deery was shot soon after Jackie Duddy, so that at least two live rounds had been fired by the time Patrick Gerard Doherty saw her. Thus we reject the submission of the representatives of a number of soldiers that his account indicates that there was a man in the car park holding a handgun at a stage before Jackie Duddy was shot.³ In our view, given the other evidence that we have considered above, Patrick Gerard Doherty probably heard someone drawing attention to OIRA 4, the gunman seen by Fr Daly, at or about the time when OIRA 4 was moving along the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street after the shooting of Margaret Deery.

The man seen in Gilles Peress's photograph

58.162 We have earlier in this report shown the photograph taken by Gilles Peress of the group round the body of Jackie Duddy. We reproduce below an enhanced copy and enhanced detail of this photograph, prepared by Alexis Slater.¹

58.163 It was submitted on behalf of the majority of represented soldiers that the crouching man was holding “what may well be a firearm”.¹ Billy Gillespie and Donal Deeney identified this man as Brown, and OIRA 4 told us that he was quite sure that Patrick Brown would never have had a gun.² Patrick Brown made a written statement to this Inquiry,³ in which he expressed the view that the crouching figure may have been him. He was not asked whether he had anything in his hand.⁴ Patrick Brown gave no oral evidence to this Inquiry. He was due to do so in February 2001 but was too ill to attend. He died on 3rd May 2001. These representatives submitted that the man was “clearly removing something, and the probability is that it was a weapon, the only thing that would need removing”.⁵ Representatives of other soldiers submitted that the photograph raised the probability that a weapon of some kind was held by the man in the photograph, and that it is at least a realistic possibility that the weapon being held was a firearm.⁶

⁶ FS8.1150

58.164 While it appears that Patrick Brown might have been holding something, we are not persuaded either that it was a firearm or that he was trying to remove something. In our view it is unlikely that anyone would be handling a firearm in full view of soldiers only a few yards away.

Chapter 59: When the Support Company vehicles moved forward

59.1 It is convenient to deal at this point with the question of when Support Company vehicles moved from Rossville Street to the area at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. As we have explained above,¹ this question is relevant to the issue of the time at which the portion of the soundtrack of the BBC footage was filmed on which Cyril Cave thought that an incoming round was audible.

59.2 In the BBC footage of the soldiers running across the waste ground towards Eden Place, two Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) can be seen in the background travelling north up Rossville Street.¹ These in our view were probably the two empty APCs of Machine Gun Platoon, which were sent by Major Loden to retrieve members of that platoon from Abbey Taxis.² Although it is not clear from his evidence when these vehicles were moved back, it seems to us from his account that this was after he had ordered his vehicle to be moved from Rossville Street to the area of the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

59.3 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Major Loden gave this account:¹

“As soon as we came under fire, the situation changed and the priority shifted from making arrests, to taking cover and defending ourselves from the attack of the gunmen and bombers ... I returned to my vehicle with my crew and ordered the driver to move the vehicle forward to a position of cover against the Northern Wall of Block 1 Rossville Flats. For a period of about 10 minutes, during which the majority of the firing occurred, the Platoon Commanders were unable to report, as they themselves were actively engaged in repelling the attacks made against them.”

¹ B2221

59.4 As we have discussed elsewhere in this report,¹ according to Major Loden this was soon after he had arrived in Rossville Street and had come under low velocity automatic gunfire, though for the reasons given, we are of the view that he was mistaken about coming under fire.

59.5 In his supplementary statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Major Loden described stopping at the junction of Pilot Row and Rossville Street. He did not refer in that statement to any later movement of his vehicle but did say,² “During the time I was in the Rossville Flats area I saw no identifiable gunmen firing but of course my concern is with the control of the company rather than for observing for possible attackers. In any event from my position by the north wall of the Rossville Flats I had very limited observation.”

¹ B2241

59.6 This again suggests that his vehicle was moved to the north end of Block 1 before the shooting had finished, although he drew no distinction between shooting in Sector 2 and shooting in Sectors 3, 4 and 5.

59.7 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Major Loden said that he moved his vehicle forward to the cover of Block 1 after hearing about 15 rounds of low velocity fire. According to him shooting then continued for about another ten minutes. He said that soldiers were firing into the “funnel” of the Rossville Flats (between his position and Chamberlain Street) during that time. He went on to describe seeing a body in the car park and regarded that body as a casualty of the soldiers’ firing.¹ He also referred to hearing firing which, he thought, had come from the Rossville Flats, although the time at which this is said to have occurred was not explicitly stated.²

59.9 This again suggests that firing continued in Sector 2 after Major Loden’s vehicle had moved to the cover of Block 1.

59.10 In the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Major Loden was shown a number of photographs and pieces of film footage taken when his command vehicle was still in Rossville Street. He agreed that certain arrested civilians were probably taken away before any incoming fire started. He also agreed that by the time his vehicle was moved, soldiers must have moved to Kells Walk and around the low walls of the ramp at the south end of that block, civilians were no longer visible at the rubble barricade, and

Michael Kelly had probably been shot behind the rubble barricade.¹ He also said that he had a vague recollection of talking to Warrant Officer Class II Lewis before the vehicle was moved.² Warrant Officer Class II Lewis's evidence was that, while the command vehicle was on Rossville Street, he reported to Major Loden firing by soldiers of the Anti-Tank Platoon from Kells Walk towards the rubble barricade. He said that this occurred within about the first 20 minutes of deployment.³

³ B2111.016-017

² Day 343/20

59.11 We have already shown the following photograph earlier in this report and expressed our view that it was taken very shortly before Michael Bridge was shot. As can be seen, Major Loden's vehicle was still in Rossville Street when the photograph was taken. It follows that it was there when Jackie Duddy and Margaret Deery were shot.

Command vehicle

59.12 The ITN film footage shows Major Loden's vehicle moving towards the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Sergeant O's APC can be seen in the car park but there is no visible activity in the area. It seems to us that Jackie Duddy's body had been moved by the time that this footage was taken, as it is not visible on the film.¹

59.13 Firing is recorded on the soundtrack of the ITN film at a time after Major Loden's vehicle had moved to the north end of Block 1.¹ It is not possible from the film to tell from where the firing was coming. Major Loden, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, said that he thought that the shots were self-loading rifle fire.² Warrant Officer Class II Lewis gave similar evidence.³ It seems to us that this was probably firing in Sectors 4 or 5, all of which we describe in detail later in this report.

² Day 346/17

59.14 This evidence establishes in our view that there was a substantially greater lapse of time between Major Loden's arrival in Rossville Street and the moving of his vehicle to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats than Major Loden's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry suggested. It also establishes in our view that there was a substantial amount of shooting by the soldiers before the vehicle was moved, in both Sector 2 and Sector 3. Counsel for the Inquiry put to Major Loden that his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry of seeing a number of soldiers firing into the car park after he had arrived at the north end of Block 1 was not consistent with the other evidence, which suggested that most of the shooting in Sector 2 must have occurred before this time. Major Loden said that his memory was no longer good enough to assist.¹

59.16 It follows that in our view the evidence given by Major Loden in 1972 about when his command vehicle moved from Rossville Street to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats was incorrect.

- 60.1

We have considered earlier in this report¹ the submission made by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers, that Eileen Collins saw the body of the gunman that Sergeant O said he had shot towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats. For the reasons we gave, we rejected this submission. In our view the body that Eileen Collins saw was that of Kevin McElhinney, one of those shot and killed in Sector 3.

- 60.2

The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers submitted that there were other unidentified casualties in Sector 2.

Evidence of an unidentified casualty in the car park of the Rossville Flats

The evidence of Eamonn Baker

60.3 These representatives submitted that the evidence of Eamonn Baker supported the evidence of Sergeant O and Private R that there was a gunman behind a red Cortina on the south-east side of the car park. They submit that the casualty whom Eamonn Baker saw was that gunman.¹

60.4 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Eamonn Baker told us that he had seen the body of Jackie Duddy and had sought to get away from the area by running towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. A man running in front of him gasped “I’m hit, I’m hit”, and fell to the ground. This occurred at a point to the north of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 but south of the low wall that ran parallel with Block 2. The man was wearing a big, dark-coloured coat. Eamonn Baker attempted to put a tourniquet around the man’s left shoulder but was unable to do so. He thought that the man had been hit in the back. Eamonn Baker’s evidence was that the man’s name was Michael Bradley.¹

¹ AB2.3-AB2.4; AB2.6; Day 96/136-140

60.5 The representatives of the majority of the represented soldiers submitted that Eamonn Baker was wrong in his identification of this casualty as Michael Bradley. They pointed out that the casualty seen by Eamonn Baker was in a different place from that where Michael Bradley was shot, was wearing different clothes from those worn by Michael Bradley and, unlike Michael Bradley, had been shot in the back. They also submitted that the casualty cannot have been Patrick McDaid because Patrick McDaid was not shot by a 7.62mm lead bullet.¹

60.6 The representatives of the majority of the families submitted that the casualty seen by Eamonn Baker was Patrick McDaid, who believed (along with everybody else at the time, including the doctor who subsequently examined him) that he had been hit by a lead bullet. Patrick McDaid was hit in the back, as was the man seen by Eamonn Baker.¹

60.7 Eamonn Baker told us¹ that the man he saw was running in front of him, on the south side of the low wall parallel to Block 2, towards the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. Eamonn Baker “did not have a sense of a bullet hitting him” but heard the man gasp that he was hit, and slump to the ground as though running out of energy. Eamonn Baker tried unsuccessfully to put a handkerchief around the man’s shoulder as a tourniquet, and helped him around the corner. That is substantially consistent with the movements of Michael Bradley after he was shot, but not with those of Patrick McDaid, who approached the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 from a different direction and was injured as he jumped or prepared to jump over the low wall or down the steps. Eamonn Baker said that he thought that the man had been wearing “a big dark coloured coat”. Gilles Peress’s photographs² suggest that both Michael Bradley and Patrick McDaid were wearing dark coats, and that Michael Bradley’s was longer than Patrick McDaid’s. It is the case that Eamonn Baker said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that he had thought at the time that the man had been hit “in the back at the top left-hand shoulder”, which fits Patrick McDaid’s injury more nearly than Michael Bradley’s injuries, but in our view on this aspect it is possible that Eamonn Baker’s recollection was at fault.

² Paragraphs 55.259, 55.294 and 117.2

60.8 In these circumstances we are of the view that the casualty seen by Eamonn Baker was not Patrick McDaid. We have considered whether this person could have been an unknown casualty, but in the end we concluded that Eamonn Baker was correct in identifying him as Michael Bradley.

Evidence of an unidentified casualty in the area of the stairwell at the south end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats

60.9 The representatives of the soldiers submitted that there was a casualty, in addition to Kevin McElhinney, in the area of the southern stairwell of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. These representatives rely on the evidence of the civilian witnesses whose accounts are summarised below in support of the proposition that there was more than one casualty in the area.¹

The evidence of John Casey

60.10 In his Keville interview, John Casey described seeing young men being shot in Rossville Street. He said that he then “went a way on and, the way up the back of the wee flats up near the Bogside ... and it must have been ... a couple of shots were fired down from the wall like, and then there was two young fellas lying up at Colmbcille Court and a whole lot of men had to go over with their hands in the air to get near them. And there was – they got the other young fellas and they went back up – rushing back up to the flats again and ... and there was a young fella lying dead on the second floor.”¹

60.11 Later in his Keville interview John Casey said that there was a priest with the dead man.¹

60.12 The reference to the “the second floor” in this Keville interview seems to be to the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, since John Casey described “rushing back up to the flats again”. He had earlier told Kathleen Keville that he had run from his flat into Rossville Street. That flat was 29 Mura Place, on the fourth floor of Block 2.¹ The obvious way of getting to and from Rossville Street would be to use the walkway on the second floor and the stairs leading to the entrance from Block 1 into Rossville Street.²

60.13 The Inquiry was unable to trace John Casey.

60.14 It was submitted by the representatives of some of the soldiers that the reference to a “young fella” lying dead on the second floor does not tally with the preponderance of the evidence to the effect that Kevin McElhinney was carried only as far as the first landing below the first floor.¹

The evidence of Donal Deeney

60.15 In his first supplementary written statement to this Inquiry, Donal Deeney told us that he and Sean McCallion entered Block 1 of the Rossville Flats from Rossville Street and that he saw someone who had been shot, lying inside the doorway. People were attending to the casualty.¹

60.16 He went on to tell us that as he and Sean McCallion made their way up the stairs, he saw someone who had been shot and was being attended to by some young women. He added: “I do not know who the person was that had been shot but I think he may have been the same person who was shot at the main door several minutes earlier.”¹

60.17 In his first written statement to this Inquiry, Donal Deeney had recorded that he had gone “back into” the stairs to join Sean McCallion.¹ The latter told this Inquiry² that he had been with Donal Deeney during the day but that they had become separated at times. In our view it is likely that he and Donal Deeney had been separated at the relevant time. Sean McCallion did not refer to seeing any casualties on the stairwell.

² AM492.2; Day 147/157

60.18 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Donal Deeney said that he thought that the casualty was called McElhinney, but he was not sure of this.¹

60.19 It was submitted by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that the person being attended to by young women was an unidentified casualty. Those representatives asserted that the casualty seen by Donal Deeney had fair hair and that Kevin McElhinney had dark hair.¹ In fact Donal Deeney did not describe this casualty as having fair hair.²

² Day 86/50-51

The evidence of Alan Harkens

60.20 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Alan Harkens told us that as he went down the stairs at the southern end of Block 1 he saw two bodies. One was on the first half-landing that he reached. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that he had reached the stairwell along the “first floor balcony” of Block 1.² There was no first floor balcony, so it is likely that Alan Harkens meant the balcony on the second floor, so that the half-landing would have been at first floor level or between the second and first floors.³

² Day 96/16

60.21 Alan Harkens described the casualty on the half-landing as a young man in his teens, with longish, black hair. A coat had been placed over the body and there was a pair of Oxford-style shoes next to the body.¹

60.22 Alan Harkens told us that he then went to the full landing on the ground floor and saw a second body, again of a young man. The young man's boots had been removed and placed next to him. One of the two casualties was wearing a white T-shirt. Alan Harkens saw no sign of blood or injury on either casualty.¹

60.23 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Alan Harkens said that there had been nobody with the body on the half-landing. He thought that there might have been a few people with the second body. He said that when referring to the "full landing" at ground floor level, he meant the foyer at the entrance to the flats.¹ He was certain that the body he had seen at ground floor level was inside the entrance hall and not out of doors.²

² Day 96/25-26

60.24 The representatives of some of the soldiers submitted that one of the bodies seen by Alan Harkens must have been that of Kevin McElhinney, but that the identity of the second casualty is unknown. It was acknowledged that Alan Harkens is the only witness to have described seeing two bodies in the area of the stairwell; however, reliance was placed on the evidence of other witnesses (namely James Norris, Alex Morrison and John Casey) as indicating that there was a body whose location and description did not match Kevin McElhinney.¹ The representatives of the majority of the represented soldiers relied in particular on Alan Harkens' certainty, expressed when he gave oral evidence to this Inquiry, that he had not confused the body on the ground floor with that of Hugh Gilmour (another of those shot and killed in Sector 3) whose body was outside the flats.²

² FS7.1768-1769

60.25 The representatives of the majority of the families submitted that it is clear that Alan Harkens had a confused recollection of events and that the body that he thought that he saw in the stairwell was that of Hugh Gilmour.¹ They accepted that Alan Harkens refused to acknowledge in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that he might be wrong, but they pointed out that he conceded that he was in a state of shock at the time and that he broke down when he reached home. They also observed that he did not make a statement in 1972 and therefore was unable to rely on any account given at that time when recalling events for this Inquiry.²

² FS1.2144-2145

The evidence of Alex Morrison

60.26 In his Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) statement Alex Morrison recorded that he was with Kevin McElhinney immediately before the latter was shot. He stated that the two of them crouched and ran towards the main door of the Rossville Flats and that, as he entered the flats, he heard Kevin McElhinney shouting “I’m hit”. Alex Morrison stated that he continued up the stairs but, on realising that Kevin McElhinney was not behind him, returned and saw Kevin McElhinney lying dead just inside the entrance to the flats. He also stated that Kevin McElhinney’s body was then taken upstairs.¹ Alex Morrison gave an essentially similar account to Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times Insight Team; the principal difference was that he said that, on returning downstairs, he did not initially recognise the body as being that of Kevin McElhinney. He said that it was only when someone took a rubber bullet from a pocket of the casualty that he realised who the casualty was (he having seen a rubber bullet protruding from Kevin McElhinney’s pocket at an earlier stage). He told Philip Jacobson that a man from the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps and a cameraman were present with the body.²

² AM429.2-AM429.3

60.27 In his interview with Paul Mahon,¹ Alex Morrison said that he had thought that Kevin McElhinney was beside him when he dived through the entrance doors and ran upstairs. He then said that he had returned down the stairs and seen Kevin McElhinney somewhere on the stairs; he thought that Kevin McElhinney had been lifted upstairs by others. He added, however, that he had not recognised Kevin McElhinney and that it was not until the following day that he had realised who the casualty was or that he learned that Kevin McElhinney had been shot.

60.28 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Alex Morrison explained that Kevin McElhinney was a friend of his whom he had met on the march. He again gave a very similar account of having been with Kevin McElhinney in the moments before Kevin McElhinney was shot. He said that he had “a fleeting memory” of Kevin McElhinney picking up a rubber bullet somewhere in the vicinity of the rubble barricade. He told us that, after live shooting had started, he had run to the entrance of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, assuming that Kevin McElhinney was behind him. He had run upstairs and, on returning, had seen a body on the first floor landing. There had been people around the body. He had not initially recognised the casualty but had then realised that the body was that of Kevin McElhinney.¹

60.29 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Alex Morrison said that Kevin McElhinney had picked up a rubber bullet before the two of them turned to run towards the entrance to the Rossville Flats.¹ He said that he had seen Kevin McElhinney's body on the stairs, or on a half-landing between flights of stairs, and agreed that he had not recognised Kevin McElhinney immediately but had done so "subsequently".²

¹ Day 143/141; Day 143/150-151

² Day 143/142

60.30 The representatives of some of the represented soldiers submitted that the casualty seen by Alex Morrison might not have been Kevin McElhinney. They referred to the inconsistencies in his accounts about whether he heard Kevin McElhinney shout "I'm hit" and whether he saw Kevin McElhinney's body on the ground floor or only after the body had been taken upstairs. They accepted that these discrepancies may be regarded as minor; they relied more heavily on Alex Morrison's account to Paul Mahon, in which he said that he had not recognised Kevin McElhinney at the time, but had only realised on the following day that the body that he had seen must have been that of Kevin McElhinney. Since Alex Morrison and Kevin McElhinney were friends, the representatives submitted that it would be very surprising for Alex Morrison to have failed to recognise the body of his friend. They also submitted that support for the proposition that the body seen by Alex Morrison was not that of Kevin McElhinney can be found in Alex Morrison's account of a rubber bullet being found on the body; and that the evidence of Fr Kieran O'Doherty¹ and Liam Mailey² suggests that no such bullet was found on Kevin McElhinney.

² Day 163/128-129

60.31 These representatives accepted that it is possible either that Alex Morrison was mistaken in 1972 about a rubber bullet having been found on the body, or that Liam Mailey and Fr O'Doherty were mistaken. However, they submitted that an alternative possibility is that the body was not that of Kevin McElhinney.¹

The evidence of Denis Mullan

60.32 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Denis Mullan told us that he saw a man lying on the half-landing of the southern set of stairs leading to the second level of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats (three flights up from the ground floor). The man's upper body was against the wall of the landing. Denis Mullan described the man as being about 19 years old, with longish dark hair and a thin face being "the colour of skimmed milk".¹ The man was wearing a shirt with a droopy collar and a shiny V-necked jumper. He appeared to have an injury to his stomach, which was covered with a field dressing. The man was being attended to by a member of the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps and by Fr Denis Bradley. Denis Mullan is likely to have mistaken another priest for Fr Bradley, since the latter has never said that he attended to a casualty on the stairs in Block 1. The Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer James Norris told us² that he was present when Fr Irwin gave the last rites to Kevin McElhinney. In our view Fr Irwin was the priest seen by Denis Mullan.

² AN20.21

60.33 Denis Mullan told us that he heard the people around the man saying that no pulse could be detected.¹ This is consistent with the evidence of the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer James Norris, who said in 1972 that, on his return to the casualty whom he later believed to be Kevin McElhinney, he was told by a photographer that there was no pulse, and was himself unable to find a pulse.²

60.34 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Denis Mullan said that he assumed that the man was dying, because of the nature of the wound, the man's colour and the inability of the "medical orderly" to find a pulse. He added that it was obvious that the man was dying.¹

60.35 The representatives of the majority of the represented soldiers submitted that the casualty seen by Denis Mullan was three flights up from the ground floor and therefore cannot have been Kevin McElhinney. They supported this submission that the casualty was an unknown one by pointing out that the casualty was wearing a V-necked jumper, while Kevin McElhinney was wearing a roll-necked one.¹

The evidence of James Norris

60.36 In a handwritten statement,¹ undated but clearly written in 1972, since the statement gives the witness's age as 18, which it then was, James Norris recorded that, while he was treating the man who had been hit by a gas canister, a man came in and said that "a man was shot just at the door of the flats". James Norris ran down the stairs to go to the man's aid and, as he reached the bottom stair, "a youth fell in the doorway". There was blood pumping from the youth's left side. With the aid of a photographer, he carried the youth upstairs. He pulled away the youth's jacket and shirt and saw a three-inch wound in the youth's side. James Norris said that he left the wounded youth with the photographer in order to look for a man who was reported to have been shot in the head. He found that one of his colleagues was attending to this man,² and when he returned to the photographer and the injured youth he discovered that the youth was dead. An old man lent James Norris a coat with which to cover the youth.

² The man was Patrick Brolly, attended to by Bernard Feeney (AN20.20-21).

60.37 In a handwritten report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps dated 7th February 1972,¹ James Norris described being in one of the flats and treating a man who had been hit in the face with a gas canister. This is likely to have been Hugh Hegarty.² James Norris recorded that he had left the man and gone down the stairs at the south end of Block 1. As he went downstairs, someone told him that a man had been shot and had fallen around the corner from the doorway of the flats. As he reached the ground floor he saw a boy aged 16 to 20 fall "in the doorway". The boy was bleeding profusely. James Norris and a cameraman carried the boy upstairs for shelter. The boy's face was yellow-white in colour and James Norris knew that the boy was dying. James Norris described ripping away the boy's coat and shirt, turning the boy onto his stomach and seeing a three-inch wound in the boy's side. James Norris left the boy with the cameraman and went to attend to other casualties. On his return, he discovered that the boy had just died. Those present covered the body with a blanket. When an ambulance arrived, he and the cameraman carried the boy (whom James Norris named as Kevin McElhinney) to the ambulance.

60.38 In his written statement to this Inquiry, James Norris described taking a man who had been hit by a gas canister to a flat on the fourth floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He told us that he left the flat in order to look for a doctor. When he reached the ground floor, the lobby area was deserted. However, as he stood there, a man crashed through the doors and collapsed. James Norris caught the man and lowered him to the ground.

There was blood on the man's left side. The man was wearing a bottle green suit and a white collared shirt. James Norris recalled wondering why the man, on a cold day, was wearing a suit and shirt with no vest or T-shirt. James Norris examined the man where he caught him. The man died within about a minute of coming through the door. Another man came into the lobby. James Norris now knew that this was Liam Mailey. He left Liam Mailey with the body and went upstairs.¹

60.39 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, James Norris said that he was certain that the casualty was wearing a green suit. He did not recall the casualty wearing a pullover but remembered that he was wearing a white shirt. James Norris said that he did not recall finding a rubber bullet in the casualty's pocket. He also said that he did not know the names of the casualties on the day, but learned them later.¹ He also said that he believed that the cameraman to whom he had referred in his report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps was Liam Mailey.²

² Day 147/95

60.40 The representatives of some of the soldiers submitted that the man treated by James Norris might not have been Kevin McElhinney.¹ They relied on two aspects of James Norris's written and oral accounts to this Inquiry:

1. James Norris described the casualty as wearing a green suit and no pullover. Kevin McElhinney was wearing a brown suit, pink shirt and brown/green pullover.
2. James Norris described treating the casualty on the ground floor of the flats. Kevin McElhinney was treated on the small landing below the first floor.

60.41 These representatives acknowledged that in the accounts that he gave in 1972, James Norris stated that the casualty was carried upstairs, and that the injury described by James Norris is consistent with that known to have been suffered by Kevin McElhinney. They submitted, however, that it is possible that the casualty whom James Norris described to this Inquiry was not Kevin McElhinney, and they pointed out that the position of the body described by James Norris corresponds closely to the position of the second body described by Alan Harkens.

- 60.42 These representatives also relied on the fact that in his evidence to this Inquiry James Norris described the casualty whom he treated as having crashed through the doors of Block 1. They submitted that the weight of the evidence indicates that Kevin McElhinney crawled to the flats and was probably dragged through the doors.
- 60.43 The representatives of the majority of the families submitted that the youth treated by James Norris was clearly Kevin McElhinney. They submitted that James Norris was wrong in his recollection that the youth “crashed” through the doors and that his 1972 accounts of the youth falling in the doorway are more reliable. They also submitted that his recollection of the youth’s clothing was wrong and that he may have mistaken the handkerchief around Kevin McElhinney’s neck for a white collared shirt. They pointed out that James Norris described the casualty’s left side as being covered in blood, as Kevin McElhinney’s was, and that he recalled Liam Mailey as having been present in the lobby of Block 1 when the casualty entered. It was submitted that on his own evidence to this Inquiry, Liam Mailey was present when Kevin McElhinney came into the lobby.¹ In fact, in both his written and oral evidence to this Inquiry, James Norris said that Liam Mailey arrived after the injured man had come through the door; though his report to the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps suggests that Liam Mailey was at the scene when the injured man came in.²

² AN20.10; Day 147/100; AN20.19

The evidence of Liam Mailey

- 60.44 The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers referred to the evidence of Liam Mailey, to the effect that he was brought downstairs to the entrance to Block 1 by the news that someone had been shot, and that he was there when Kevin McElhinney was shot.¹ These representatives submitted that the news that someone had been shot could not refer to Hugh Gilmour, since there was a photograph that shows that Liam Mailey was already downstairs when Hugh Gilmour ran past the doorway.²

² FS7.1769-1770

- 60.45 In relation to this photograph,¹ although Liam Mailey told the Widgery Inquiry² that he was the man shown with his hand on the door, he told this Inquiry³ that he had been persuaded of this by others and now did not believe that it was correct, particularly since someone else had claimed to be the person shown in the photograph with his hand on the door, and this man had said that Liam Mailey was behind him. In his interview with Stephen Gargan,⁴ Liam Mailey suggested that he had gone upstairs at least as far as the first landing when the photograph was taken. His comment later in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ that the photograph “positions me there”, read in the context of his earlier evidence to this Inquiry and his account to Stephen Gargan, does not to our minds undermine his correction of what he told the Widgery Inquiry, a correction that we accept.

Consideration of the submissions on unidentified casualties

60.46 We reject the submission that the evidence considered above shows or suggests that there was another casualty in the area of the southern stairwell of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, in addition to Kevin McElhinney. In our view, as was submitted by the representatives of the majority of the families, a number of witnesses had acquired confused recollections, and the shocking nature of events, combined with the speed with which the events occurred, had affected the ability of witnesses to assimilate accurate and detailed recollections. We also accept the submission of those representatives that to suggest that an additional body was lying in the area of the stairwell involves alleging that there was a widespread conspiracy of silence among a sizeable group of what the submission described as “ordinary people”, who would have had no reason to take part in such a conspiracy.¹ We have found no evidence of any such conspiracy.

60.47 In addition to this general point, it appears to be accepted by the soldiers’ representatives that the evidence on which they rely cannot be taken entirely at face value, for if it were, there would not have been one unidentified casualty in the stairwell (which is what they suggested), but several on different floors, attended to by different people.

63.48 There are in addition the two matters to which we referred when considering earlier in this report the submission that Eileen Collins saw an unidentified casualty. These were the absence of any record in the intelligence material disclosed to the Inquiry by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and other agencies of the death on Bloody Sunday of any person other than the known casualties; and Fr Edward Daly’s rejection (which we accept) of the suggestion that there could have been secret burials of unidentified casualties killed by the Army on that day.

60.49 In these circumstances it is our view that there were no unidentified casualties of Army gunfire in Sector 2.

Chapter 61: Firing by a soldier in Sector 2 observed by Corporal INQ 444

61.1 We now turn to another topic, namely the evidence from Corporal INQ 444 about a soldier firing in Sector 2.

61.2 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Corporal INQ 444, who was on Bloody Sunday a member of C Company, 1 PARA, told us that he saw a soldier firing from about the point marked “E” on the plan attached to his statement² (ie near the west end of the fence to the north of the entrance to the car park). The soldier was “standing up”, holding his rifle under his arm between his shoulder and his waist, and firing in the direction of Blocks 2 and 3 “at an angle of 30 to 40 degrees”. Corporal INQ 444 stated that he thought that the soldier had fired more than ten rounds and fewer than 20. In his opinion, the soldier was frightened and had “lost the plot”. He told us that he believed that this soldier was “Lance Corporal H”, but that there was “a good chance” that he had only learned the identity of the soldier after the event.

² C444.9

61.3 We return to the evidence of Corporal INQ 444 later in this report,¹ when we consider the accounts of the day given by members of C Company, but it should be noted here that when he gave oral evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal INQ 444 repeated his uncertainty about the identification of the soldier and told us that he was also uncertain about where the soldier was and the direction of his fire.

¹ Paragraphs 65.29, 65.127 and 65.195

61.4 It was submitted by the representatives of the majority of the families that the soldier whom Corporal INQ 444 saw was a member of Mortar Platoon.¹ For the reasons we give later in this report,² when dealing further with the evidence of Corporal INQ 444, we consider it unlikely that the soldier was any of those who had been engaged in the Eden Place waste ground or the car park of the Rossville Flats. Whether it was Corporal P, who asserted that he had fired three rounds over the heads of people he said were advancing over the rubble barricade in Rossville Street, is a matter we consider later in this report.³ Whether the firing, which we are sure Corporal INQ 444 observed, was by Private H, as was submitted on behalf of Private H,⁴ is a matter we also consider later in this report.⁵ There is no evidence to suggest that this firing resulted in any casualties.

62.1 We now set out the evidence that the soldiers of Mortar Platoon gave as to whether they were standing or kneeling when they fired their rifles. With the exception of Lieutenant N and his first three shots aimed over the heads of people in the Eden Place alleyway, all the soldiers of this platoon have maintained that they fired shots aimed at individuals. None of the firing soldiers has admitted to firing from the hip.

Lieutenant N

62.2 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ and in his written statement to this Inquiry,² Lieutenant N stated that he was standing when he fired his final shot from a position on the Eden Place waste ground. We accept this part of the evidence of Lieutenant N.

² B438.011

Sergeant O

62.3 In his first Royal Military Police (RMP) statement,¹ Sergeant O recorded that he was positioned by the rear of his Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) when the incoming fire began. He went on to describe the three shooting incidents in which he was involved, without giving further details of his own position or saying whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired his rifle.

¹ B440

62.4 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O recorded that he and three of his men were “grouped at the pig” when he saw his first gunman. He then described his first and second engagements, and stated that at the time when he saw his second gunman he was “Still by the front end of the pig, behind the mudguard”. Sergeant O said that when Private T was splashed with acid, he (Sergeant O) was just behind him, and that after hearing Private T fire two shots, he “moved round to the front of the pig” before he saw his third gunman. Sergeant O did not in this statement record whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired his rifle.

62.5 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant O said¹ that his firing position when he engaged his first gunman was “the forward left wing of my position”, presumably meaning the nearside wing of his APC. Having described his first engagement, he said that he stayed where he was “at the front of the pig”, and while in that position saw and engaged his second gunman.² He said that he then went to the rear of the vehicle. After the incident in which Private T fired at an acid bomber, Sergeant O “came back round to the front of the vehicle” and engaged his third gunman.³ He did not in this evidence say whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired his rifle.

² WT13.30

62.6 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us that he was standing next to the nearside front wheel of his APC before his first and second engagements took place. He recorded nothing to suggest that he had moved from that position or was no longer standing when he opened fire. Sergeant O told us² that he was somewhere near the mudguard of the nearside front wheel of his APC when he engaged his third gunman, but he did not state whether he was standing or kneeling.

² B575.118

62.7 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that he was standing “in front of the Pig, at the front edge of the Pig” when he fired at his first and second gunmen. He said that he was at the nearside front mudguard of the APC when he fired at his first two gunmen,² and that he was standing at the nearside front door of the vehicle when he fired at his first gunman.³ He said that he was at the front of the vehicle when he fired at his third gunman,⁴ but did not say whether he was standing or kneeling.

Private R’s evidence about Sergeant O

62.8 In his second RMP statement¹ and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Private R recorded that after he had been hit by two acid bombs thrown from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, he saw a man firing a pistol towards the soldiers from behind a maroon Cortina in the car park. He stated that Sergeant O fired at the gunman, who fell and was dragged away. In each statement, Private R said that Sergeant O was “standing beside” him when he fired at the gunman. In his RMP account, Private R seemed to say that his own position when Sergeant O fired was between Block 1 and Sergeant O’s APC; while in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private R seemed to say that he had been beside the “right hand back door” of the APC when the first acid bomb was thrown, and that he had then “stepped back” by the time Sergeant O fired. Private R also recorded in that statement that after the gunman had been dragged away, Sergeant O “went to the back somewhere”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Private R said that by this he had probably meant that Sergeant O went “back behind the vehicles, further along” rather than merely to the rear of his own vehicle.

¹ B666

² B670-671

62.9 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private R said that he was standing behind Sergeant O's APC when he saw Sergeant O fire,¹ and that he was at that time "stood next" to Sergeant O.² He said that he presumed that after the gunman had been taken away, Sergeant O "went behind" in order to count heads and make sure that none of his men had been injured.³ Private R did not in this evidence say whether Sergeant O was standing or kneeling when he fired his weapon.

² WT13.83

62.10 Private R also described this incident in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ but did not say where Sergeant O had been when he fired or whether he had been standing or kneeling. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private R initially said that he did not now recall how close he had been to Sergeant O when this firing took place.² Later in his evidence,³ he said that Sergeant O was probably only four or five feet away. Private R said that he believed that he had been at the back of the APC, but was not sure whether Sergeant O had been at the back or the front. He accepted that Sergeant O might well have been at the nearside passenger door. Private R said that his present recollection was that he saw Sergeant O firing before he, Private R, was hit by acid bombs.⁴

⁴ Day 337/148

62.11 Private R did not describe the other two shooting incidents in which Sergeant O was involved.

Private S's evidence about Sergeant O

62.12 In his second RMP statement,¹ Private S recorded that Sergeant O fired from the nearside of his APC at a gunman who was firing from a window on the ground floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ Private S told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen Sergeant O fire one or two shots from the forward nearside of his APC towards the south-east corner of the car park. Private S stated that he could not see Sergeant O's target, as the target was behind the wall against which Private S was standing. Private S said that Sergeant O did not appear to fire "in an elevated position" but that he "would not say it was exactly sort of level".⁴ In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁵ Private S said that he remembered seeing Sergeant O apparently engaging a target. Sergeant O had been at the front nearside of his vehicle. Private S said that he thought that Sergeant O had been near the passenger door. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁶ Private S said that this Inquiry should not rely on the account given in his second RMP statement of seeing a gunman, but he stood by his evidence of seeing Sergeant O firing from the nearside of his APC. He conceded that the account of seeing a gunman given in his second RMP statement was untrue.⁷ Private S said that when he saw Sergeant O firing, Sergeant O was “standing” at the nearside of his APC.⁸

Private T’s evidence about Sergeant O

62.13 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T said that at one point Sergeant O shouted “There’s one over there behind the wall” and fired across the car park. Private T thought that Sergeant O had fired two or three shots. He did not say where Sergeant O was when he fired, or whether he was standing or kneeling. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Private T gave a similar account. He said that Sergeant O fired two or possibly three shots in the direction of the flats. He said that he did not know where Sergeant O meant by “over there”. Private T said that he could not see into the car park. He told the Widgery Inquiry that when Sergeant O fired, he (Sergeant O) was standing at the back of his APC about three feet away from Private T.

62.14 In our view, based on the evidence of Private T, it is likely that Sergeant O was standing when he fired his shots.

Private Q

62.15 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that he was kneeling when he fired his shot from a position near the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

62.16 Private Q told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he could not recall whether he had been kneeling or standing when he fired his shot, but he said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry² that his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry on this point was likely to be accurate.

² Day 339/34

62.17 In our view Private Q was probably kneeling when he fired.

Private R

62.18 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private R recorded that he had “reached the Humber” before he fired his first shot at a man holding a fizzing object in the car park of the Rossville Flats, although the accompanying RMP map² shows Private R’s position as having been at the north-east corner of Block 1. Neither the statement nor the map suggests that Private R moved to a different position before firing his three shots at what he described as a man firing a pistol from the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats.

62.19 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R recorded that when he fired his first shot, he was beside the “right hand back door” of Sergeant O’s APC. He stated that he had “stepped back” from that position when the first acid bomb was thrown, but did not say that he had moved any further by the time he fired his three shots at the man he described as firing a pistol from the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. He described his position during both engagements as being “in the same area as T and O”.²

² B673

62.20 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R said that he was “just coming round this corner ... to get back to the vehicle” when he saw the man holding the smoking object. He said that after he had fired at the man, acid bombs were thrown and he took cover behind the APC. Private R did not describe any further movement before he engaged what he described as the man with the pistol.

62.21 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private R told us that he was positioned at the back of the APC when he fired at the man holding the smoking object and that he took cover behind the APC after being splashed by acid. He did not refer to any further movement before he fired at the man with the pistol.

62.22 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private R said that it was possible that he had seen the man with the smoking object before he reached Sergeant O’s vehicle,¹ but that he was “at the right-hand side of the Pig” when he fired his first shot at this man.² He said that he “went back round the rear” of the APC after firing that shot,³ and that he then stayed behind the APC “all the time”.⁴

- 62.23 Private R did not in any of his evidence say whether he fired his shots from a standing or a kneeling position.

Private 005's evidence about Private R

- 62.24 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 005 (the driver of one of the APCs of Machine Gun Platoon) recorded that Private R fired three rounds at a man who was firing a pistol from "the first floor veranda which runs between block one and block two of the flats". He said that Private R was "standing" at the nearside wing of an APC when he fired.

¹ B1370

- 62.25 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 005 told us that he saw a soldier firing towards the Rossville Flats. He stated that he thought that it had been Private R but could not rule out the possibility that it had been Private T. The soldier was "in a standing position". Private 005 told us that he thought that the soldier had fired three shots, and that it seemed to him that the soldier was firing "into the first floor of the flats because he looked to have his gun more or less on a level rather than raised". Private 005 stated that he could see "puffs of smoke" rising from the ground where the soldier was standing. This and the soldier's firing led Private 005, according to this statement, to believe that acid bombs or something similar were being thrown at the soldier, but he stated that he did not see any acid being thrown. Private 005 told us that he had a vague memory of seeing a man on either the ground floor or the first floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, with his arm back as if about to throw something, and with an object, possibly a nail bomb or petrol bomb, in his hand. However, Private 005 stated that he did not remember seeing the man throw anything, and was concerned that his memory might be wrong. He stated² that he did not now remember seeing a man with a pistol, although he recalled hearing pistol fire at about the time when he saw the soldier firing.

² B1374.004

- 62.26 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 005 said that Private R was *"just standing and firing"*¹ and that Private R was "standing at the side of the Pig".² Private 005 admitted that he had seen neither a gunman nor a man with his arm in a throwing position.³ He said that he recalled seeing Private R fire only one shot towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2, and denied that he had told the RMP that he had seen him fire three shots.⁴ Private 005 was asked⁵ what made him think that Private R was having something thrown at him, and replied that it was “Just the way the stuff was splashing about”.

Private S

62.28 Private S did not in any of his evidence say whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired his shots from beside the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses.

Sergeant O’s evidence about Private S

62.29 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O said that he saw Private S “standing” at the back wall of 32 or 34 Chamberlain Street and firing towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.

62.30 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant O told us that he saw Private S aiming his rifle at a gunman in the passage between Blocks 1 and 2, and that at some stage after Private S’s engagement was over, he looked back and saw that Private S was “still standing”.

62.31 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant O did not say whether Private S was standing or kneeling when he opened fire.

Lance Corporal V’s evidence about Private S

62.32 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal V recorded that he saw Private S “standing at the corner of the buildings at the end of Chamberlain Street” and firing towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Lance Corporal V said that he saw Private S fire approximately four shots and that so far as he could recall Private S had fired these shots from a standing position. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Lance Corporal V said that he now had no recollection of Private S firing.

¹ B802

³ Day 333/80

² WT13.22

62.33 In our view Private S was probably standing when he fired.

Private T

62.34 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private T said that after hearing incoming fire he had moved to the rear of Sergeant O's APC on the offside. He said that he fired his first shot from a standing position at the rear of the APC.² He then described firing his second shot shortly afterwards, and did not suggest that he had changed his position before doing so. He said that he was standing on the "William Street side" of the APC during a period that appears to cover the firing of his shots.³

Private Q's evidence about Private T

62.35 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private Q said that he saw a soldier fire from beside Sergeant O's APC at the "western" (in our view a mistake for "eastern") side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He confirmed this in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.² He did not say whether this soldier was standing or kneeling at the time of firing. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Private Q said that he did not remember seeing Private T fire, and could not say whether this firing had occurred at the same time as acid bombs were thrown from Block 1 or at a later time.

Lance Corporal V

- 62.38 Lance Corporal V did not in any of his evidence say whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired his shot from what he described as a position north of the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats. In these circumstances we remain in doubt whether he was standing or kneeling when he fired.

63.1 We now turn to consider the evidence given by civilians relating to which soldier shot those hit by gunfire in Sector 2.

63.2 A large number of civilians gave evidence about the events of Sector 2. Their evidence about the positions of the soldiers who shot particular casualties was conflicting, often inconsistent with other evidence we have considered above, and in many cases confused. We are not surprised that this should be so. As we have observed elsewhere in this report, it is often the case that people witnessing the same event give very different accounts of it. The circumstances were terrifying and fast-moving, and often more than one soldier was firing at or about the same time. Furthermore, when giving evidence to us, the witnesses were trying to recall events that had happened decades earlier. Nevertheless, when later in this report¹ we seek to determine which soldier shot which casualty, we take into account the evidence to which we now turn as one of the matters to be borne in mind.

Cathleen Bell

63.3 Cathleen Bell, now Cathleen O'Donnell, lived with her parents at 57 Donagh Place,¹ the third flat from the south-west end of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, on the seventh floor.² In her written statement to this Inquiry,³ she described seeing two soldiers near the north-east corner of Block 1 as she crawled towards Block 3 along the balcony on the eighth floor of Block 2. One of the soldiers, a black man, was standing.⁴ The other, a white man, was kneeling. The standing soldier had a gun at his waist and was firing it around the car park into the air. The kneeling soldier was firing a weapon from his shoulder. Cathleen O'Donnell told us that she reached a position on the balcony on the eighth floor of Block 3 near the entrance to her parents' flat, from where she looked down and saw a young boy shot as he ran across the car park. She later learned that this was Jackie Duddy. In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ she confirmed that both soldiers had rifles. She said⁶ that she heard shots from the general direction of the two soldiers when she saw Jackie Duddy fall. She accepted⁷ that she could not say that she had seen the soldiers firing, but said that they were aiming their weapons. She did not see any other soldiers.

Donal Deeney

63.4 Donal Deeney told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was running through the car park of the Rossville Flats a short distance behind Jackie Duddy. Donal Deeney saw Jackie Duddy fall but did not recall hearing the shot that hit him. Donal Deeney stated that he then saw Michael Bridge run towards the soldier who Donal Deeney thought had probably shot Jackie Duddy. This soldier was standing at the point marked “G” on the plan attached to the statement² (the north-east corner of Block 1). In a supplementary written statement to this Inquiry,³ Donal Deeney told us that this soldier “could have been” the one who shot Jackie Duddy and that he was holding his rifle “just under his armpit”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Donal Deeney said that the soldier had his rifle “raised at sort of waist level”. He thought that Jackie Duddy had been shot in the chest and hence believed that this soldier was the “obvious culprit”.

Brian Doherty

63.5 Brian Doherty told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was running towards the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats but stopped and looked back when he reached the low wall parallel to Block 2. A young man came into view, running towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2. The man fell at about the point marked “B” on the plan attached to Brian Doherty’s statement² (in the car park between the western gable end of Chamberlain Street and the north-west end of Block 2). At the same time, Brian Doherty heard the sound of a shot, which seemed to him to have come from a soldier who was standing upright at the north-east corner of Block 1. He also saw this soldier’s rifle apparently recoiling as if he had just fired. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Brian Doherty said that more than one shot had been fired and that he had heard something “more like a volley”. He remained “fairly confident” that the soldier whose rifle had appeared to recoil was the soldier at the north-east corner of Block 1.

Noel Doherty

63.6 Noel Doherty told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that as he ran across the car park of the Rossville Flats towards the passage between Blocks 2 and 3, he looked round and saw a soldier standing at the north-east corner of Block 1 “holding up his rifle just under his armpit and aiming through his sights”. The soldier was firing in the direction of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. Noel Doherty noticed that a young man had fallen to his right. At first, Noel Doherty thought that the young man had tripped, and he carried on running, but he subsequently returned to him and found that he had been shot. He told us that he now believed that the young man was Jackie Duddy. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Noel Doherty said that the soldier had his rifle at shoulder level and seemed to be firing directly at those who were fleeing across the car park. He said that he thought that Jackie Duddy was directly in the soldier’s line of fire.³

Isabella Duffy

63.7 Isabella Duffy was on the balcony outside her brother’s maisonette in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹ We have earlier in this report² concluded that this maisonette was 19 Garvan Place, on the second floor of Block 2 at its north-western end.³ In her written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,⁴ Isabella Duffy said that three Army vehicles came across the waste ground and stopped near the north end of Block 1. Soldiers jumped out. One of the soldiers went down on his knee and fired his rifle, and a boy who had been running away from the soldiers “pitched forward”. In her oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,⁵ Isabella Duffy said that she only saw soldiers jump out of the leading vehicle. The kneeling soldier fired a shot that missed before the shot was fired that hit the boy. She now knew that the boy was Jackie Duddy. In her written statement to this Inquiry,⁶ Isabella Duffy told us that she saw two soldiers, both kneeling on one knee close to the wall at the north-east corner of Block 1 and holding their rifles at their waists. She said that she heard a shot that she believed had been fired by one of the two soldiers, although at the time she thought that it was a baton round. Then she heard a second shot and Jackie Duddy pitched forward and fell on his face.

63.8 Angela Fleming, now Angela Copp, was watching events from a bedroom window of 65 Mura Place, a maisonette occupied by the family of her friend Maureen Barr, now Maureen Gerke, on the sixth floor of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats.¹ This maisonette was the third from the north end of that block.² In her written statement to this Inquiry,³ Angela Fleming told us that she saw a soldier kneeling on one knee at the point marked “B” on the plan attached to her statement⁴ (the north-east corner of Block 1). The soldier was facing towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2. She saw the soldier lift his rifle, heard a bang and saw a boy fall. The boy seemed to have come running from Rossville Street and to have been trying to reach the passage between Blocks 1 and 2. She stated that she now knew that his name was Jackie Duddy. In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ she said that she remembered seeing the soldier going down on his knee and bringing his rifle to shoulder height, hearing the bang and seeing the boy fall at the same time, although she did not remember seeing the recoil of the weapon. She resisted the suggestion⁶ that she had merely made an assumption that the soldier had shot Jackie Duddy.

William McDonagh

63.9 William McDonagh said that he was on the balcony on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats outside 4 Garvan Place, the second maisonette from the north end of that block.¹ In his NICRA statement,² he recorded that two soldiers jumped out of the vehicle that entered the car park. One of them grabbed an elderly man, threw him against a wall at the back of Chamberlain Street, and began hitting him with the butt of his rifle.³ Two youths attempted unsuccessfully to free the man. As they were retreating, the second soldier fired two or three shots indiscriminately, hitting one of the youths. More soldiers then disembarked from the vehicle. In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ William McDonagh told us that the soldier who fired did so from a position on the west side of the vehicle, and that he was aiming his rifle from the shoulder towards the passage between Blocks 1 and 2. William McDonagh stated that he was not sure whether this soldier was one of those who had held the elderly man or whether he had just disembarked from the vehicle. The youth fell almost simultaneously with the firing. William McDonagh assumed that the youth had been shot. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ he said that the soldier did not aim his rifle but fired indiscriminately from the waist or midriff. He said⁶ that he was not sure that the youth who fell was one of those who had been trying to rescue the elderly man, and he thought that the NICRA statement taker had misunderstood him on this point. He was not sure that the soldier who fired was one of those who had held the elderly man, but thought that he probably was. William McDonagh said⁷ that the soldier had fired from the west side of the vehicle.

Kevin McDaid

63.10 Kevin McDaid told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he ran into the car park of the Rossville Flats from the south end of Chamberlain Street. He stated that he heard two or three shots fired on his right and saw two soldiers on the nearside of an Army vehicle in the entrance to the car park. The soldier nearer to him was crouching and holding his rifle at about chest height but not aiming it. Kevin McDaid told us that as he heard the shots, he saw someone stumble and fall forward. He now knew that this was Jackie Duddy. He thought that the soldier who had shot him was the crouching soldier “as the shooting definitely came from that direction”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Kevin McDaid said that the reason why he thought that this soldier had shot Jackie Duddy was that he could only see two soldiers, and the nearer soldier was the only one who was pointing his rifle.

Derrik Tucker Senior

63.11 Derrik Tucker Senior told us that he was watching events from his bedroom window at 31 Garvan Place, the third maisonette from the south-east end of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats on the second and third floors.¹ In his NICRA statement,² he recorded that two Army vehicles turned into the car park. Soldiers disembarked and one of them took up a firing position at the nearside front wheel of one of the vehicles. The soldier started firing and a man fell to the ground. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ Derrik Tucker Senior told the Widgery Inquiry that the soldier had his rifle to his shoulder, and that Fr Edward Daly attended to the man who had fallen, who was Jackie Duddy. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Derrik Tucker Senior said that the soldier was on the nearside of the “leading” vehicle⁴ and that he was leaning across the front of the vehicle with his rifle supported on it.⁵ In a deposition taken for the inquest into the death of Jackie Duddy,⁶ Derrik Tucker Senior said that the soldier fired “towards the ground”.

Martin Tucker

63.12 Derrik Tucker Senior’s son Martin Tucker told us that he was also watching from 31 Garvan Place.¹ In his NICRA statement,² Martin Tucker recorded that the first person he saw hit was a young boy in denims who was then attended to by a priest, but he did not describe the position of the soldier who shot the boy. In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Martin Tucker told us that two soldiers disembarked from an Army vehicle that had entered the car park of the Rossville Flats. The soldiers moved to the front of the vehicle and one of them stood by the “offside door”. Martin Tucker was not sure whether the other soldier had gone to the other side of the vehicle, but recalled that they were both quite close together, and that the “one that moved closest to Block 1” was leaning on the front of the vehicle. Within seconds, at least one of the soldiers, and probably both, had opened fire. Martin Tucker saw the soldier by the “offside door” aiming his rifle from his shoulder. He heard a crack and saw a man fall. He told us that he now knew that this was Jackie Duddy. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Martin Tucker said that by “off-side door” he had meant the passenger (ie nearside) door. He said that he had a particular recollection of the soldier at that door aiming his rifle before Jackie Duddy fell, and that his recollection in relation to the other soldier was much less clear. Later in his evidence he appeared to be saying⁵ that both soldiers had moved to the passenger side of the vehicle when they disembarked.

A soldier who had jumped out of Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Mary Bonner

63.13 Mary Bonner made a NICRA statement¹ jointly with her brother Bernard Gilmour and his wife. In that statement, the three witnesses recorded that they were looking out across the car park of the Rossville Flats from a bedroom in 23 Garvan Place, the third maisonette from the north-west end of Block 2 on the second and third floors.² According to this statement, a soldier standing "in the waste ground" fired at a man who fell on his face in the car park and was then given the last rites by Fr Daly. However, in her written statement to this Inquiry,³ Mary Bonner explained that by the time Jackie Duddy had been shot, she had left her mother's maisonette at 23 Garvan Place and was observing events from the balcony on the second floor of Block 2 outside her own maisonette at 34 Garvan Place, the second from the south-east end of that block.⁴ That is consistent with what Mary Bonner said in a number of accounts given in 1972.⁵ In those accounts, she stated that the soldier who shot Jackie Duddy had jumped out of one of two vehicles that had entered the car park. In her written statement to this Inquiry,⁶ she told us that the vehicle had pulled up beside the stairs at the north end of Block 1, and that the soldier had fired from close to the back door of the vehicle, although it was her recollection that the back door was facing into the car park. She could not tell from where the shot that hit Jackie Duddy had come, but she connected it in her mind with the soldier who fired when he disembarked from the Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC). She said in a number of her accounts either that the soldier fired from the hip,⁷ or that he fired from the waist.⁸ In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁹ Mary Bonner said that she did not see any movement of the gun but believed that the soldier had fired because she heard the sound of a shot from his direction. Jackie Duddy fell at the same time as she heard the shot. She said¹⁰ that she could not remember in which direction the APC had been facing.

63.14 Elizabeth Dunleavy told us that she was standing in the doorway of her maisonette at 5 Garvan Place, the third from the north end on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹ According to her NICRA statement,² she saw a soldier “in the middle of the car park” kneel and take aim at a boy who was running towards “the gap between the flats”. The soldier fired. The boy “twirled round” and fell on his back. The soldier swung round and pointed his gun at Elizabeth Dunleavy, who then went inside and upstairs, from where she saw Fr Daly and others carry the boy away. In her written statement to this Inquiry,³ Elizabeth Dunleavy told us that she now knew that the boy was Jackie Duddy. She stated that the soldier who shot him was kneeling at the point marked “C” on the plan attached to her statement⁴ (near the back of 34 Chamberlain Street). In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ she said that this was the position that she had intended to describe when she used the phrase “in the middle of the car park” in her NICRA statement.

James McKinney

63.15 James McKinney recorded in his NICRA statement¹ that he ran down Chamberlain Street “into the waste ground – car park behind the flats”. He saw a soldier take up a position at the back of an Army vehicle. The soldier took aim at an unarmed civilian and shot him in the back. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² James McKinney told us that he was at about the point marked “D” on the plan attached to his statement³ (near the centre of the car park) when he saw an Army vehicle at about the point marked “E” (the south side of the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street) facing towards Free Derry Corner. A soldier appeared at about the point marked “F” (the nearside rear of the vehicle) and fired an aimed shot from the shoulder. A man immediately fell in the car park and rolled along the ground. This man was clean-shaven, aged between 17 and 20 years, about 5ft 10in tall, of medium build, and had short, dark hair. James McKinney thought that the man was wearing a red jumper. The man lay motionless on his back and James McKinney realised that he must be dead. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ James McKinney said that he now knew that the man was Jackie Duddy. He said initially⁵ that there had been no Army vehicle in the entrance to the car park when he looked into the waste ground from point D. Later in his evidence,⁶ he said that there might have been a vehicle in the entrance to the car park, but he still recalled that the vehicle from beside which the soldier fired had been further away.

In his written statement to this Inquiry,² and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Bernard Gilmour said that he did not see who had shot Jackie Duddy, although he assumed that it was one of a group of three or four soldiers who were near the back of 36 Chamberlain Street, who were the only soldiers he had seen at that time. However, he said⁴ that it was possible that what he had said in his NICRA statement about the position of the soldier was more accurate. Bernard Gilmour’s wife did not give evidence to this Inquiry.

Civilian evidence relating to the position and appearance of the soldier who shot Margaret Deery

A soldier with a red hat or red hair firing from close range

Margaret Deery's accounts

63.17 For reasons given earlier in this report¹ we are of the view that at the time of her shooting, Margaret Deery was near the corner of the garden of 36 Chamberlain Street, probably a matter of feet to the north or north-east of that corner. In her statement to the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC),² Margaret Deery recorded that the soldier who shot her was in front of her, but did not describe his position in any more detail. In her statement for the Widgery Inquiry dated 29th February 1972,³ she recorded that the soldier was only about 20ft away from her. According to Philip Jacobson's note of the same date,⁴ Margaret Deery told him that she saw "a soldier with the red para hat come up from the pig that was near us", and take aim either at her or the man standing next to her. As she moved towards the man for protection, she felt a thump in her leg but did not hear a bang. The soldier was not more than 25 yards away. Philip Jacobson noted that Margaret Deery had told him that the soldier was "about your height (5' 10''), fatter than you (!) with a round fat face and a little dark of complexion, although he also had that black stuff streaked over his face". In the note of her recollections dated 25th January 1983,⁵ Margaret Deery is recorded as having said that the soldier who shot her fired from a range of less than 10ft.

In his later draft chapter for a book,² having referred to an Army vehicle pulling up behind him and to a confrontation between an older man and a soldier, Leo Deehan said: "Suddenly I was almost pushed off my feet when a wee woman running up behind me shouted as she pushed me 'Jesus you're going to be shot look there' I didn't see the soldier who has cocked his rifle on the front of the sarachon [sic] and taking aim – BANG – I jumped in the air, I must have traveled 50 feet before I got my senses back, I was running harder than I ever remember, now I looked back and was shocked once again, this time to see that little woman lying on the ground."

² AD178.16

63.23 Leo Deehan's daughter Maria Nelson told us in her written statement to this Inquiry¹ that her father had told her that the soldier about whom Margaret Deery shouted the warning was not the soldier who was beating the elderly man but another soldier "further along Chamberlain Street".

Civilian evidence relating to the position of the soldier who shot Michael Bridge

Michael Bridge's own accounts

63.24 Michael Bridge said in his interview with Kathleen Keville¹ that at the time of his shooting he was facing a soldier who was holding up his rifle. He did not believe that this soldier had shot him because he was hit in the side of his leg. He was “nearly sure it was the soldier at the side of the flats” who shot him.

63.25 In his RUC statement taken by Detective Constable Gillanders,¹ Michael Bridge recorded that a soldier was holding his rifle to his shoulder and aiming at him. However, this soldier “could not have shot me but I was aware of another soldier at the bottom of Rossville Flats and to my left”.

63.26 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge recorded that just before he was shot, he had noticed a soldier kneeling “at the corner of the Rossville Street flats” with his rifle aimed into the car park. There was another soldier standing a few feet from the rear wall of one of the houses in Chamberlain Street, who had his rifle in his shoulder in an aiming position. Michael Bridge expressed no view as to which, if either, of these soldiers had shot him.

63.27 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge again referred to the two soldiers but said that he did not know which one had shot him.

63.28 In his interview for BBC Radio Foyle, a recording of which was played during his interview with Paul Mahon,¹ Michael Bridge said that he was shot by a soldier “along a w[a]ll” at whom he had been throwing stones.

63.29 In his interview with Don Mullan,¹ Michael Bridge said that he had walked or run towards the soldier who he thought had shot Jackie Duddy, shouting at him, and had then been shot by that soldier.

63.30 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge described a soldier kneeling at the north-east corner of Block 1 and another soldier standing near the corner of the back yard of 36 Chamberlain Street. He stated that, although he was not certain, it was his strong belief that he had been shot by the second of these soldiers. He told us that at the time he had believed that this soldier was responsible for the shooting of Jackie Duddy, probably because this soldier was the closest to Michael Bridge.

63.31 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Michael Bridge said that he did not see, or did not recall having seen, who shot him. However, he expressed² a belief that he had been shot by Lieutenant N, which he said³ was based on evidence that he had heard and read in the course of this Inquiry.

A soldier kneeling on one knee at the north-east corner of Block 1 raised his weapon to his shoulder, pointed it at the man and fired. Fr Edward Daly 63.34 Fr Daly recorded in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ that he had just finished giving the last rites to Jackie Duddy when a young man dashed out towards the soldiers and danced up and down shouting, with his hands stretched up above his head. A soldier “at the corner of the flats” took aim and fired at him. Fr Daly was certain that the man was hit and thought that his name was Bridge. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Fr Daly said that the soldier had stepped out and gone down on one knee before firing. In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Fr Daly told us that the soldier who shot Michael Bridge had stepped out from the north-east corner of Block 1. In his interview with Jimmy McGovern,⁴ Fr Daly said that the soldier stepped out from the corner of the flats and either went down on one knee or crouched. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ Fr Daly said that he had an absolutely clear recollection of the soldier stepping out and firing at Michael Bridge. He was asked⁶ whether it was possible that another soldier had fired the shot that hit Michael Bridge, and said that he thought it very unlikely. Although in his interview with Philip Jacobson and Peter Pringle⁷ he had said that his view of the incident was to some extent limited, Fr Daly said, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁸ that he had had a clear view of the soldier.

He stated that Michael Bridge moved to the point marked “M” on the plan (described in the statement as “within 3 yards of the soldier” but shown on the plan as about 20 yards from him) and Donal Deeney moved close to Michael Bridge, who was shouting at the soldier with his hands forward of his body. The soldier then shot Michael Bridge. Donal Deeney thought that this shot hit Michael Bridge in the leg. Michael Bridge seemed to be in a lot of pain, and someone tried to drag him away, but he moved forward again to “have another go at the soldier”. Donal Deeney recalled that the soldier had then fired another shot that hit Michael Bridge in the stomach, but he accepted in his oral evidence to this Inquiry³ that this recollection was wrong. In a supplementary written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ Donal Deeney told us that the soldier was holding his rifle “just under his armpit” when he fired at Michael Bridge. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ Donal Deeney said that he was not certain that this soldier had shot Michael Bridge. Michael Bridge flinched and hopped back, holding his right thigh. Shooting had been going on before this happened, but it was only when Michael Bridge flinched that Gerard Doherty realised that shots were being fired into the car park. He then instinctively looked in the direction in which Michael Bridge was looking, and saw a soldier leaning against the wall of Block 1 at its northern end. This soldier was aiming his rifle directly at Michael Bridge and was “the only one there”. Gerard Doherty stated that he considered that this was the only soldier who could have shot Michael Bridge. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Gerard Doherty said that it was his recollection that Michael Bridge had been closer to the south end of Chamberlain Street when he was shot than the position in which he is shown in the second of the two photographs taken by Sam Gillespie which are reproduced earlier in this report.³ On that basis, Gerard Doherty said⁴ that he did not think that Michael Bridge could have been shot by a soldier at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. However, he accepted that Michael Bridge could have been shot by a soldier beside Sergeant O’s APC and also accepted that his recollection of Michael Bridge’s position at the time of the shooting could be wrong.

In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Bernard Gilmour told us that the soldier was standing at the north-east corner of Block 1 and that he fired from the waist. Bernard Gilmour stated that he knew that this soldier had shot Michael Bridge, because he saw the recoil of the weapon. He said the same in his oral evidence to this Inquiry.⁴ He also said⁵ that the description of the soldier in the joint NICRA statement as kneeling was “a total mistake”. The soldier had been standing and Michael Bridge had been confronting him. Joe Nicholas thought that the soldier in the doorway was standing and that the second soldier was kneeling. Both were in firing positions. A man came running across the car park and was shot in the thigh. Joe Nicholas told us that he found out later that this was Michael Bridge; and that he did not see who fired the shot, but he heard the shot and formed the impression that it had come from the soldier who was kneeling at the point marked “E”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Joe Nicholas said that he could not recall why he formed the impression that this soldier had fired rather than the soldier in the doorway, but that he thought that the kneeling soldier had been aiming his rifle, whereas he did not recall that the soldier in the doorway had been doing so. He accepted⁴ that he was “not in a position to say” who shot Michael Bridge.

Brian Ward told us that he saw one of these soldiers go down on one knee, bring his rifle to his shoulder and fire. He then saw Michael Bridge fall, having been hit in the left thigh. OIRA 8 told us that he thought that it had been fired by the soldier who was kneeling at the north end of Block 1. Michael Bridge fell and OIRA 8 saw that he had been hit in the leg. OIRA 8 was sure that Michael Bridge had been shot by the soldier at the north end of Block 1. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² OIRA 8 said that he could not be sure that he had seen the soldier’s rifle move, and he had only assumed that this soldier had fired the shot that hit Michael Bridge because he had seen the soldier turn and aim his rifle when Michael Bridge shouted at him.

63.42 Denis Mullan told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was observing events from the balcony on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats from about the point marked "A" on the plan attached to his statement² (north of the centre of that block). He stated that he saw two soldiers disembark from the back of a vehicle after it had stopped at the point marked "B" on the plan (in the entrance to the car park) with its front facing towards Chamberlain Street. Both soldiers immediately took up firing positions. One was facing south at the point marked "C" on the plan (on the offside of the vehicle). He was standing with his rifle in his shoulder. The other soldier was covering him from the point marked "D" (behind the first soldier). Denis Mullan saw a man jumping about as if incandescent with rage, saying something like "here I am, shoot me". He later found out that this was Michael Bridge. Denis Mullan stated that the soldier at point C shot Michael Bridge in his left leg from a range of 12 to 15ft; and that he thought that the soldier had deliberately inclined his rifle downwards in order to strike Michael Bridge in the leg rather than the upper body. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Denis Mullan said that the soldier who fired was on the offside of the vehicle, slightly forward of the rear doors. He said he knew that this soldier had fired because he saw the recoil of the weapon, heard a high velocity crack, and saw the result.

However, in his written statement to this Inquiry⁴ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ he told us that the soldier fired his rifle from the nearside of the vehicle, and that he may have been leaning on the bonnet. Michael Bridge began to run towards the soldiers. He was shouting and swearing at the soldiers, and also at a group of men at the western gable wall of Chamberlain Street for hiding from the soldiers and not helping Jackie Duddy. When Michael Bridge shouted “Shoot me – shoot me”, the soldier in the group of three who was closest to the vehicle casually lifted his gun to his shoulder and shot Michael Bridge. Mitchel McLaughlin stated that he was looking directly at the soldier when this happened. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Mitchel McLaughlin confirmed his belief that Michael Bridge had been shot by one of the soldiers in the group of three, and said that although he had always believed that the soldier who shot Michael Bridge was the closest of that group to the vehicle, he could not swear to this.

Hugh McMonagle

63.46 Hugh McMonagle told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he was standing within about 3 yards of Michael Bridge who was walking towards an Army vehicle parked at Eden Place shouting words like “You murdering bastards, you shot the young lad. Come on, come on, shoot me’.” A second Army vehicle appeared and stopped in the position indicated by a rectangle on the plan attached to Hugh McMonagle’s statement² (north of the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats), pointing towards Chamberlain Street. A soldier disembarked and moved in front of this vehicle on the nearside. The soldier knelt, raised his rifle to his shoulder and looked through the sight. Hugh McMonagle stated that he heard a shot; and that Michael Bridge shouted that he had been hit in the leg. Hugh McMonagle did not see which soldier had fired, but assumed that it had been the soldier at the front of the second vehicle because that soldier was the only one Hugh McMonagle could see. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Hugh McMonagle said that the second vehicle had been further north than had been indicated in his statement, and he marked its position with an arrow on a plan⁴ (on the waste ground at Pilot Row). He said that he did not see a vehicle in the entrance to the car park.

Martin Tucker

63.47 As we have noted earlier in this chapter, Martin Tucker was watching from 31 Garvan Place, the third maisonette from the south-east end of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats on the second and third floors.¹ In his NICRA statement,² Martin Tucker referred to a young boy who seemed to have lost his head and was running and waving his arms, while a priest was attending to a boy who had already been shot. Martin Tucker recorded that “the soldiers” shot the boy who was waving his arms, but he gave no details. In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Martin Tucker told us that two soldiers disembarked from an Army vehicle that had entered the car park of the Rossville Flats. The soldiers moved to the front of the vehicle and one of them stood by the “offside door”. Martin Tucker was not sure whether the other soldier had gone to the other side of the vehicle, but recalled that they were both quite close together, and that the “one that moved closest to Block 1” was leaning on the front of the vehicle. According to this statement, within seconds at least one of the soldiers, and probably both, had opened fire. Martin Tucker told us that he saw the soldier by the “offside door” aiming his rifle. He heard a crack and saw Jackie Duddy fall. After Fr Daly had come to the assistance of Jackie Duddy, Martin Tucker stated that he saw a man with his arms extended walking towards “the soldier standing at the offside” of the vehicle and shouting. The soldier aimed his rifle at the man. Martin Tucker heard a shot. The man clutched at his right hip and fell. Martin Tucker told us he now knew that this was Michael Bridge. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ however, Martin Tucker said that by “off-side door” he had meant the passenger (ie nearside) door. He confirmed⁵ that it was towards a soldier on that side of the vehicle that he had seen Michael Bridge walking. He attributed the shooting of Michael Bridge to the soldier who had been aiming his rifle at Michael Bridge, and ultimately appeared to be saying that this soldier was one of two who had disembarked and moved to the front of the vehicle on the passenger side.⁶

Sean O’Neill

63.48 Sean O’Neill told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that an Army vehicle was parked at the point marked “12” on the plan attached to his statement² (in the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats close to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses). He stated that he thought that the vehicle was facing south but was not certain about this. Sean O’Neill also stated that he ran past the western gable end of Chamberlain Street, heading towards the north-east corner of the car park. As he ran, he looked back and saw Michael Bridge standing nearby, swearing at soldiers near the vehicle and waving his arms. A tall soldier “swung out of the right hand side back door” of the vehicle. This soldier aimed his rifle at Michael Bridge and fired. Michael Bridge fell backwards. Sean O’Neill told us that he thought that Michael Bridge had been shot in the left leg. Sean O’Neill did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry.

Brian Baker

63.49 Brian Baker told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was in Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, on the balcony marked with a circle on a photograph attached to his statement² (the fifth floor balcony). He stated that he saw a man with dirty fair hair move to the corner of the back yard of 36 Chamberlain Street. The man shouted several times in the direction of the waste ground something like “Shoot me too, you bastards”. A shot rang out and the man clutched his leg. Brian Baker told us that he thought that the soldier who had shot him was positioned “in the lane at the back of Chamberlain Street”. He stated that he now knew that the man was Michael Bridge. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Brian Baker said that from his position he could not see whether there were soldiers in the lane but that it was “obvious from, you know, subsequent events” that there were.

Michael Bridge

63.50 Michael Bridge (not the Michael Bridge who was injured but his cousin) told us that he lived at 4 Garvan Place.¹ The front door of this maisonette, which was the second from the north end of the block, opened onto the balcony on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.² Michael Bridge told us in his statement to this Inquiry³ that he came out of that door and saw a man with his arms in the air facing an isolated soldier who was standing at about the point marked “C” on the plan attached to the statement⁴ (a few yards from the wall of the back yard of 34 Chamberlain Street). The soldier was holding his rifle at shoulder level and pointing it at the man. Michael Bridge told us that he saw the soldier shoot the man whose arms were in the air. He stated that he did not recall seeing a muzzle flash or the recoil of the weapon, but heard a bang and saw the man react. He told us that he now knew that this man was his cousin Michael Bridge. He confirmed this account in his oral evidence to this Inquiry.⁵

According to this statement, Michael Bridge was waving his arms, jumping in the air and shouting “shoot me, shoot me you bastards” as Charlie Downey ran past him. Charlie Downey stopped briefly and turned to look at Michael Bridge. Charlie Downey then heard a single loud bang and saw Michael Bridge fall. He assumed, but did not know, that the bang had come from the soldier at the corner of the back yard of 36 Chamberlain Street. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Charlie Downey said that he made this assumption because Michael Bridge had been walking towards that soldier.

Francis Duddy

63.52 Francis Duddy told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was standing at the western gable end of Chamberlain Street while Fr Daly moved forward to try to assist a boy who was lying in a pool of blood in the car park of the Rossville Flats. Francis Duddy told us that he now knew that the boy was Jackie Duddy. A soldier arrived at the point marked “H” on the plan attached to Francis Duddy’s statement² (the western corner of the southern entrance to Chamberlain Street). According to this statement the soldier began to fire live rounds between Fr Daly and Jackie Duddy in an apparent attempt to prevent Fr Daly from assisting Jackie Duddy. Michael Bridge became angry and told the soldier that he was shooting at a priest. The soldier said that if Michael Bridge did not move back he would shoot him, to which Michael Bridge replied “well shoot me then”. The soldier then shot Michael Bridge in the leg. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Francis Duddy said that the soldier was not at point H and appeared to place him somewhere further west along or beyond the gable wall. Francis Duddy said⁴ that he did not see the soldier fire, but heard the shot.

Francis Dunne

63.53 Francis Dunne recorded in his NICRA statement¹ that as he was running through the car park of the Rossville Flats he paused, looked back and saw three soldiers along the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. The soldier at the front of the group was firing from the hip towards the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. Francis Dunne recorded that he saw a boy fall, and then saw a taller man standing in the middle of the car park with his hands up and spread wide, shouting “They are shooting, they are killing”. This man also went down. In another NICRA statement,² Francis Dunne recorded that he did not know whether the taller man had been hit, but “The soldier” certainly fired at him. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry³ and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,⁴ Francis Dunne said that the soldier who fired at a tallish youth was the soldier at the front of the group, at the corner of the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, and that he fired from the hip. According to John Goddard’s interview note,⁵ Francis Dunne told him that there was an Army vehicle by the back entrance of Block 1, and that Michael Bridge was shot as he advanced towards that vehicle by a soldier facing him from behind it. In his interview with Paul Mahon,⁶ Francis Dunne said that the vehicle was at the north-east corner of Block 1 and that the man with his hands in the air was shouting at a soldier who was standing at that corner. He said that he “would have been talking about the man at Rossville Flats” when, in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, he described the soldier who fired at the tallish youth, although in fact in that statement he put the soldier at the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses.⁷ In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁸ Francis Dunne told us that the vehicle was at the point marked “G” on the plan attached to the statement⁹ (near the north-east corner of Block 1) and that three soldiers were standing approximately in the positions marked “1”, “2” and “3” on that plan (in front of the vehicle in a line across the entrance to the car park). The westernmost soldier was leaning against the wall of Block 1, holding his rifle at hip level. Francis Dunne had the impression that this soldier fired and that the tall man then fell, although he could not say that he had seen this soldier fire or that it was his shot that hit the tall man, and he did not notice the soldier’s rifle recoiling. He told us that he believed that the tall man was Michael Bridge. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹⁰ Francis Dunne accepted that over the years his memory had transposed the three soldiers from the back of the Chamberlain Street houses to the positions described in his written statement to this Inquiry, and said that he would be much happier with the accounts that he gave at the time. He confirmed this in later questioning.¹¹

Joseph Ernest Moore

63.54 Joseph Ernest Moore recorded in his NICRA statement¹ that he looked back as he was running through the car park of the Rossville Flats and saw two soldiers beating an elderly, grey-haired man. Two other soldiers were in the same area, aiming their rifles from the shoulder. Joseph Ernest Moore saw “a person with his two hands above his head – like a challenge, calling to come to the assistance of the man”. One of the soldiers moved forward to a “steady position”, pointed his rifle at “the youth” and fired. Joseph Ernest Moore recorded that he saw “the person’s leg go out” and the person fell. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Joseph Ernest Moore recorded that the youth emerged “from behind a house near Chamberlain Street”, waving and shouting at the soldiers with his hands above his head. He was shot in the leg from a range of no more than 10 yards by one of two soldiers who were in a firing position “near the fence in the car park”. In his Praxis interview note,³ Tony Stark stated that Joseph Ernest Moore had witnessed the shooting of Michael Bridge, but did not record Joseph Ernest Moore’s recollection of the position of the soldier who shot Michael Bridge. In his interview with Paul Mahon,⁴ Joseph Ernest Moore appeared to be uncertain of the position of the soldier. In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁵ Joseph Ernest Moore told us that a “fella ... in his twenties” who had “come across the car park” was shot by one of “two soldiers close to the gable end of the western side of Chamberlain Street”. He stated that the soldier fired after going down on one knee and aiming his rifle, and that he saw the recoil of the rifle. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁶ Joseph Ernest Moore said that the man who was shot had approached from somewhere on the waste ground, around the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, rather than from the car park. The soldier who fired was facing up towards the point marked “D” on the plan attached to Joseph Ernest Moore’s statement to this Inquiry,⁷ or slightly to the right of that point (north-east along the back of the Chamberlain Street houses). He said he now knew that this man was Michael Bridge. He was asked⁸ whether he still had an image in his mind of the soldier going down on one knee and aiming at Michael Bridge, and replied: “No, I would say it is dependent on my statement, you know, honestly.”

Civilian evidence relating to the position of the soldier who shot Michael Bradley

Michael Bradley's own accounts

63.55 Michael Bradley is recorded, in an account published in Fulvio Grimaldi and Susan North's book Blood in the Street, as having said that he did not know which soldier had shot him. In his interview with Don Mullan,¹ he said that he did not see "the exact soldier" and could not say in which direction the bullet had come. He had thought that he had been shot by "the boy right in front of me kneeling at the front of the Saracen", but now presumed that he had been shot from somewhere around "the angle of the flats, you know the corner of the Rossville Flats where I was standing". In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Michael Bradley told us that he did not know who had shot him, although he remembered seeing a soldier leaning over the mudguard of an Army vehicle. Earlier in his statement³ he had given a more detailed description of this soldier, which suggested that he was leaning over the offside mudguard of Sergeant O's vehicle with his rifle apparently aimed at Michael Bradley, and of another soldier on the nearside of the vehicle. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Michael Bradley withdrew that description and said that all that he could clearly recall was that there were two soldiers at the front of the vehicle and that they both looked in his direction. He said that he could not say who had shot him.⁵ The two soldiers at the front of the vehicle had been looking towards him, and he had presumed that it must have been one of them, but it was quite possible that it was a soldier at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and it "could have been any one of them". In his interview with Jimmy McGovern,⁶ Michael Bradley expressed the view that he was shot by Private Q or Private R, but said that he did not know from where the shot had come.⁷

Hugh Barbour

63.56 Hugh Barbour told us, in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he was watching from a position about two-thirds of the way from the north to the south end of the balcony on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He described a soldier who had disembarked from an APC parked in the entrance to the car park and moved towards the offside front of the vehicle. He stated that this soldier fired four or five rounds in quick succession from the hip towards a crowd in front of Block 2. A man seemed to stagger and fall back towards Block 2. Hugh Barbour then heard someone shout that Michael Bradley had been shot. Hugh Barbour told us that he saw Michael Bradley, who was his neighbour, lying on the ground clutching the right side of his body; and that he had “clearly” been shot by the soldier on the offside of the vehicle. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Hugh Barbour resisted the suggestion that the person whom he had seen fall might have been someone other than Michael Bradley.

A soldier beside Sergeant O's Armoured Personnel Carrier

Danny Deehan

63.57 Danny Deehan recorded in his NICRA statement¹ that he had run into the car park of the Rossville Flats and jumped over the wall that ran parallel to Block 2. Another man, who had gone over the wall in front of him, turned to look at the soldiers and was shot in the arm by soldiers who were firing “from the side of the saracen” in the entrance to the car park. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Danny Deehan told us that he now knew that this was Michael Bradley, but that his current recollection was that he saw him for the first time when Michael Bradley was behind the wall, struggling to stand up with his arm shaking and trembling. Nevertheless, Danny Deehan stated that he believed the account given in his NICRA statement to be true, as it was made when events were fresh in his mind. He could not now say who shot whom. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry³ Danny Deehan confirmed that he saw Michael Bradley on the ground after he had been shot, and that he remembered this “more clearly” than seeing the shooting itself.

63.58 As we have already mentioned, Martin Tucker was watching from his family's home at 31 Garvan Place. This was the third maisonette from the south-east end of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats on the second and third floors.¹ In his NICRA statement,² Martin Tucker recorded that a man wearing a red pullover and denims and a black jacket was shot in the stomach by "a soldier who was standing beside a Saracen". In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Martin Tucker told us that he saw a man in a red jumper shot in the upper body or shoulder, and that he thought that this may have been Michael Bradley. However, he could not link this shooting with any particular soldier. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Martin Tucker said that it was possible that he had seen the red pullover worn by Jackie Duddy and transposed this recollection to his description of Michael Bradley.

Summary	64.96

64.1 It is important at this stage to bear in mind a number of matters that we have dealt with in detail earlier in this report,¹ where we have given our reasons for reaching certain conclusions.

¹ Paragraphs 52.14 and 54.6; Chapters 55, 58 and 63

64.2 In the first place, we are satisfied that the known casualties in Sector 2 were the only casualties of Army gunfire in that sector. It follows that the soldiers did not shoot any gunmen or bombers in Sector 2.

64.3 In the second place, we are satisfied that none of the casualties was doing anything that could have justified any of them being shot.

- 64.4 In the third place, we are satisfied that no soldier other than Lieutenant N, Sergeant O, Lance Corporal V, Private Q, Private R, Private S and Private T, all of Mortar Platoon, could have been responsible for any of the casualties in Sector 2.
- 64.5 In the fourth place, we consider that it is improbable that, apart from “Fr Daly’s gunman” (OIRA 4), there were any gunmen at ground level in the car park of the Rossville Flats or its surrounding area who deployed or attempted to deploy their guns. We are sure that no-one threw or attempted to throw a nail or petrol bomb. It is probable that there was a gunman who fired from the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats and also possible that a man with a handgun fired a single shot from a window high up in Block 1.
- 64.6 In the fifth place, none of the soldiers admitted shooting any of the Sector 2 casualties nor (with the possible exception of Private R) even the possibility that he had hit any of them by accident while aiming at another target. All of them (except for Lieutenant N in respect of the shots that he fired up the Eden Place alleyway, which caused no casualties) insisted that they had fired only at men who were deploying or seeking to deploy firearms or bombs, and that those they hit were their intended targets.
- 64.7 Furthermore, with the possible exception of Lance Corporal V and Private S, none of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon admitted seeing any of the Sector 2 casualties after they were shot,¹ despite the fact that those who sustained gunshot wounds were in the car park only a short distance from the soldiers and would have been in full view of anyone looking into the car park. In particular, as will have been seen,² Jackie Duddy lay on the ground long enough to be photographed several times before he was picked up, and was photographed again as he was carried across the car park to Chamberlain Street. Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron were indirectly injured as the result of firing by soldiers in this sector, but we accept that the soldiers might not have been aware of this. We also accept that the soldiers were unlikely to have been aware that Patrick Brolly had been hit, since he was in Kathleen Cunningham’s flat.
- ¹ Private S told the Widgery Inquiry that he thought he saw a body in the car park before he fired, but gave no further details (WT13.7-WT13.8). ² Chapter 55
- 64.8 We have already pointed out that according to the accounts of these soldiers, they had between them shot three nail or blast bombers, one petrol bomber, one man with a pistol and two or three men with rifles or carbines, which makes a total of seven or eight gunmen or bombers. They had fired 32 shots, three fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway (which did not result in any casualties) and the remainder in the area of the Rossville Flats car park.

64.9 We have earlier provided a map¹ on which we have marked the position of the targets at which the soldiers said that they had fired. It is convenient to reproduce that map here.

-  Targets the soldiers claim to have hit
- 1 Lieutenant N's target: man about to throw a bomb
 - 2 Private S's target: man (or more than one man) with a rifle
 - 3 Lance Corporal V's target: man with a petrol bomb (location based on Lance Corporal V's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry)
 - 4 Private Q's target: man with nail bombs
 - 5 Private R's target: man with fizzing or smoking object
 - 6 Sergeant O's target: man with a pistol behind a Cortina
 - 7 Sergeant O's target: man with a rifle on lower balcony of Block 3
-  Targets the soldiers claim to have missed (or do not claim positively to have hit)
- 1 Private R's target: man with a pistol
 - 2 Sergeant O's target: man with a rifle
 - 3 Private T's target: man with acid bombs on Block 1 balcony

64.10 It follows from the conclusions stated above¹ that these soldiers must, between them, have been responsible for shooting Jackie Duddy, Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley and for the shots that caused injury to Patrick Brolly, Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron. We consider below² whether any of the soldiers mistakenly believed that he was justified in firing.

² Paragraphs 64.17–95

64.11 In short, the soldiers insisted that they had shot gunmen and bombers, which in our view they had not; and denied, or did not admit, that they had shot the known casualties in Sector 2, which in our view they had. As we have already observed,¹ to our minds it inevitably follows that this materially undermines the credibility of the accounts given by the soldiers who fired. The evidence of one or more of them must be significantly inaccurate and incomplete.

64.12 For ease of reference, we show again the map on which we have marked the positions of the casualties in Sector 2 when they were shot or otherwise injured.

Casualty who was killed or mortally wounded in the car park of the Rossville Flats

1 Jackie Duddy

Casualties who were wounded in this area

2 Margaret Deery

3 Patrick Brolly

4 Michael Bridge

5 Michael Bradley

6 Pius McCarron

7 Patrick McDaid

64.13

It is also convenient to show here a further map on which we have marked where, according to their trajectory photographs, the soldiers were when they fired.

64.14 We have found no evidence that suggests to us that Jackie Duddy, Michael Bridge or Michael Bradley was shot by accident. Apart from the soldiers' evidence that this had not happened, the short distances between the soldiers and these casualties, and the fact that in our view no-one in the car park of the Rossville Flats other than OIRA 4, whom none of the soldiers saw, was using or about to use a firearm or bomb, lead us to conclude that the shots that hit these three casualties were aimed at them. The same might be true of the shot that hit Margaret Deery, though we consider that she was probably more likely to have been the victim of a shot fired at someone close to her. However, we are of the view that there was no-one close to her who was using or about to use a firearm or bomb. OIRA 4 did not approach the wall of 36 Chamberlain Street until after Margaret Deery had been shot. There is no evidence that any of the firing in Sector 2 was accidental, in the sense of soldiers discharging their rifles by mistake, not intending to fire.

64.15 In the light of the evidence we have considered in detail earlier in this report,¹ and the views we have expressed on that evidence, as well as the conclusions we have stated above, we now turn to consider the firing by the soldiers in Sector 2 to see whether it is possible, firstly, to determine which casualty was shot by which soldier and, secondly, to ascertain whether or not each of the soldiers concerned believed (albeit mistakenly) that he had identified as his target someone who was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

64.16 We appreciate that soldiers on internal security duties, facing a situation in which they or their colleagues might at any moment come under attack, may have little time to decide whether they have identified, and so are justified in firing at, a person posing a threat of causing death or serious injury; and may have to make the decision in a state of tension or fear. As we observed when discussing the events of Sector 1,¹ it is a well-known phenomenon that, particularly when under stress or when events are moving fast, people often erroneously come to believe that they are or might be hearing or seeing what they were expecting to hear or see. We have borne this in mind when assessing the credibility of the evidence given by soldiers. We have also borne in mind that the fact that a soldier afterwards lied about what had happened does not necessarily entail that he fired without believing that he had identified a person posing a threat of causing death or serious injury, since it is possible that he was convinced at the time that he had identified someone posing such a threat, but later invented details in an attempt to bolster his account and make it more credible to others.

Lieutenant N

64.17 In our view Lieutenant N could not have been responsible for the shooting of Jackie Duddy or Margaret Deery. After the incident at the Eden Place alleyway, he returned to his APC and did not start towards the car park until after William John Doherty, arrested by Sergeant O, had been brought back to Lieutenant N's APC. By this stage we are sure that Jackie Duddy and Margaret Deery had already been shot. We have found nothing that suggests to us that Lieutenant N might have shot Michael Bradley.

64.18 In our view Lieutenant N probably shot Michael Bridge. This casualty was shot after Fr Daly had gone to the aid of Jackie Duddy and after Margaret Deery had been shot. This shooting would correspond in time with the period after Lieutenant N had gone towards the car park from his APC. Lieutenant N believed that he had hit his target in the thigh, and that the person he shot then staggered away. Michael Bridge was shot in the thigh and staggered away. On Lieutenant N's trajectory photograph, the line from the point marked "x" to the point marked "3" is intended to show the trajectory of his final shot. Extending this line suggests that the shot would have passed to the south-east of where we believe Michael Bridge was shot, but only by a short distance. We set out below Lieutenant N's trajectory photograph and a map depicting Lieutenant N's position, the line of his shot as shown on the trajectory photograph, and the position where we believe Michael Bridge was when he was shot.

64.19

Lieutenant N described his target as having adopted a bowling position. The first of the two photographs of Michael Bridge taken by Sam Gillespie shortly before Michael Bridge was shot shows him in a position that could loosely be so described.

Michael
Bridge

64.20 Lieutenant N denied shooting Michael Bridge. His descriptions of the clothes his target was wearing and of the direction from which his target had come are not consistent with what Michael Bridge was wearing or the direction from which he had in fact come. Michael Bridge was shot in the left thigh, but Lieutenant N said that he thought that he had hit his target in the right thigh. As we have already observed,¹ civilian witnesses have identified a variety of places from where they believe a soldier shot Michael Bridge. Nevertheless, since no-one else (apart from Margaret Deery, who we are sure was not shot by Lieutenant N) was shot in the thigh, and since for reasons given hereafter,² we are of the view that none of the other soldiers shot Michael Bridge, we have concluded that the evidence as a whole establishes that Lieutenant N was responsible for the shooting of Michael Bridge.

² Paragraphs 64.32–95

Lieutenant N's state of mind

64.21 The question remains whether Lieutenant N believed at the time that he had targeted and hit someone about to throw a nail bomb. He has consistently maintained that this was the case, and though he also told us that he has since agonised over the matter, he said that he remained sure that at the time he believed he was justified in firing.

64.22 Lieutenant N said to the Widgery Inquiry that he had been told that the Rossville Flats were a particularly dangerous spot.¹ He had approached the flats from his APC knowing that other soldiers of his platoon were ahead of him. Notwithstanding his evidence that he heard no shooting at this stage, we consider that he is very likely to have heard one or both of the shots that hit Jackie Duddy and Margaret Deery, and perhaps the early shots in Sector 3, which we discuss when considering the events of that sector.² He would in our view have been in a state of high alert when he reached the position from where he shot Michael Bridge, who might well have appeared to him to be approaching his soldiers in a bowling posture.

64.23 However, Michael Bridge was approaching the soldiers in front of Lieutenant N. Michael Bridge was on his own and in the open, without any immediate means of escape or cover. For someone to act in this way with a visible nail bomb would have been little short of suicidal and a complete departure from the way in which such weapons were usually deployed, namely from a position of cover. There would have been little time for Lieutenant N to assess the situation, but to our minds a soldier in his position would, or should have, realised that it was at least equally likely that the person was, at worst, coming forward to throw a non-lethal missile.

64.24 Lance Corporal V, Private S, Sergeant O, Private R and Private Q were closer to Michael Bridge than Lieutenant N and would have been able to see him had they been looking in that direction. None of these soldiers gave evidence of seeing Michael Bridge but we consider that one or more must have had him in view, as he was only a few yards away and on his own. None appears to have regarded Michael Bridge as posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

64.25 In his first RMP statement,¹ in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ Lieutenant N gave accounts of seeing or thinking that he had seen smoke coming from the object in the man's hand.

³ WT12.67-68

² B399

64.26 There was no smoking object in Michael Bridge's hands. We do not accept that Lieutenant N, who was not wearing his respirator, could have thought otherwise. In our view Lieutenant N invented this part of his account. We have considered whether he did this simply to make what he believed sound more credible, but in our view, in the circumstances of his case, it is equally likely that he would not have added this false detail had he been sure at the time that he had identified a nail bomber.

64.27 We should note at this point that the Regimental Sergeant Major of 1 PARA (Warrant Officer Class I INQ 2037) told us that after observing the loading of arrestees into a truck in the William Street area, he had gone forward to see what was going on and to find out what had happened to his nephew (Private 005 of Machine Gun Platoon). He was directed to an APC which was, according to him, in the area a little way north of the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He told us that he had found Private 005 with Lieutenant N in the front of the APC and that, when he asked Private 005 whether he was “okay”, Private 005 had said: “yes but he’s not.” Warrant Officer Class I INQ 2037 stated that Private 005 “was referring to Lieutenant N who shouldn’t have been in the Pig but was sheltering there because he was scared”.¹

64.28 Both Lieutenant N and Private 005 told us that this did not happen. Private 005 said that he believed that Warrant Officer Class I INQ 2037 was thinking of something that had happened on another occasion.¹ Since we are unable to reconcile these conflicting accounts, and since, even if Warrant Officer Class I INQ 2037 was correct, we consider that his evidence does not assist in enabling any inference to be drawn as to Lieutenant N’s state of mind when he fired, we do not take his evidence into account in our assessment of that state of mind.

¹ Day 322/103-104; Day 322/117-118; Day 323/15-17; Day 338/156-159

64.29 Lieutenant N shot Michael Bridge in the thigh. He told the Widgery Inquiry that the man was about 30 to 40 yards away.¹

¹ B399

64.30 Lieutenant N’s evidence was that he had aimed at the centre of the body: “I brought my rifle to my shoulder and fired an aimed shot at the man’s chest. That was the target we were trained to aim at.”¹ We remain in doubt as to whether this is what Lieutenant N did. The fact that his shot hit the thigh and not the torso could indicate either that Lieutenant N had fired in haste without taking proper aim, or that he aimed at the thigh, or that he simply missed the area of the body at which he had aimed.

64.31 Our assessment of the evidence makes us sure that Lieutenant N fired, either in the belief that his target was about to throw a nail bomb, but without any adequate grounds for that belief; or in the belief that his target might have been about to throw a nail bomb, but without being confident that that was so. In either case, it is possible that Lieutenant N fired in a state of fear or panic, without giving proper thought to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

Sergeant O

64.32 In our view the shots fired by Sergeant O on Bloody Sunday did not hit anyone, though his shots towards the corner of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats may have indirectly resulted in the injuries to Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron, or one of these two. According to his accounts, he fired at and hit a man with a pistol who was behind a Cortina car on the south-east side of the car park; and a man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats. He also said that he shot at but probably missed a further man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon at the corner of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. All these shots are shown on his trajectory photograph.

64.33 We have no reason to doubt that Sergeant O fired in the directions shown in his trajectory photograph, but in our view there were no casualties with gunshot wounds at or near the positions where he said that he had hit a man with a pistol and a man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon.

64.34 We have already concluded that there were no casualties of Army gunfire other than those we have identified. We should point out here that any suggestion to the contrary necessarily involves the proposition that the many civilians who gave accounts of what they saw in Sector 2 and in Sector 5 (which was on the other side of the Rossville Flats and which we consider later in this report¹) obeyed instructions or somehow knew that they should only mention what had happened to certain individuals, and should keep quiet about others. The instructions would have to have been given and accepted, or this state of knowledge acquired, at the latest very soon after the firing, so that those talking to the media or Kathleen Keville or giving Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) statements would have known both which gunshot casualties they could describe and, more importantly, which they should not. It is not explained how people could have known or been made aware of which casualties could be mentioned and which should be concealed, nor by whom and by what means instructions could have been given to all who might be giving Keville interviews or NICRA statements or talking to the media and who might have seen casualties, so as to ensure that certain casualties were kept secret. It is also not explained how journalists who were on the scene, such as Gilles Peress, could have been persuaded to censor or misreport what they saw.

64.35 In these circumstances we are of the view that any such suggestion has no basis in fact.

64.36 We also reject Sergeant O's description of the incoming fire that he said occurred in Sector 2. As will have been seen from his various accounts, he appeared to be saying that, with the exception of the men on the south-east side and near the south-east corner of the car park at whom he said he fired, and of the rifleman at ground level he said he saw Private S engaging in the area between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, the firing from both high and low velocity weapons was coming from about four or five positions in the area of the Rossville Flats, including from the flats themselves. He described it as the most intense firing he had experienced in Northern Ireland in such a short space of time and told the Widgery Inquiry that there had been about 20 to 30 shots in the initial burst; and then continuous fire for about two or three minutes, at the end of which about 80 to 100 shots had been fired. He later told Praxis Films Ltd that his soldiers were spotting gunmen and firing at them, and that the gunmen were eliminated fairly quickly. He also told Praxis Films Ltd that there was automatic fire, though he said to us that this was not so.

64.37 Private T was the only other soldier in Mortar Platoon who said that he fired up at the Rossville Flats, but that was at someone who was throwing down acid or a similar corrosive substance. No soldier other than Sergeant O claimed to have engaged a gunman in the Rossville Flats in Sector 2, though a soldier (probably Private T) fired the shot that injured Patrick Brolly. Thus Sergeant O's description of a full-scale gun battle between gunmen and soldiers in the car park, in which the gunmen and the soldiers exchanged fire and by the end of which the soldiers had dealt with the gunmen, bears in our view no resemblance either to what happened or indeed to what the other soldiers said had happened. According to those soldiers, there was a man firing an M1 carbine or similar weapon at ground level in the area of the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, and a gunman or gunmen on the south-east side and near the car park, but otherwise the men at whom they fired were, according to them, deploying petrol, nail or acid bombs and not firearms. Furthermore, Sergeant O's account of his soldiers engaging and eliminating gunmen in a gun battle is hardly consistent with his evidence that the only soldier he saw firing was Private S, who he said was engaging a gunman at ground level.¹

64.38 There is a further consideration. Had the soldiers encountered the degree of incoming fire described by Sergeant O, it seems to us, bearing in mind the short distance between the soldiers and the alleged gunmen, that one or more soldiers would probably have been hit by gunfire, but this did not happen.

64.39 We found Sergeant O's explanation as to why no soldier had been hit unconvincing. He suggested¹ that the reason was that "second rate" men had got hold of "low quality" weapons which were ready for use in the Rossville Flats and that had experienced IRA snipers been firing, his soldiers would have suffered casualties. Such a suggestion can only be categorised as speculation. It assumes, on the basis of the amount of incoming fire that Sergeant O claimed, that there was a substantial stock of low-grade weapons in the Rossville Flats ready for use, which were then used at short notice by inexperienced people. As we describe elsewhere,² both the Provisional and the Official IRA were at the time short of weapons and jealously guarded those that they had.

² Chapters 147 and 148

- 64.40 We have found no evidence that suggests to us that there was a stock of weapons and ammunition in the Rossville Flats, to which inexperienced gunmen could have obtained access at short notice.
- 64.41 There is no doubt that “Fr Daly’s gunman” (OIRA 4) fired from the corner of the garden wall of 36 Chamberlain Street, after Jackie Duddy had been killed and Michael Bridge had been injured. Sergeant O may have heard this firing, but neither he nor any of the other soldiers said that they saw or heard a gunman firing from there. It is also possible (as Monica Barr told us) that a man with a pistol fired a single shot down from the top floor of the Rossville Flats and that a soldier fired back, though again no soldier said that he did this and we are left in doubt as to whether such an incident occurred. It is probable that Billy Gillespie saw a paramilitary gunman firing from the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats.
- 64.42 Apart from this, we consider that it would be unwise to rely on the accounts of incoming fire given by other soldiers of Mortar Platoon. We have already expressed our views¹ on the unreliability of some of these accounts. It should be noted that a number of these soldiers described incoming gunfire at a stage before Sergeant O arrested William John Doherty, while Sergeant O said that the incoming fire only occurred after or towards the end of this event. With the exceptions described in the previous paragraph, we have concluded that it is probable that there was no firing directed at the soldiers of Mortar Platoon.
- ¹ Chapters 26 and 49
- 64.43 Sergeant O denied that he had heard the three shots fired by Lieutenant N at the Eden Place alleyway.¹ It is possible that he did not hear this firing, though it was only some 75 yards away across an open space, but if he did (which seems to us much more likely) it is possible that with the echo from the Rossville Flats, he might have believed that the firing was coming from there. Some firing by soldiers in Sector 3 (which we consider later in this report²) probably occurred while the events of Sector 2 were unfolding. In addition, there was the substantial firing by soldiers in Sector 2 itself. We have commented more than once in this report on the fact that in a built-up area it is difficult, if not impossible, to identify either the type of weapon being fired or from where it is being fired.
- ¹ Day 336/31-33 ² Chapter 73
- 64.44 In view of these matters, and despite his denials, we consider that Sergeant O is likely to have misidentified some at least of the Army firing he heard as paramilitary firing. As will be seen from our examination of the later events in Sector 3,¹ there was an incident towards the end of the operation in which a number of soldiers mistook Army fire for paramilitary fire. In our view, however, Sergeant O also chose to give an exaggerated and largely false account of what he had witnessed, by describing a gun battle which we are sure did not take place, in order, probably out of misplaced loyalty to his men, to seek to demonstrate that his soldiers had encountered violent opposition and had become engaged in an all-out conflict with paramilitaries equipped with firearms, and thus to support their accounts of what they did.

64.45 We have already noted¹ that Sergeant O said that, apart from Private S, he had not seen any of his soldiers firing, and that he said that he did not remember seeing any of the Sector 2 casualties.

¹ Paragraphs 51.257 and 57.4–7

64.46 It is possible that, apart from Private S, Sergeant O did not see any of his soldiers firing. However, we cannot accept that he failed to see any of the casualties. His explanation for not seeing Jackie Duddy was that he had “tunnel vision”¹ while engaging his first two gunmen, but we do not accept this explanation, since in our view Jackie Duddy was shot and lying on the ground before Sergeant O opened fire. As we have already described,² Jackie Duddy was lying on the ground long enough to be tended by Fr Daly and Charles Glenn and to be photographed by journalists, and was then carried right across the car park to Chamberlain Street. Anyone looking into the car park would have been able to see Michael Bridge being shot when he was on his own and then staggering away after being shot. Michael Bradley and Margaret Deery would also have been visible to anyone looking in their direction. In our view Sergeant O must have seen Jackie Duddy and probably saw Michael Bridge, and perhaps Margaret Deery and Michael Bradley, but chose not to admit this, in all probability to avoid saying anything that might have prejudiced any of the soldiers who fired.

² Paragraphs 55.18–28 and 55.65–68

64.47 For reasons that we have given,¹ it is likely that Sergeant O saw and engaged a gunman towards the south-west end of the lower balcony of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, but we are unpersuaded that he saw a man with a pistol behind a Cortina or a man with an M1 carbine or similar weapon at the corner of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3. In our view his shots at ground level were probably fired in order to keep people’s heads down or to frighten them away, and without any regard to the risk to people in the area. The tactic of firing to keep people's heads down was something Sergeant O mentioned to Praxis Films Ltd,² though he denied³ that this was what he had done on Bloody Sunday.

² O22.5

Lance Corporal V

64.48 In our view Lance Corporal V probably shot Margaret Deery.

64.49 Lance Corporal V and Private S had approached the car park from Lieutenant N's APC at Eden Place. They were involved in the incident with the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer Charles McMonagle, which we have discussed in detail earlier in this report.¹ This incident took place at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses more or less in line with the wire fence that ran along the southern edge of the waste ground. After this incident they continued towards the car park as can be seen in the following enlargement of part of a photograph taken by Colman Doyle.

64.50 Both soldiers were wearing respirators when this photograph was taken. Lance Corporal V told this Inquiry that he could not remember whether he was still wearing his respirator when he fired.¹ We do not know whether or not he took it off before he fired.

64.51 As we have described earlier in this report,¹ Lance Corporal V originally gave an account of seeing a man throwing a bottle with a fuse attached to it, which hit the ground but did not explode; he said that he then shot the man, who was soon surrounded by four or five people who waved white handkerchiefs and attended to the shot man, whom he did not see again. In his account to John Heritage (who, as described earlier,² conducted a preliminary interview of Lance Corporal V for the Widgery Inquiry) he said that the bottle had a lighted fuse and that the man moved back into the crowd after the bottle had been thrown. When he reappeared, Lance Corporal V fired at the man and believed that he had hit him. In his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that he had seen a man holding a bottle with a lit fuse, took aim and though his view was obscured “for a fraction of a second”,³ probably by someone running in front of the man, he fired at the man as soon as he had a clear view; and that the man was thrown backwards to the ground. Lance Corporal V said that all these events had taken place “almost instantaneously”.⁴

² Paragraphs 51.81–83 and 51.107–135

⁴ B802

64.52 Lance Corporal V also told the Widgery Inquiry that when he aimed at the man he was so close that his sight picture was filled with the part he was aiming at.¹

64.53 We set out below Lance Corporal V’s trajectory photograph and a map depicting Lance Corporal V’s position, the line of his shot as shown on the trajectory photograph, and the position where we believe Margaret Deery was when she was shot.

64.54 The line of his shot (according to Lance Corporal V's trajectory photograph) passed through or very close to the position where we believe Margaret Deery was wounded. What Lance Corporal V said about his sight picture indicates that he was near to his target, though in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that his target was 50m to 60m away from him. Margaret Deery said that the soldier who shot her was nearby. According to the soldiers' trajectory photographs, the lines of the shots fired by other members of Mortar Platoon, apart from Lieutenant N, did not go near where Margaret Deery was shot. We have given above¹ our reasons for concluding that Lieutenant N did not shoot Margaret Deery. We have found no evidence that suggests to us that any of the other soldiers who fired hit Margaret Deery.

Lance Corporal V's state of mind

- 64.55 Lance Corporal V denied shooting Margaret Deery. However, we are sure that there was no petrol bomber, such as he had described. Furthermore, we are sure that he gave the Widgery Inquiry a knowingly false account of what he had done, having realised that in his earlier accounts (particularly the one he had given to John Heritage) he had admitted firing at someone who was not posing a threat of causing death or serious injury; at whom it was therefore not necessary or right for him to fire.
- 64.56 Although we consider that Lance Corporal V shot Margaret Deery, we doubt that she was his target. However, it seems to us that Lance Corporal V must have realised that he had shot her, albeit by accident. Margaret Deery was only yards from him and had to be carried from where she fell towards and around the corner at the end of the Chamberlain Street houses.
- 64.57 Although Lance Corporal V told the Widgery Inquiry that he thought that one of the people who had surrounded the body of the man he had shot had been a priest, he denied shooting Jackie Duddy and in our view he did not do so. To our minds the evidence shows that he is the only soldier who could have shot Margaret Deery, who was wounded after Jackie Duddy had been hit. He only fired one shot and, for reasons we give below,¹ we consider that another soldier was responsible for shooting Jackie Duddy.
- ¹ Paragraphs 64.62–66
- 64.58 We find the evidence Lance Corporal V gave about seeing a lit fuse wholly unconvincing and we reject it. At most it is possible that someone in the group of people at the southern end of the western side of the Chamberlain Street houses had thrown a stone or bottle towards the soldiers. It is also possible that Lance Corporal V, who may still have been wearing a respirator which restricted his view, thought that this object might have been a petrol bomb, but this cannot have been more than a suspicion, since even on his account the object did not explode. Furthermore, based on his own original accounts, Lance Corporal V, when he fired, must in our view have realised that his target was no longer posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.
- 64.59 Margaret Deery was shot in the thigh. Since in our view she was not Lance Corporal V's target, the fact that the bullet was at this low height, despite being fired at comparatively short range, indicates to us that Lance Corporal V probably fired in haste without taking proper aim. The case of Lieutenant N is different, because we are sure he hit the person at whom he aimed.

64.60 In the circumstances, we have concluded that Lance Corporal V probably fired in the knowledge that his target was not posing a threat of causing death or serious injury. It is possible that he fired in a state of fear or panic, without giving any proper thought as to whether his target was posing such a threat.

64.61 The result of Lance Corporal V's firing was a grave injury to Margaret Deery.

Private R

64.62 In our view Private R probably hit Jackie Duddy with his first shot. Jackie Duddy was the first casualty in Sector 2, killed as he and others (including Fr Daly) ran away from the soldiers when they came into the Bogside.

64.63 Private R had disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and then ran after it when it continued into the Rossville Flats car park. He described shooting a man, when he had reached Sergeant O's APC, who he said was about to throw a bomb. He told the Widgery Inquiry that he had taken off his respirator just before he reached the waste ground.

64.64 We set out below Private R's trajectory photograph (which shows the path of his first shot towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats) and a map depicting Private R's position, the line of his first shot as shown on the trajectory photograph, and the position where we believe Jackie Duddy was when he was shot.

There is little correlation between Private R's accounts of the incident in which he fired at a man who according to him was throwing a bomb and the evidence of the civilians who told us that they saw Jackie Duddy shot and who described what happened to him afterwards. However, it appears from Private R's account that he fired at his target at a time when there were a number of people still in this area of the car park and close to his target and this does correspond with the accounts of the shooting of Jackie Duddy given by a number of civilians. The line of Private R's shot (according to his trajectory photograph) passed not far from the position where Jackie Duddy fell. The same can be said of the position where Michael Bridge fell, but he was shot when there was no crowd and the car park was more or less deserted, save for the people tending Jackie Duddy. Furthermore, Private R described hitting his target in the right shoulder. This was where Jackie Duddy was hit, whereas Michael Bridge was hit in the thigh.

64.66 For reasons given below,¹ we are satisfied that Private S, Private Q and Private T were not responsible for the shooting of Jackie Duddy. We have already given reasons² for taking the same view in relation to Lieutenant N, Sergeant O and Lance Corporal V.

² Paragraphs 64.17–61

Private R's state of mind

64.67 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private R described being on the lookout for likely snipers or bombers, having heard, according to his account, firing from the area of the rubble barricade in Rossville Street, a couple of explosions he thought were bombs, and weapons being fired from his side of the Rossville Flats.

¹ B670

64.68 We have already concluded¹ that no nail or other bombs exploded in Sector 2 and, for reasons given in the course of this report,² we are of the view that no bombs were thrown or exploded in any of the sectors. We do not know whether Private R invented this part of his account, or simply mistook the firing of other weapons for the explosion of bombs. We also express later in this report³ our view that there was no firing from the rubble barricade, though Private R might have mistakenly thought that there was. We have noted on more than one occasion that in a built-up area it is difficult, if not impossible, to tell from where gunfire is coming. In our view he may have heard the firing by Corporal P in Rossville Street, which we consider in our discussion of Sector 3.⁴ He may also have heard the firing by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway, which we have discussed earlier.⁵

⁴ Chapter 73

² Paragraphs 18.64, 83.8, 111.242 and 119.264

⁵ Chapter 30

³ Paragraph 82.84

64.69 The sound of gunfire would understandably have put a soldier in the position of Private R on high alert, even if he believed that it was or might have been firing by soldiers, since in that event he would in our view be likely to have assumed that the shots were fired at persons who were posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

64.70 On the evidence we have discussed in detail earlier in this report,¹ we are satisfied that Jackie Duddy was shot when running away from the soldiers but that at the moment of the shooting his upper body was turned towards them, as evidenced by the fact that he was hit in the right shoulder. He probably had a stone in his right hand, but we do not know whether he was about to throw it when he was shot.

64.71 Jackie Duddy did not have a smoking object in either of his hands. We do not accept that Private R could have believed that he had and we reject his evidence on this point. We are sure that Private R invented this detail in order to seek to justify his shot. We did not believe Private R when he told us that he had not seen Jackie Duddy being tended on the ground or being carried across the car park, which to our minds indicates that he was seeking to dissociate himself from the person he knew he had probably shot.

64.72 In our view it is probable that Private R thought that Jackie Duddy might have been about to throw a bomb and shot him for this reason, but we consider that he could not have been sufficiently confident about this to conclude that he was justified in firing. It is possible that Private R fired in a state of fear or panic, giving no proper thought as to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

Private R's other shots

64.73 For the same reasons that we gave¹ when discussing Sergeant O's shots towards the corner of the passage between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, we are of the view that Private R did not hit anyone else with the shots that he said (and which we accept) that he later fired across the car park, though these shots may have indirectly injured Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron or one of these two, as they sought to escape through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. In view of his untruthful account of the circumstances in which we believe that he probably shot Jackie Duddy, we can place no reliance on his accounts of seeing gunmen. We are not persuaded that Private R saw a man with a pistol who was shot and fell near the Cortina vehicle in the south-east corner of the car park; in our view the account he gave of this in his second RMP statement cannot be correct, as no-one was wounded in that area. We have concluded that this was a false account, given in order to support what Sergeant O had said about the firing into this part of the car park. In our view Private R probably fired shots across the car park to frighten people or drive them away.

Private Q

- 64.74 In our view Private Q probably shot Michael Bradley, who was wounded after Jackie Duddy had been shot dead, and after Margaret Deery and Michael Bridge had been wounded. Private Q said that after disembarking from Lieutenant N's APC he moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and from the north-east corner of that block saw a man throwing what he believed to be nail bombs, one of which exploded about ten yards from Sergeant O's APC. Private Q said that he then fired at this man's chest, as the man was about to throw another bomb, and that his shot hit the man.
- 64.75 We set out below Private Q's trajectory photograph and a map depicting Private Q's position, the line of his shot as shown on the trajectory photograph, and the position where we believe Michael Bradley was when he was shot.

64.76 Private Q located his target at the corner of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3. We are sure that no-one was shot in the position he described, although Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron were indirectly injured in that area as a consequence of gunfire. However, as will have been seen, the line of Private Q's shot (according to his trajectory photograph) passed close to where we believe that Michael Bradley was shot. Bearing in mind where we believe Michael Bradley was when he was shot, and when he was shot, we consider that it is unlikely that Private Q's firing resulted in the injuries to Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron.

- 64.77 The bullet that hit Michael Bradley struck his left forearm and passed across his chest and into his right forearm. There is accordingly a correlation between the injuries he sustained and the part of the body at which Private Q said that he had fired. There is also the fact that Michael Bradley had been throwing stones and was probably about to throw another when he was shot. Private Q said that his target had been throwing objects, though according to him these objects were bombs, not stones.
- 64.78 We have found no evidence that suggests to us that another soldier shot Michael Bradley. Neither Sergeant O nor Private R suggested that he had fired at a man throwing objects from this corner of the car park, as opposed to a man using a firearm. We consider that Lieutenant N and Lance Corporal V fired at and hit, respectively, Michael Bridge and Margaret Deery, before Michael Bradley was hit. We are satisfied, for reasons given below,¹ that neither Private S nor Private T shot Michael Bradley.

Private Q's state of mind

- 64.79 We are sure that Private Q's account of having previously seen a nail bomb thrown and exploding was to his knowledge untrue. We have considered whether it is possible that Private Q was convinced that he was justified in firing, but later invented this detail in an attempt to bolster his account and make it more credible to others, but, in the circumstances of his case, we have concluded that he would not have added this false detail had he believed when he fired that he had identified a nail bomber.
- 64.80 In our view it is possible that Private Q thought that Michael Bradley might have been about to throw a bomb and shot him for this reason, but in our view, even if this was so, he could not have been sufficiently confident about this to conclude that he was justified in firing. Private Q may have fired in a state of fear or panic, giving no proper thought to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

Private S

- 64.81 Although we accept that Private S fired 12 shots and probably did so from the eastern side of the car park, we are sure that he did not fire at a gunman or gunmen as he claimed in his accounts that he had.

64.82 According to these accounts, about five minutes after he reached a position near the back wall of the last but one house in Chamberlain Street and from that position, he fired four groups of three shots at a man who was firing a rifle in his direction from the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. Private S said that he believed he missed the man with his first group of shots but hit him when he fired his second group. Similarly, he said he believed he missed the man when he fired his third group of three shots but hit him when he fired his fourth group. His evidence was that there was a gap of about 30 seconds between each of his groups of shots, and that on each occasion after he had fired a group of shots, the crowd came between him and the man he was seeking to shoot. He said he did not know whether each group of shots was fired at the same man.

64.83 Private S had come from Lieutenant N's APC and had been involved in the incident with Charles McMonagle, the Order of Malta Ambulance Corps volunteer, at the wall at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, near the fence that ran along the southern edge of the Eden Place waste ground. He can be seen moving forward with Lance Corporal V after this incident in the photograph taken by Colman Doyle.

64.84 Private S told the Widgery Inquiry, in our view falsely, that there were a lot of people milling about in the car park even after he had seen a body lying on the ground. Apart from the fact that there is abundant evidence to contradict Private S's description of people milling about in the car park, it seems to us beyond belief that a gunman or gunmen, let alone a crowd of people, could have behaved in the way Private S described, in the face of his repeated firing only some 50 yards away and the presence of other soldiers in the immediate vicinity. We reject as knowingly untrue the account Private S gave of his firing and of the shots he said were fired at him. There was no casualty in the area in which Private S said that he had shot a gunman or gunmen.

64.85 According to his trajectory photograph, reproduced below, the shots Private S said that he had fired would have passed close to where Jackie Duddy fell.

64.86 In our view Private S did not shoot Jackie Duddy. This casualty was running away to the south when he was shot, but, as Fr Daly told us,¹ he was looking over his shoulder from time to time as he ran. The bullet that killed him entered his right side and the minor injuries on his left side indicate that this was the side onto which he fell. It seems to us therefore that he had turned his upper body to the right when he was shot.

64.87 It is important to bear in mind that, as our experts Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan pointed out, "The greatest care must be exercised in interpreting the track angles in this injury since the mobility of the shoulder may allow for many different positions of the chest and body with the arm in the same position".¹ However, it seems to us that it would not have been possible for Jackie Duddy to have turned his body so far to the right as to present his right shoulder to a soldier firing from near the south end of the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, from where Private S fired. Thus it does not seem possible to us that Private S shot Jackie Duddy, despite the fact that his shots, according to his evidence and his trajectory photograph, which we reproduce below, would have passed through the area where Jackie Duddy fell.

64.88 Private S told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen what he took to be a body lying on the ground in front of him, at a stage that he thought was after he had taken up his position at the back of 34 Chamberlain Street, but before he had fired his first shots.¹ In our view this was the body of Jackie Duddy. He also told the Widgery Inquiry that some time passed, after he took up his position, before he fired his rifle. In his first RMP statement Private S said that the interval was “about five minutes”,² but in our view it cannot in fact have been as long as this, though it might have been some time after he had reached his position; and after he had seen the body of Jackie Duddy. These matters further militate against the possibility that Private S shot Jackie Duddy.

64.89 We have no evidence to suggest that Private S might have shot Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge or Michael Bradley and, for reasons given earlier,¹ we consider that other soldiers were responsible for these casualties. It is possible, but in our view unlikely, that Private S was responsible for firing the bullet that resulted in the injury to Patrick Brolly. In our view he probably fired his shots in order to frighten people rather than aiming at a particular target, but since he had no possible justification for such conduct it seems to us that he did not wish to admit that this was what he had done and so concocted a fictitious account of firing at the targets he described. It is possible that he was the soldier that Joseph Doherty, in his NICRA statement,² recorded seeing fire into the ground in order to ricochet the bullets. He might also have been the soldier Isabella Duffy recorded seeing fire up into the Rossville Flats.³ Finally, we cannot rule out the possibility that he might have been responsible for the shots that indirectly injured Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron, or one of these two.

² AD76.7

64.90 In these circumstances, although it may well be that Sergeant O and Lance Corporal V saw the firing, or some of it, by Private S, we do not accept their evidence in so far as it suggested that Private S was firing at a gunman or that shots were fired at Private S. We are sure that these soldiers invented these aspects of their accounts in order to seek to back up what Private S had falsely said that he had done.

Private T

64.91 There is a considerable body of convincing evidence that Private T fired up into Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at someone he believed was responsible for throwing down bottles containing some form of acid or other corrosive substance. We set out below his trajectory photograph.

- 64.92 In our view Private T believed that he was firing at someone who was posing a threat of causing serious injury, and Sergeant O also believed this to be the case. Private T did not hit the person he was aiming at, and though it is probable that one of his shots caused the injury to Patrick Brolly, we are satisfied that Private T did not intend to hit this casualty.
- 64.93 We have found no clear evidence as to when the acid bomb incident took place, though on both Sergeant O's and Private R's accounts this was after at least some of the shooting in Sector 2.
- 64.94 Earlier in this report¹ we expressed the view that the failure of Sergeant O and Private T to give a warning before firing was not a technicality. As we stated, in our view there was a real possibility of ending the threat of acid bombs by giving a warning, so that it was a serious matter for Private T, without warning, to try to kill the man instead. Furthermore, we are not persuaded that Private T had no other way of protecting himself, such as by putting on his helmet (if he was not already wearing it), or moving to a safer position, or seeking to dodge any falling bottles. In these circumstances we do not accept that Sergeant O was entitled to assume that the condition stated in Rule 12 of the Yellow Card would be met, and thus that Private T would be justified in firing.
- ¹ Paragraph 51.383
- 64.95 On Private T's evidence, he fired his first shot either as the man released the bottle, or just after he had released it. He then fired a second shot at the man. Quite apart from the failure to give a warning, that second shot was in our view unjustified, since there was, once the acid bomb had been thrown, no further immediate danger from the man.

Summary

- 64.96 For the reasons we have given above, we have concluded that it is probable that Jackie Duddy was shot by Private R, Margaret Deery by Lance Corporal V, Michael Bridge by Lieutenant N, and Michael Bradley by Private Q. We consider that one or more of Sergeant O, Private R and Private S were responsible for the shots that indirectly injured Patrick McDaid and Pius McCarron. We set out below a map showing the location of Lieutenant N, Lance Corporal V, Private Q and Private R, the trajectories of their shots as shown on their trajectory photographs, and the position of the casualties hit directly by gunfire. We do not include Private S as it is uncertain where he fired his shots, and though one of them might have hit Patrick Brolly, it seems to us that Private T probably caused this casualty. The soldiers and casualties were not, of course, all in the positions shown on the map at the same time. The map, for example, shows the trajectory of Private Q's shot passing through Michael Bridge. The Tribunal is of the view that Private Q did not shoot Michael Bridge.

64.97 None of the soldiers who in our view were probably responsible for the casualties shot someone posing a threat of causing death or serious injury, though Private T (who probably fired the shot that injured Patrick Brolly) believed that his target was posing a threat of causing serious injury.

64.98 We are sure that Lieutenant N fired, either in the belief that his target was about to throw a nail bomb, but without any adequate grounds for that belief; or in the belief that his target might have been about to throw a nail bomb, but without being confident that that was so. In either case, it is possible that Lieutenant N fired in a state of fear or panic, without giving proper thought as to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.

- 64.99 We consider that Lance Corporal V probably fired in the knowledge that his target was not posing a threat of causing death or serious injury. It is possible that he fired in a state of fear or panic, without giving any proper thought as to whether his target was posing such a threat.
- 64.100 We consider that it is probable that Private R thought that Jackie Duddy might have been about to throw a bomb and shot him for this reason, but in our view he could not have been sufficiently confident about this to conclude that he was justified in firing. It is possible that Private R fired in a state of fear or panic, giving no proper thought as to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.
- 64.101 We consider that Private Q did not believe when he fired that he had identified a nail bomber. It is possible that Private Q thought that Michael Bradley might have been about to throw a bomb and shot him for this reason, but in our view, even if this was so, he could not have been sufficiently confident about this to conclude that he was justified in firing. Private Q fired in a state of fear or panic, giving no proper thought as to whether his target was posing a threat of causing death or serious injury.
- 64.102 Private T, one of whose shots probably caused the injury to Patrick Brolly, fired without giving a prior warning, contrary to the provisions of the Yellow Card. We do not accept that he had no other way of protecting himself; and consider that his second shot was also unjustified, since apart from the failure to give a warning, there was no further immediate danger from the man.
- 64.103 In our view the soldiers in the car park, who fired otherwise than at people, did not believe that they were justified in doing so and fired without any regard to the risk that by doing so they might kill or injure people.
- 64.104 It is important to note that none of the soldiers who in our view shot people in Sector 2 suggested that he had done so because of incoming fire. None of those killed or injured was deploying firearms or was even said by any of these soldiers to have been in possession of firearms. Thus there is nothing to suggest that incoming fire could somehow be regarded as providing an excuse for the shooting of the casualties in this sector.

65.1 C Company of 1 PARA was commanded by Major 221A and consisted of three platoons, 7, 8 and 9. Earlier in this report¹ we described the stage when soldiers of C Company went through Barrier 14 in William Street. As we have observed,² this happened shortly after Support Company had deployed, in vehicles, through Barrier 12 in Little James Street and moved along Rossville Street into the Bogside.

65.2 It appears from the evidence that we consider below¹ that 7 Platoon, commanded by Second Lieutenant 110, moved to the corner of Rossville Street and William Street. At least some of the members of this platoon subsequently moved into the Eden Place waste ground and across to the back of the houses on the western side of Chamberlain Street.

65.3 8 Platoon, under Second Lieutenant 026, moved to the corner of Chamberlain Street and paused before advancing south along that street. The platoon encountered Fr Edward Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy at the junction with Harvey Street. Soldiers of this platoon subsequently made their way further along Chamberlain Street to the edge of the Rossville Flats car park. Members of 8 Platoon were responsible for arresting a number of civilians in 33 Chamberlain Street, the southernmost house on the eastern side of that street. This was the house to which two of the Sector 2 casualties, Michael Bridge and Margaret Deery, had been taken.

65.4 The movements of 9 Platoon are less clear. It appears that they too moved along William Street and some probably got as far as the junction with Rossville Street, but the soldiers of this platoon do not seem to have advanced further into the Bogside.

65.5 7 Platoon was the first platoon of C Company to go through Barrier 14. This platoon was followed by 9 Platoon and 8 Platoon in that order.¹

65.6 In this chapter of the report, we deal first with the composition of these platoons and their movements, and then consider the evidence that C Company soldiers gave of hearing non-military fire and of seeing civilian gunmen. In the following chapter¹ we deal with the circumstances in which the arrests in 33 Chamberlain Street took place.

65.7 Very few members of C Company gave evidence in 1972. Thus most of the accounts given by the soldiers of this company are what they told us that they recalled decades after Bloody Sunday. In the case of some of these soldiers, we concluded that they had no real or accurate recollections of the day. In the case of other soldiers it was necessary to test their recollections against other material in order to try to assess what weight we could properly give to their accounts. We should note at this point that the recollections of Major 221A, the Commander of C Company, about the movement of his soldiers after they had gone through Barrier 14 were not sufficiently clear to be of much assistance.¹ We consider his evidence of hearing incoming fire in detail below.²

65.8 We have found no evidence that suggests to us that any soldier of C Company fired his rifle on the day.

The composition and movements of 7 Platoon of C Company

65.9 From the evidence that we have collected, it appears that the following soldiers were members of 7 Platoon, though there may well have been others.

65.10 Only two members of 7 Platoon gave statements in 1972. We consider their accounts first.

65.11 One of the two was the Platoon Commander, Second Lieutenant 110, who gave a Royal Military Police (RMP) statement timed at 1405 hours on 4th February 1972.¹ In this account, Second Lieutenant 110 referred to making an earlier statement which was recorded on 3rd February 1972.² We have not been able to trace this statement,³ and Second Lieutenant 110 told us he had no recollection of making it.⁴ The statement dated 4th February 1972 does not deal specifically with the movements of 7 Platoon, but instead records Second Lieutenant 110's account of hearing incoming fire and seeing a gunman, both matters that we deal with later. According to the statement, Second Lieutenant 110 moved to the corner of William Street and Rossville Street and later to "a recess at the rear of houses facing Chamberlain Street".⁵

⁴ B1726.005

² B1726.008

⁵ B1726.008

³ B1726.001

65.12 The other soldier of 7 Platoon who gave evidence in 1972 was Lance Corporal 003, who gave an RMP statement dated 4th February 1972.¹ In this statement, Lance Corporal 003 recorded that he moved with Second Lieutenant 110 from Rossville Street to the corner of 36 Chamberlain Street, the southernmost house on the west side of Chamberlain Street. References in the statement to being "in the forecourt of the flats" and to being able to "observe the flats" from this position suggest that Lance Corporal 003 was at the rear of number 36. Lance Corporal 003 stated that after "about twenty minutes" he was ordered by Second Lieutenant 110 to pull back to the junction of Harvey Street and Chamberlain Street, before being withdrawn further to the junction of High Street and Chamberlain Street.

65.13 In his RMP statement, Lance Corporal 003 gave an account of seeing, as he ran from Rossville Street to 36 Chamberlain Street, a soldier from Support Company fire several shots from a kneeling position in the direction of Columbcille Court, "where gunfire was coming from".¹ He also stated that from 36 Chamberlain Street he witnessed "quite a lot of firing coming from the flats at this time directed towards us". We return to these accounts of incoming fire later in this chapter.²

² Paragraphs 65.142–146 and 65.197

65.14 Both Second Lieutenant 110 and Lance Corporal 003 gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. According to his written statement to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 003 ran up William Street with Corporal INQ 444 and Private INQ 554 and reached the south-eastern corner of the junction of Rossville Street and William Street.¹ Lance Corporal 003 stated that he thought the whole of his platoon had come up to this point when he, Corporal INQ 444 and Private INQ 554 were ordered to cross the Eden Place waste ground.² He told us that he ran across with these soldiers and ended up behind the yards of the Chamberlain Street houses at the southern end of that street.³

² B1366.003

65.15 It is not clear from the written evidence of Lance Corporal 003 to this Inquiry when he got to this position. He recalled that it was after he had arrived there that Support Company came south along Rossville Street in their vehicles.¹ This cannot be right since, as we have observed earlier in this report, Support Company had moved into the Bogside before any C Company soldiers had crossed Barrier 14.

65.16 Lance Corporal 003 gave the following account of what he saw while at the southern end of the Chamberlain Street houses:¹

“At some point, I saw a soldier take up a kneeling position near to a Pig on Rossville Street. The soldier was facing south down Rossville Street, and I saw him fire one or two rounds in a southerly direction, from a kneeling position. His approximate position was at the point marked G on the attached map ... I saw him fire, and saw the gas extrusion or smoke come off his weapon. He was wearing a helmet, but not a gas mask. I do not know what his height or build was, as he was kneeling down when I saw him. I cannot recall whether he was right or left handed as he fired. I did not see where he was aiming, apart from south down Rossville Street. I didn’t know who the soldier was although I found out later that he would have been from Support Company. There were other soldiers from his Company around him.”

65.17 The point marked “G” was on Rossville Street just south of the entrance into Pilot Row.¹

65.18 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 003 identified himself on a still from BBC film footage, among a group of soldiers waiting behind Barrier 14.¹ We set out that still below.²

² B1366.0011

65.19 Lance Corporal 003 told us that he was the first soldier through the barrier.¹ He agreed that when he went through the crowd had moved back and there was no prospect of being able to catch any of them.² Apparently contrary to his RMP statement, he told us that he was not with Second Lieutenant 110 as he crossed the Eden Place waste ground.³ He repeated what he had stated in his written statement to this Inquiry, that to the best of his knowledge there was no-one in the car park and no vehicles in the car park when he was at the end of the Chamberlain Street houses.⁴

³ Day 309/116

² Day 309/109-110

⁴ Day 309/97-98

65.20 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Second Lieutenant 110 told us that his platoon went through Barrier 14 on foot, and that "The aim of my platoon as the men went through Barrier 14 was to clear the area, prevent further civil disorder and to make as many arrests as possible".² He also told us that on turning the corner into Rossville Street he saw Support Company soldiers further down Rossville Street in the area around Eden Place. Since there was no need for his men to be in the same place he directed his platoon to go south-east across the Eden Place waste ground towards the back of the houses on the western side of Chamberlain Street. He thought that at this time civilians had already cleared away from the waste ground and he told us that he believed that "the area in front of the Rossville Flats and to the north of the flats as I looked at them was also very open and that there were no people in that area at that time".³ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Second Lieutenant 110 accepted that there might have been "one or two people" in the car park at that time.⁴

⁴ Day 350/108-109

65.21 In the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Second Lieutenant 110 was asked to look at footage filmed by a BBC camera crew showing soldiers running across the Eden Place waste ground and taking up positions to the rear of the houses on the western side of Chamberlain Street. Second Lieutenant 110 agreed that it might have been his soldiers seen running across the Eden Place waste ground and that his soldiers had taken up positions as shown in the footage.¹ In our view this footage does show soldiers of 7 Platoon running across the Eden Place waste ground.

¹ Day 350/67-71; Day 350/74-78; Vid 1 05.12

65.22 It can be seen from the film footage that at the time when these soldiers crossed the Eden Place waste ground and ran along the backs of the Chamberlain Street houses there were no longer military vehicles parked in Rossville Street opposite Kells Walk. Instead, a number of vehicles are shown just to the north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, while three vehicles, one of them a military ambulance, can be seen moving north along Rossville Street. This, as was suggested to Second Lieutenant 110, indicates that this film footage was shot relatively late in the day. For reasons given earlier in this report,¹ we have concluded that it was filmed not only after the Army vehicles had moved to the north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, but after all the casualties had been sustained in Sectors 2, 3, 4 and 5.

65.23 Despite this, Second Lieutenant 110 remained sure that when he reached the junction of Rossville Street and William Street, Support Company vehicles were still present on Rossville Street, although he could not say in which direction they might have been moving.¹ He agreed that it was possible that he had waited for some time at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street before moving across the Eden Place waste ground, but he could not remember stopping and his assumption was that he moved through this area "in a relatively short period of time".²

² Day 350/111

65.24 Private INQ 5 was a member of 7 Platoon and Second Lieutenant 110's signaller.¹ As such, he should have remained with his commander.² However, in his first written statement to this Inquiry,³ Private INQ 5 told us that after going through Barrier 14 he had turned left down Macari's Lane into the Eden Place waste ground, where he came under fire and took cover behind a burned-out car.⁴ He also told us that after the shooting had died down he and other soldiers went into one of the back yards of the houses on the western side of Chamberlain Street, where he found 20 to 30 civilians sheltering. According to Private INQ 5, the civilians were not arrested, but they were told to get out with their hands on their heads.⁵ At the end of this statement Private INQ 5 asserted that he had not spoken to the press about Bloody Sunday.⁶

65.25 In a supplementary written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 5 accepted that he had been interviewed by journalists. He told us that he had forgotten about this when he made his first written statement.²

² C5.8-9; Day 379/59

65.26 Private INQ 5 gave oral evidence to this Inquiry. He accepted that he was wrong in saying that he had gone down Macari's Lane, and agreed that he had moved with other members of his platoon to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street before crossing the Eden Place waste ground.¹ He identified himself as the centre figure in a still from the BBC film footage showing soldiers running across the waste ground.²

² C5.61; Day 379/15

65.27 The impression we gained from Private INQ 5's evidence to us, including his evidence on incoming fire which is discussed below,¹ was that he had little if any independent recollection of events and was relying wholly or to a very substantial extent on what he had been told by others or had otherwise come to believe. He gave accounts to journalists of C Company going into the Bogside, where they were fired on by the IRA and then in effect rescued by Support Company arriving in vehicles. In view of the evidence that we have considered earlier in this report² this account is at odds with what actually happened.³ Although it is possible he did so, we remained unconvinced by his evidence that he sheltered behind a burned-out vehicle on the Eden Place waste ground, and his account of finding civilians sheltering in a back yard appears to be unsupported by any civilian evidence. In these circumstances, while we do not doubt his identification of himself on the still from the film footage shown above, we consider that it would be unwise to place any reliance on Private INQ 5's accounts of what he witnessed.

² Paragraphs 20.224–271 and 24.1–4

65.28 As already observed,¹ the film footage on which Private INQ 5 identified himself shows Army vehicles in the background travelling north. This was after Support Company vehicles had moved forward to the north side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. In our view, for the reasons we have given earlier,² by this stage all the casualties had been sustained in Sectors 2, 3, 4 and 5.

² Paragraphs 58.41–58

65.29 Corporal INQ 444, another member of 7 Platoon, told us in his written statement to this Inquiry that after deploying through Barrier 14 he moved along William Street. He recalled that he had not quite got to the junction with Rossville Street when he heard, but did not see, Support Company vehicles moving south down Rossville Street. He stated that he returned back along William Street and turned into Chamberlain Street, from where he entered a small alleyway that led into a large area of waste ground. Corporal INQ 444 was unable to identify the alleyway on the map attached to his statement, but he thought that he moved to the end of it, from where he was able to see Block 1 and “about a quarter” of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹

65.30 Corporal INQ 444 stated that from this position he saw a civilian gunman moving between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, a matter to which we return later.¹ He also recalled the following incidents:²

“The second incident that sticks out in my mind is seeing a person standing on the roof of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. I saw this person immediately after seeing the gunman. The person was at position D (grid reference L14) on the attached map [a position at the northern end of Block 1]. I do not know if the person was male or female, I just saw a figure standing up. The person threw a bucket of liquid towards the Pig at position B [close to Block 1, just to the south of the northern end of the block]. The liquid was aimed at some soldiers below the flats who were near to the Pig. I cannot give any description of the soldiers. I can’t recall anyone actually hit with the liquid. I initially thought that it was just water or crap that was being thrown but I suddenly saw a couple of soldiers jumping about and some other soldiers dousing their bodies with water so I knew it was acid. It was maybe the upper body area which was being doused.

Almost as soon as this occurred, a soldier, who seemed to appear from nowhere as far as I can recall, began shooting. This is the third incident that sticks out clearly in my mind. I did not know what target he had found as he was shooting out of my line of sight, but I heard rapid firing and I had never seen that before. I think that the soldier was standing approximately at position E (grid reference L14) on the attached map [the northern edge of the car park, approximately half way between Rossville Street and the backs of the Chamberlain Street houses]. I believe although I do not know that the person who was firing was a man called Lance Corporal H. I have it in my mind it is Lance Corporal H. I think I came to the conclusion it was Lance Corporal H although I did not know him to recognise him, nor can I give any description of him. It was single, distinct shots that I heard from an SLR rifle, but rapid semi-automatic fire. It was not automatic fire.

I remember that the soldier was standing up and he was holding his rifle under his arm at a position between his shoulder and his waist. I could not see the butt of the rifle. He was firing at an angle of 30 to 40 degrees towards Block 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, in the direction shown on the attached map. I personally thought that he was being stupid firing as he did. I think he fired more than 10, less than 20. Our brief was always to fire aimed shots with minimum force. We always carried out disciplined controlled fire. It is my opinion that he was phased out by the situation, was frightened and he had 'lost the plot'. That was the impression I formed of him. He is the only person I can recollect seeing firing. He had possibly seen a target, but he did seem to be firing an awful lot of rounds.

I think that Lance Corporal H at that time was fairly new to the battalion. Although I have in my mind that it was Lance Corporal H I saw there is a good chance that I did not know at that time that it was him but that I found out it was Lance Corporal H from either talking about the incident or hearing it was him after the event. I believe that he fired more than ten rounds, but probably less than twenty. I do not recall hearing any return fire towards Lance Corporal H during that period. I do not remember him trying to take cover. I then remember a voice of authority shouting 'cease fire cease fire', and Lance Corporal H stopped firing. I cannot remember who gave the command or where that command came from."

² C444.5-6; C444.9

65.31 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal INQ 444 said that at the time he did not know that the liquid he had described being poured from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats was acid; he said he must have picked this up from talk later. He also said to us that his identification of “Lance Corporal H” (who was in fact a Private, not a Lance Corporal) as the soldier firing indiscriminately was something that he had learned much later. He said that he had a “clear recollection of a soldier firing too many rounds in an indisciplined manner”, but he thought he had been “far too detailed [in his statement] in certainly the position I put the man in, um, where he was firing, et cetera”. In addition, he told us that he did not remember exactly when the ceasefire order was shouted, nor whether his memory of the order came from the day itself or from the television footage he had subsequently seen.¹

65.32 During the course of his oral evidence Corporal INQ 444 was shown the evidence of Second Lieutenant 110 and Lance Corporal 003, who both described moving from the northern end of Rossville Street, across the Eden Place waste ground, to the backs of the houses in Chamberlain Street. Corporal INQ 444 was told that Lance Corporal 003 had recorded in his RMP statement that he (Lance Corporal 003) had moved in this way with Corporal INQ 444. Corporal INQ 444 was then asked if he accepted that his recollection of being in Chamberlain Street and looking through an alleyway could be at fault:¹

“Yes, I do, and this was always my concern, right from the beginning, when I first started to make statements, is how I actually got there. I was convinced that I had come through an alleyway, but it was pointed out to me that there was not an alleyway, but I just could not recollect how I got there.”

65.33 Corporal INQ 444 was asked about the soldier he said he had seen firing:¹

“Q. You describe, if we look at paragraph 34 and we take it in stages:

‘The soldier was standing up and he was holding his rifle under his arm at a position between his shoulder and his waist.’

Can you elaborate, please, on the firing position that was being adopted by this soldier?

A. I am pretty certain he was in the standing position, um, and firing rapidly, probably starting with his rifle properly in his shoulder, but the amount of rounds that he fired, which was a number of rounds, I cannot say exactly how many, the rifle had slipped out of the shoulder and was working its way down the body. At that particular stage he should have stopped firing.

Q. You described it at the beginning of giving your evidence as 'indisciplined'?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you get the impression that this soldier was not firing aimed shots?

A. Yes.

Q. If we look, please, at your map at C444.9, in 2000 when you made this statement, you put the approximate position of the soldier at point E and the arrow indicated the direction of fire. So that we understand your evidence properly: how sure are you today of the position of the soldier?

A. I am not at all sure. Um, with lots of mind searching I believe the soldier come from across the other side of Rossville Street because he seemed to be, um, totally alone; he was in the middle of the open area, um, but I am not sure. I was gently asked to come up with a position and that was probably a totally wrong assumption. I believe he was somewhere in the general area of that wasteground. I could identify, you know, a general area.

Q. What about the direction of fire?

A. The direction of fire was at 45 degrees – between 30 and 45 degrees. It was definitely up in the air, absolutely certain it was up in the air, but I could not say where it was directed to.

...

Q. ... How sure are you now that these shots were being fired in between the blocks and towards the car park?

A. Not sure at all."

65.34 A little later in his evidence Corporal INQ 444 said that he was not sure how many shots the soldier had fired: "It could have been six to 15". However, he stood by his recollection of a soldier somewhere in the waste ground, firing at least six shots in an undisciplined manner.¹ He told us that he did not recall seeing a Lance Corporal's stripe on the soldier's uniform, and that he had somehow gained the belief that the soldier was a Lance Corporal when he first started making his statement.²

² Day 344/115

65.35 With regard to the soldier that he said he saw firing indiscriminately, Corporal INQ 444 described him as being about 50 yards away somewhere in the area of a circle that he drew on the following map, the letter "A" representing Corporal INQ 444's approximate position.¹

65.36 Corporal INQ 444 told us that he was not certain of the direction in which this soldier was firing, but it "was up in the air at 45, 30 to 40 degrees as I remember it, from a standing position". He also told us that his earlier evidence about the soldier probably starting to fire with the rifle at his shoulder with the rifle then slipping down was "something I worked out; I did not see it".¹

65.37 Corporal INQ 444 told us that he had no recollection, apart from the soldier firing indiscriminately, of any other soldiers firing into the area of the Rossville Flats car park.¹

65.38 We formed the view that Corporal INQ 444 was doing his best to assist this Inquiry. He was careful to make clear that he was now not sure about the sequence of events or about how he reached the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. He also told us that some of his account was based on what he had heard afterwards from others. We consider that an example of this was his recollection of something being poured on soldiers from the roof of the Rossville Flats, which we believe to be an inaccurate version of an incident concerning Private R and Private T that we have considered earlier in this report.¹ While in our view it would be unwise to place much reliance on his recollection of his movements, we do accept his account of seeing a soldier firing in an indiscriminate manner.

65.39 In the light of the fact that Corporal INQ 444 had in our view arrived at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses at a late stage, and believed that the soldier firing indiscriminately had come from the other side of Rossville Street, it seems to us that it is unlikely that this was Private S or another soldier from Mortar Platoon, as suggested by the representatives of the majority of the families.¹ It also seems unlikely that it was Corporal P, since it appears that the shots this soldier described firing were fired at an earlier stage, as we discuss later in this report.²

² Chapter 73; paragraphs 85.2–28

65.40 Corporal INQ 444 was at pains to explain that the only reason that he thought the soldier was Private H (of Anti-Tank Platoon) was because of information that he received after the events of the day. We consider this matter later in this report,¹ where we conclude that it is somewhat more likely than not that Corporal INQ 444 saw Private H, though we remain far from certain. We return later in this chapter² to the evidence of Corporal INQ 444 of hearing incoming fire and of seeing a civilian with a rifle.

² Paragraphs 65.127–129 and 65.206

65.41 Private INQ 131 and Private INQ 1582 gave evidence that they were members of 7 Platoon, and that after they went through Barrier 14 they moved along William Street to the junction with Rossville Street and then across the waste ground to the back of the houses on the western side of Chamberlain Street.¹

65.42 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private INQ 131 told us that he believed that he was one of the first to climb over Barrier 14 and, with Lance Corporal 003, among the first soldiers to turn south from William Street into Rossville Street.¹

65.43 We formed the impression from his oral evidence¹ that Private INQ 131 really had little if any clear recollection of events.

65.44 Private INQ 1582 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry, but he did make a written statement. He told us that Second Lieutenant 110 was his Platoon Commander,¹ and recalled running across waste ground to the back yard of one of the houses on Chamberlain Street. He described hearing a lot of firing, but was not sure whether this was as he was running across the waste ground:²

“There seemed to be a lot of firing going on and although I had been in fire fights before, there had generally not been that much firing. Generally a terrorist would fire then disappear and soldiers would only have a chance to fire once or twice at a target. However, on this occasion I was conscious of more shooting than that going on to the right of me (west). Although that I know I wasn’t fired at personally, I did not know who was firing what, at whom, or why.”

² C1582.3

65.45 In respect of his movements on the day, Lance Corporal INQ 1799 recorded in his written statement to this Inquiry that he turned into Chamberlain Street from William Street,¹ but during his oral evidence he seemed inclined to think that he reached the rear of the Chamberlain Street houses from Rossville Street.² We discuss below³ Lance Corporal INQ 1799’s evidence of seeing two gunmen on Bloody Sunday: first, a civilian with an automatic pistol whom he saw shortly after his deployment through Barrier 14; and second, a man with an M1 carbine in the vicinity of the Rossville Flats. We also consider below⁴ Lance Corporal INQ 1799’s evidence of what he described as the first gunfire he had heard that day, namely two bursts of automatic fire from a Thompson sub-machine gun after he had taken cover in a doorway.

³ Paragraphs 65.208–211 and 65.234–235

² Day 314/159-163; C1799.15

⁴ Paragraph 65.130

65.46 Listening to Lance Corporal INQ 1799 we came to the conclusion that he too had little clear recollection of events. He agreed that he had difficulties with his memory in confusing things that he had been told with things that he actually recalled.¹

65.47 Private INQ 815 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry, but he did make a written statement. In this he told us that he was the driver of one of the two Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) of 7 Platoon.¹ Again it seemed to us that this soldier had little clear recollection of events. However, he did state, and we accept, that after Barrier 14 had been moved, he drove his (empty or almost empty) APC through, and stopped behind his Platoon Commander's Pig on William Street, approximately level with the northern end of Chamberlain Street.²

² C815.4

65.48 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private INQ 96 told us that his Platoon Commander was Second Lieutenant 110, which would put him in 7 Platoon.¹ According to his account, having crossed the barrier he went along William Street, turned left into Macari's Lane, south across the Eden Place waste ground and then turned and went north up Chamberlain Street. He told us he was following Private INQ 5. He also told us that he did not encounter any snipers on the day nor did he feel under fire at any stage: *"By the time I went in, I suspect that the shooting was already over."*²

65.49 Private INQ 96 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry. If, as he recalled, he was following Private INQ 5, then it seems to us that he was probably mistaken in believing that he had gone into the Eden Place waste ground through Macari's Lane. Although Private INQ 5 initially thought that this was the way he had gone, he later agreed that in fact he must have come into the Eden Place waste ground from Rossville Street.

65.50 Private INQ 554 told this Inquiry that he was in 9 Platoon. However, he recalled taking cover "in an area of rubble",¹ and Lance Corporal 003 believed that the two of them were together on the day.² Both of these pieces of evidence suggest that Private INQ 554 was actually in 7 Platoon. We return to his account when considering evidence of C Company soldiers of non-military fire.

² B1366.003; Day 309/69-70

65.51 It is possible that Private INQ 559 was a member of 7 Platoon, but his evidence to us was to the effect that he went down Chamberlain Street,¹ and so on the whole it seems more likely that he was part of 8 Platoon.

65.52 Our consideration of the evidence reviewed above¹ leads us to conclude that the soldiers of 7 Platoon who moved into the Eden Place waste ground and along the back of the Chamberlain Street houses did so at a late stage, after all the casualties had been sustained in all the sectors.

The composition and movements of 9 Platoon of C Company

65.53 We do not know for certain who commanded 9 Platoon. Private INQ 587 suggested it was Sergeant UNK 925.¹ However, the Ministry of Defence informed us that this soldier was not in Northern Ireland on Bloody Sunday. A more likely candidate is UNK 410. He is referred to in the written evidence to this Inquiry of Second Lieutenant 026, Platoon Commander of 8 Platoon.² Since Second Lieutenant 026 correctly identified the Platoon Commander of 7 Platoon, he may be correct in his recollection that UNK 410 was the Commander of 9 Platoon. Lance Corporal INQ 1056, whom we believe to have been a member of 9 Platoon, told us that he thought that the Platoon Commander was UNK 410, although he could not recall him being present on Bloody Sunday.³ We were unable to obtain a statement from UNK 410.

³ C1056.1

² B1545.002

65.54 No member of 9 Platoon gave evidence in 1972. We traced a number of soldiers whose accounts indicate that they were or may have been among the members of this platoon, although it is likely that there were others.

65.55 Much of the evidence that we have obtained from soldiers of 9 Platoon as to their movements is muddled and inconsistent, which is not surprising in view of the fact that they were first asked to give their accounts long after Bloody Sunday.

65.56 Sergeant INQ 488 gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. He told us that he could not remember which platoon he was with on the day.¹ He recalled that his platoon was the first across Barrier 14, and that it did not advance further than the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, and he had no recollection of other platoons of C Company doing so either.²

² Day 300/44-45

65.57 Private INQ 587 told this Inquiry that after going through Barrier 14 he moved along William Street towards Rossville Street. As we discuss below,¹ he stated that he heard gunfire, including incoming rounds, before reaching the junction. He took cover until his APC was brought forward and then exchanged the baton that he was carrying for his self-loading rifle (SLR). He subsequently moved into the northern end of Rossville Street, but did not proceed beyond the block of buildings on the south-east corner of the junction with William Street.²

² C587.3-4; C587.6; Day 324/161-163; Day 324/172

65.58 Lance Corporal INQ 1910 told us, in his written evidence to this Inquiry, that he moved along William Street to the junction with Rossville Street following 9 Platoon's deployment through Barrier 14. He recalled hearing shots and temporarily detaining and searching civilians on the waste ground to the north of the junction, something that he said was done "for their own safety as much as anything".¹ Lance Corporal INQ 1910 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry.

¹ C1910.4-5; C1910.10

65.59 Since we are satisfied from the evidence considered above¹ and below² that soldiers of 7 Platoon did go further than the junction of William Street and Rossville Street and that 8 Platoon went down Chamberlain Street, it seems more likely than not that Sergeant INQ 488 was with 9 Platoon on the day.

65.60 INQ 736 told us in his written statement to this Inquiry that he was either a Lance Corporal or a Corporal on the day.¹ He gave an account of going through the barrier with Sergeant INQ 488 and stated that the Sergeant called for him to follow.² He thought that he was not among the first to go through the barrier, but not among the last either, and he recalled running west, straight along William Street. We discuss below³ his evidence of hearing incoming shots, high velocity fire and explosions. INQ 736 described looking round the corner of the buildings on the eastern side of Rossville Street (ie the buildings that extended a short distance from the south-eastern corner of the junction with William Street), and seeing soldiers from Support Company in aiming positions, including a soldier leaning against a wall near Kells Walk. INQ 736 told us that he stayed by the buildings on the eastern side of Rossville Street, but he neither saw nor heard anything else of significance.⁴ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that he did not see any members of Support Company attempting to make arrests “because the crowd had dispersed as soon as the shooting started”.⁵

⁵ Day 310/159

³ Paragraphs 65.131–133

65.61 In the course of his oral evidence INQ 736 gave an account of Support Company initially entering the Bogside on foot and being met by hostile fire. In response, according to INQ 736, Support Company’s vehicles were brought forward, and the men returned to them in order to re-arm.¹

65.62 The evidence given by INQ 736 of the movement of Support Company into the Bogside is inconsistent not only with the evidence of members of that company but also with the photographic and other evidence of what in fact happened, as we have set out earlier in this report.¹ On listening to his evidence we formed the view that it would be wise to place little reliance on INQ 736’s account of what he said he heard and saw on the day, though his references to Sergeant INQ 488 and the fact that he did not seem to move from the area of the junction of William Street and Rossville Street indicate that he was probably a member of 9 Platoon.

65.63 Private INQ 1093 appears to have been the signaller for 9 Platoon who accompanied the Platoon Commander on Bloody Sunday.¹ He told us that he recalled following behind Support Company, walking at a brisk pace, and said that he saw the soldiers of Support Company “dismounting” near the Rossville Flats. He recalled walking along a “terraced street”, but he was unsure whether this was Chamberlain Street or Rossville Street.² We consider below³ his evidence of seeing the strike of a burst of automatic fire that “danced down the street” in front of him.⁴

³ Paragraph 65.134

⁴ C1093.3-4

65.64 It is far from clear from this account where Private INQ 1093 went. If he had gone down Chamberlain Street he could not have seen the Support Company vehicles entering the Bogside, and he could not have “followed behind” them.¹ However, it is difficult to accept that he advanced very far (or at all) along Rossville Street. There is no other evidence that suggests to us that 9 Platoon went further along Rossville Street than the houses at the south-eastern corner of the junction with William Street, and Rossville Street cannot be described as a “terraced street”. In our view it would be unwise to place reliance on the evidence of Private INQ 1093.

65.65 It is possible that Private INQ 2057 was a member of 9 Platoon, but according to his written evidence to this Inquiry¹ he had little recollection of the day, save that he was at a junction.

65.66 We refer to the evidence of other soldiers who appear to have been members of 9 Platoon when considering the evidence of C Company soldiers of non-military fire. We consider that 9 Platoon, after crossing Barrier 14, did not advance further than the buildings on the south-eastern corner of the junction of William Street and Rossville Street.

The composition and movements of 8 Platoon of C Company

65.67 Counsel to the Inquiry prepared what we consider to be an accurate summary of the evidence relating to the composition of 8 Platoon on the day, which with few alterations we set out below:¹

1. According to Sergeant INQ 2000, Platoon Sergeant of 8 Platoon, he, Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 were members of a 17-man patrol commanded by Second Lieutenant 026.¹

2. Second Lieutenant 026 identified himself as a Second Lieutenant and the Platoon Commander of 8 Platoon, which consisted of 22 men on Bloody Sunday.¹ He named Private INQ 12,² Corporal INQ 579,³ Private INQ 876,⁴ Lance Corporal INQ 1334⁵ and Lance Corporal INQ 2121⁶ as having been under his command that day.

65.69 It is likely that there were other soldiers forming part of 8 Platoon on the day, but the evidence does not allow us to identify them with any certainty. However, it seems on balance that Private INQ 559 was also in this platoon, as he described running down a narrow street after he had gone through the barrier.^{1,2}

² Counsel to the Inquiry prepared an Appendix which dealt with other possible members of this platoon. In our view it is not necessary to reproduce that Appendix in this report (CS9.61-63).

The evidence of Second Lieutenant 026

65.70 In his RMP statement dated 4th February 1972, the Commander of 8 Platoon, Second Lieutenant 026, gave the following account:¹

“About 1615 hrs, 30 January 1972, my entire platoon of 22 men all moved down Chamberlain Street towards Rossville Flats. We had one APC carrying some of the Platoon, while some of us were on foot. Our object was to secure our left flank and to consolidate at the end of Chamberlain Street.

As we moved down Chamberlain Street a crowd of about 80 persons were confronting us. They moved backwards as we approached and shouted abuse at us. They remained 50 yards ahead of us all the time. Nothing was thrown at us.

When we reached the end of Chamberlain Street, the crowd disappeared into the Rossville Flats complex. The APC moved into a position at MR 43311681, and the Platoon deployed around it.”

¹ B1541

65.71 The grid reference given by Second Lieutenant 026 indicates that the APC moved to a point at the southern end of Chamberlain Street.

65.72 Second Lieutenant 026 did not give evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, but he did give written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

65.73 According to Second Lieutenant 026's written statement to this Inquiry, 8 Platoon went through Barrier 14 after 7 and 9 Platoons. He stated that Major 221A, the Commander of C Company, gave him orders “to take my Platoon down Chamberlain Street and secure the Battalion's left flank”. The platoon climbed over the barrier, turned left and went on foot down Chamberlain Street.¹

65.74 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he was “as certain as I can be” that 7 and 9 Platoon went through Barrier 14 before his platoon. He recalled that one of his APCs had broken down, which had delayed his men. He told us that he assumed that the platoons of C Company had all been given the task of arresting rioters. He said that the other platoons were no more than a few hundred metres ahead of him and that “7 and 9 Platoon went off down William Street and I was, at that stage, caught up with Major 221A and was tasked to go down Chamberlain Street”.¹ He had earlier stated that he was met by Major 221A “at the barrier”.²

² Day 315/123

65.75 We are of the view that Second Lieutenant 026 was with his soldiers when they went into Chamberlain Street. He said that “There was absolutely no reason why I would lag behind, I was the platoon commander”.¹

65.76 Second Lieutenant 026 recorded in his written evidence to this Inquiry that having entered Chamberlain Street, he advanced towards the junction with High Street. He said that he saw a crowd, which he did not judge to be a threat, ahead of his platoon at the southern end of the street, and that he could tell from the debris on the street and the smell of CS gas that a riot had recently been dispersed.¹

65.77 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Second Lieutenant 026 stated that he preferred the account that he had given in 1972 of pushing an abusive and confrontational crowd backwards as his platoon moved along Chamberlain Street.¹ Initially he added that “there were a few stones that were thrown, but they were not going to hit us, they were probably ... too far away for that”.² However, on being shown the section of his RMP statement in which he stated that “Nothing was thrown at us”, Second Lieutenant 026 retracted his comment to this Inquiry and accepted his earlier evidence.³ In response to being asked how he came to the conclusion that the crowd ahead of his platoon was riotous, he said:⁴

“The riotous behaviour, as I recall, had taken place in the area of Waterloo Street and was dispersing by the time we, C Company, went in there. So we were following up a rioting situation.

I had every reason to believe, based on the fact that the crowd was dispersing and the crowd were throwing – were shouting abuse at us, that those people on Chamberlain Street had been part of the, part of the rioters.”

65.78 Second Lieutenant 026 was shown a photograph taken by Gilles Peress, reproduced below, of the scene in Eden Place just before, as we discuss earlier in this report,¹ Lieutenant N of Mortar Platoon fired a shot up this alleyway. Second Lieutenant 026 said that he did not see any such scene, nor did he recall civilians being present in Eden Place.²

² Day 315/156-157

65.79 Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he and his platoon advanced to the junction of Chamberlain Street and High Street. From there, he saw Fr Daly coming north up Chamberlain Street with a group carrying a body. This must have been the group carrying Jackie Duddy. He said that he sent Lance Corporal INQ 1334 “to quickly check the person who was being carried".¹ In his oral evidence, Second Lieutenant 026 stated that he did not think that he had been in Chamberlain Street for "very long" before encountering the group carrying Jackie Duddy.²

² Day 315/131

65.80 Second Lieutenant 026 recalled that he then moved with his men to a point about halfway along Chamberlain Street, where he was joined by an APC driven by Private INQ 876. The platoon and the APC advanced to the end of Chamberlain Street, where Second Lieutenant 026 saw two frightened women crouching behind a small car. *"The women were clearly in fear and we persuaded them to come to us. We then arranged for them to move further up Chamberlain Street to a place of safety."*¹ We have no reason to doubt this recollection of Second Lieutenant 026, but we do not know who these people were.

65.81 Second Lieutenant 026 gave the following evidence of what he saw as he looked into the Rossville Flats car park from the southern end of Chamberlain Street:¹

"My memory was that the people who had moved down the Chamberlain Street ahead of us, some dispersed into the bottom left house at the – I do not know the number – and some dispersed across the car park. It was very quickly – the car park was very quickly empty of all people, apart from the two women."

65.82 Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he heard gunfire as his platoon crossed the barrier but before they moved into Chamberlain Street. This was "shooting going on in the general area of west, somewhere in the area of Rossville Street and beyond". However, he said that he was not aware of any further firing from the time that he entered Chamberlain Street until the time that he reached the southern end of that street.¹ We discuss below² Second Lieutenant 026's evidence of hearing incoming fire from that position.

The evidence of other members of 8 Platoon

65.83 Corporal 007 gave two statements to the RMP in 1972, in which he dealt with his actions and movements shortly after 8 Platoon moved through Barrier 14. In his first statement, dated 4th February 1972, he said that his platoon:¹

“... moved along Chamberlain Street, Londonderry, towards Rossville Flats. Our intention was secure the left flank. We were confronted by a mob of about 80–100 persons who shouted abuse at us but moved back as we approached. As we came to the end of Chamberlain Street the mob disappeared into surrounding houses.”

¹ B1378

- 65.84 The account that Corporal 007 gave in this statement is similar, in both content and phraseology, to that which Second Lieutenant 026 gave to the RMP on the same day.¹ Both of these soldiers were interviewed by the same person, Staff Sergeant Middleton-Jones, within 20 minutes of one another.²

¹ B1541

² B1542; B1379

- 65.85 In his later statement, dated 19th May 1972, Corporal 007 gave a different version of events:¹

“About 1600 hrs, 30 Jan 72, a group of rioters who had been throwing stones [at] the Security Forces left WILLIAM ST and ran into CHAMBERLAIN ST. We gave chase, but when we reached CHAMBERLAIN ST they had disappeared [emphasis added] ... I assumed that they had gone into the ROSSVILLE Flats area.”

¹ B1383

- 65.86 As will be seen from the discussion that follows,¹ this account is in somewhat similar terms to those given by Private INQ 12 and Sergeant INQ 2000, who were interviewed by the same member of the RMP shortly before and shortly after Corporal 007.²

² C2000.4; B1384; C12.11

- 65.87 Corporal 007 told this Inquiry that he could not recall seeing civilians in Chamberlain Street, but he could not be sure that there were none.¹ He said that he had no recollection of being confronted by a crowd in the way described in his first RMP statement.² He also said that he did not remember seeing Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy.³

³ Day 310/23

² Day 310/20

- 65.88 Private INQ 12 gave three statements in 1972, two of which dealt with his actions and movements shortly after 8 Platoon deployed through Barrier 14. In a statement dated 10th March 1972, Private INQ 12 told a Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) officer that he had seen one man throwing stones from within a hostile crowd that had confronted troops at the barrier. When C Company deployed, this man “ran up Chamberlain Street and into a house”.¹ Private INQ 12 told the RMP in a statement dated 19th May 1972 that although his patrol gave chase to a group of rioters who had run from William Street to Chamberlain Street, “on our arrival in CHAMBERLAIN ST they had disappeared”. It was not until he subsequently entered a house (33 Chamberlain Street) that he saw again those who he believed had been throwing stones in William Street.² As is noted above,³ this second account is in somewhat similar terms to the evidence given by Corporal 007 and Sergeant INQ 2000 to the same RMP interviewer on the same day.

³ Paragraph 65.86

² C12.10

65.89 During his oral evidence to this Inquiry it was suggested to Private INQ 12 that these two statements were inconsistent, on the basis that his evidence to the RUC officer suggested that he had seen the man running up Chamberlain Street, whereas in his RMP statement he had stated that the rioters had disappeared by the time his patrol reached Chamberlain Street. When asked which was true, Private INQ 12 answered, “The both of them really”; when pushed as to how that could be, he replied: “It is how the question was asked, sir, that is the only way I can answer that.”¹ In our view, in the light of the other evidence of the situation when 8 Platoon soldiers reached the north end of Chamberlain Street, we consider that on this point Private INQ 12’s RMP statement is likely to be closer to the truth than his account to the RUC officer.

65.90 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Private INQ 12 gave an account of moving into Chamberlain Street, hearing incoming fire and then taking cover in the doorway of a house until his APC arrived. He stated that he subsequently retrieved his SLR from the APC and held his position for ten to 15 minutes.¹ At some stage after that, he said he recalled entering a house where he found a number of people whom he recognised as having been involved with the civil rights demonstration and rioting. He said that he did not know that these people were in the house until after he had entered it.²

² C12.4; Day 351/29

65.91 We consider below¹ Private INQ 12’s evidence of hearing incoming fire and seeing civilian gunmen. In the next chapter² of this report we discuss his role in arresting people in 33 Chamberlain Street.

² Chapter 66

65.92 Sergeant INQ 2000 gave an RMP statement dated 19th May 1972 in which he said the following:¹

“About 1600 hrs, 30 Jan 1972, we were chasing rioters who had left WILLIAM ST and entered CHAMBERLAIN ST. There were about 50 persons in this group, mostly male. This group disappeared on reaching the top of CHAMBERLAIN ST and I assumed that they had gone into the ROSSVILLE Flats area, because on our arrival at the top of CHAMBERLAIN ST they were nowhere to be seen. The patrol was then approached by a woman, who came from 33 CHAMBERLAIN ST. She asked if we could call for an ambulance as a person who had been shot was in the house.”

65.93 This account is in similar terms to those given by Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 on the same day and to the same interviewing soldier. However, the context of Sergeant INQ 2000’s statement suggests that he was referring to the southern end of Chamberlain Street as the “top”. Number 33 was the southernmost house on the eastern side of the street and, as we discuss in the next chapter,¹ members of 8 Platoon were not alerted to the presence of injured people there until they had moved most of the way along the street. Sergeant INQ 2000’s RMP statement is not inconsistent with the evidence considered above² to the effect that a crowd was present on Chamberlain Street as 8 Platoon advanced along it.

² Paragraphs 65.70, 65.76–77 and 65.83

65.94 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant INQ 2000 stated that he could not remember anything about the events of Bloody Sunday, but he accepted that his RMP statement accurately reflected what he remembered at the date on which he gave it.¹

65.95 Lance Corporal INQ 1334 gave an account to this Inquiry, which we discuss below,¹ of hearing incoming gunfire shortly after he moved through Barrier 14. He told us that William Street and Chamberlain Street seemed “completely empty apart from a crowd of about two dozen people, who were trying to get into a house at the far end of Chamberlain Street”.² Lance Corporal INQ 1334 said that he was the soldier who approached Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy as they made their way up Chamberlain Street;³ this can be seen in the photographs and television footage discussed below.⁴

⁴ Paragraphs 65.106–109

65.96 Private INQ 471 told this Inquiry that by the time his platoon moved through Barrier 14 the crowd that had been in William Street had “dispersed around the corners”.¹ He recalled moving towards or into Chamberlain Street and pausing at a corner, before hearing gunfire and then moving to his APC in order to exchange his baton for a rifle.² He did not believe that there were any civilians in Chamberlain Street when he entered it,³ but shortly afterwards he saw Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy moving north along the street towards his platoon.⁴

⁴ C471.4

65.97 Corporal INQ 579 said in his evidence to this Inquiry that as he advanced down Chamberlain Street he saw a crowd of about 30 civilians who had retreated to the southern end, close to the flats. He recalled that the crowd were looking towards his platoon and had their backs to the flats, “but they were not causing us any trouble”. He thought that they were “just bystanders, onlookers”. He told us that the crowd retreated as his platoon advanced, and that the “vast majority” of this crowd went into the last house on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street (number 33). He did not recall seeing any other civilians on Chamberlain Street or the surrounding side streets.¹ We discuss below² his evidence of being fired upon and taking cover as he moved down Chamberlain Street.

65.98 Private INQ 1073 told this Inquiry that when he entered Chamberlain Street the street was empty except for a crowd of people at the southern end.¹

65.99 It follows from the evidence of these soldiers, and that of Second Lieutenant 026, that there is some uncertainty as to whether there were any civilians on Chamberlain Street when 8 Platoon deployed down it. The RMP accounts given by Second Lieutenant 026 and Corporal 007 on 4th February 1972 suggest that a confrontational and verbally abusive crowd of about 80–100 people were present, and that they moved back as 8 Platoon advanced, before dispersing into the area of the flats or into surrounding houses. Sergeant INQ 2000’s RMP statement may also suggest that the soldiers saw, and indeed chased, a crowd along Chamberlain Street. However, the statements given by Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 on 19th May 1972 record that the crowd of rioters that these soldiers had seen on William Street had “disappeared” by the time 8 Platoon reached Chamberlain Street. The evidence given to this Inquiry by members of 8 Platoon on this issue can be divided between those who cannot remember any civilians being present on Chamberlain Street (Corporal 007 and Private INQ 471) and those who thought that there was a crowd at the southern end of the street, possibly comprising people who subsequently went into a nearby house (Lance Corporal INQ 1334, Corporal INQ 579, Private INQ 1073 and Second Lieutenant 026 in his written evidence to this Inquiry).

65.100 Before reaching our conclusions on this issue, we turn to consider the photographic and television footage material that we have seen of 8 Platoon's movements down Chamberlain Street.

Photographic evidence

65.101 In the course of their evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Second Lieutenant 026 and Private INQ 12 identified some of the soldiers of 8 Platoon as those grouped on the western side of the corner of Chamberlain Street and William Street on the following photograph. From right to left, the following were identified: Corporal INQ 579 (standing with one foot on and one foot off the pavement, with his visor pulled back to the rear of his helmet); Private INQ 12 (looking in the same direction as Corporal INQ 579); Lance Corporal INQ 2151 (facing the camera); Lance Corporal INQ 2045 (holding a weapon with a large sight); and Sergeant INQ 2000 (standing with his back against the wall). The final soldier, who was holding his SLR to his shoulder, was not identified by Second Lieutenant 026 or Private INQ 12.

¹ Day 351/12-14; Day 351/32; Day 315/121-121

- 65.102 It is not clear whether James Dakin (a Daily Express staff photographer) or Frederick Hoare (a photographer working for the Belfast Telegraph) took this photograph. It appears from their evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that both of them were in this area at relevant times.¹

- 65.103 There are two further photographs taken by James Dakin that help to establish the order of events. As can be seen from his contact sheet, they were taken in the following order.

65.104 The first photograph is of two soldiers at the corner of Chamberlain Street and William Street. It seems to us that these were probably Lance Corporal INQ 2045 (with a sniping rifle which had what was known as a Starlight sight) and Sergeant INQ 2000.¹

65.105 The second photograph shows members of 8 Platoon, including Lance Corporal INQ 2045 with his sniping rifle, running in Chamberlain Street. By this time an APC has arrived in that street.

65.106 After taking these photographs James Dakin took a further sequence of photographs looking south along Chamberlain Street. These were of the approach of the group, including Fr Daly, carrying the body of Jackie Duddy. The sequence of photographs can be seen on James Dakin's contact sheet.

65.107 The last of this sequence is available as a full-size photograph, which we have also shown when describing where Jackie Duddy was taken to after he had been shot.¹

65.108 The moments in which the group carrying Jackie Duddy approached 8 Platoon at the corner of Chamberlain Street and Harvey Street are also captured on BBC television footage.¹ As can be seen, and as we have discussed earlier in this report,² Jackie Duddy was carried into and along Harvey Street.

² Paragraphs 55.75–77

65.109 Frederick Hoare, whose movements at that time were similar to those of James Dakin, also took a photograph of the group as it walked along Chamberlain Street.

65.110 Two men can be seen behind the group carrying Jackie Duddy. On the right, carrying a television camera, was David Green of CBS.¹ On the left, carrying a stills camera, was the photographer Fulvio Grimaldi.² Unfortunately, the Inquiry was unable to obtain any of the footage shot by David Green at that time. However, Fulvio Grimaldi told this Inquiry that he took the following photograph from the southern end of Chamberlain Street.³

² M34.1-2

65.111 From Fulvio Grimaldi's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, it appears that this photograph was taken shortly before Fr Daly and others carried Jackie Duddy into Chamberlain Street from the Rossville Flats car park.¹ The photograph shows an APC and several soldiers, who must have been from 8 Platoon, towards the northern end of Chamberlain Street. The sign for the 720 Bar and a nearby lamp post are visible on the right-hand side of the frame; these stood on the corner of Harvey Street and Chamberlain Street. It can be seen that the APC is some way to the north of this corner, as are most of the visible soldiers. It follows that this photograph was taken earlier than those reproduced above showing the group carrying Jackie Duddy approaching 8 Platoon and the APC.

65.112 It is evident from the photographs and television footage considered above¹ that there were very few civilians on Chamberlain Street shortly before and during the moments when Fr Daly and others carried Jackie Duddy from the Rossville Flats car park. The earliest photograph, that of Fulvio Grimaldi, shows an almost empty street, with only two civilians visible in doorways on the western side. The later photographs of James Dakin and Frederick Hoare, and to a more limited extent the BBC television footage, also indicate that other than those with and following Jackie Duddy, there were very few people present.

Consideration of the evidence of 8 Platoon soldiers

65.113 In the light of the foregoing evidence, we consider that the soldiers of 8 Platoon were the last of the three platoons of C Company to come through Barrier 14 and that, as the photographs show, this platoon initially grouped at the corner of Chamberlain Street and William Street before moving south down Chamberlain Street.

65.114 Earlier in this report¹ we considered the incident in which Lieutenant N fired three shots up the Eden Place alleyway. In that context we examined the evidence given by Gilles Peress, to whose photograph of the Eden Place alleyway we have referred above.² In our view that evidence establishes that Gilles Peress was one of the last civilians who moved down Chamberlain Street from the area around Barrier 14, when the vehicles of Support Company came into the Bogside. Nothing in his evidence suggests that there was still a crowd in Chamberlain Street who were confronting 8 Platoon as the soldiers of that platoon moved down that street. The other evidence we have considered in relation to that incident indicates to us that, initially at least, people were moving down Chamberlain Street, not because soldiers were advancing down that street, but because Army vehicles had come through Barrier 12.

² Paragraph 65.78

65.115 Our assessment of the evidence as a whole leads us to conclude that by the time soldiers of 8 Platoon started to move down Chamberlain Street, Lieutenant N had fired his shots up the Eden Place alleyway and virtually all the people who had been in Chamberlain Street had either moved to the southern end of that street or had otherwise dispersed, so that the street was more or less empty. We do not accept that 8 Platoon soldiers pushed back a confrontational and abusive mob as they moved along Chamberlain Street. The photographic evidence establishes that soldiers had not moved very far along Chamberlain Street and had not reached, or had only just reached, Harvey Street when Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy came along Chamberlain Street. At that stage there were very few people in Chamberlain Street and no sign of a crowd at the southern end of that street.

65.116 On the evidence we have already considered¹ about when the casualties in Sector 2 occurred, by the time 8 Platoon met the group carrying Jackie Duddy at the junction of Chamberlain Street and Harvey Street, Margaret Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley, as well of course as Jackie Duddy, had already been shot, and it is probable that Patrick Brolly had been injured. It is possible that Pius McCarron and Patrick McDaid had also been injured by this stage, though this is not so certain. It is however clear in our view that by the time Second Lieutenant 026 and other soldiers of 8 Platoon reached the southern end of Chamberlain Street, and Second Lieutenant 026 had looked into the car park, all the casualties of Sector 2 had been sustained.

65.118 We also return to 8 Platoon in the next chapter,¹ when we deal with the arrests of people at 33 Chamberlain Street, the southernmost house on the eastern side of Chamberlain Street. As we have already described,² it was to this house that Margaret Deery and Michael Bridge were taken after they had been wounded by gunfire in the car park of the Rossville Flats.

² Paragraphs 55.128–130 and 55.202–207

65.119 Several members of 8 Platoon told this Inquiry that at some stage after they had moved through Barrier 14, and in response to hearing shots fired, they were sent to their APC or APCs in order to exchange batons and baton guns for rifles.¹ There is no reference to this happening in any of the existing accounts given by 8 Platoon soldiers in 1972 (ie those given to the RMP and RUC by Second Lieutenant 026, Sergeant INQ 2000, Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12), but it should be noted that these accounts were relatively brief and focused on specific issues. BBC television footage does show a number of soldiers at the top of Chamberlain Street carrying batons and without SLRs.² The position of these soldiers at the time shown in the footage strongly suggests that these were members of 8 Platoon. It is possible that at some stage after hearing gunfire some members of 8 Platoon did exchange their batons and baton guns for rifles, but we remain in doubt about this.

65.120 We now turn to examine as a specific topic the evidence of C Company soldiers relating to non-military firing. This necessarily involves some duplication with the accounts that we have examined above.¹

The evidence of C Company soldiers relating to non-military firing

65.121 The Inquiry obtained evidence from 44 members of C Company, many of whom gave accounts of hearing incoming or non-military gunfire on Bloody Sunday. The most significant of these accounts can be grouped into four broad categories: those who said that they heard such firing while at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street; those who said that they heard such firing while on the Eden Place waste ground to the east of Rossville Street; and those who were at the northern and southern ends of Chamberlain Street. It should be borne in mind that this division of the C Company evidence is for the purpose of analysis of the evidence and should not be taken as suggesting that there were four separate incidents, or that the evidence of soldiers in different geographical groups is necessarily unconnected.

65.122 In addition to the witnesses who are included in the four categories listed above, it is important to bear in mind that 14 members of C Company gave evidence that they either did not hear, or did not recall, or could not positively identify incoming fire, or otherwise did not comment about incoming fire. These were Private INQ 2057,¹ Private INQ 939,²

65.123 A further four soldiers gave evidence of hearing shots while they were stationed at or near Barrier 14, and before going through that barrier: they were Private INQ 876,¹ Corporal INQ 457,² Lance Corporal INQ 945³ and Private INQ 1582.⁴ With the exception of Private INQ 1582, these soldiers, none of whom gave accounts in 1972, were in our view mistaken in their recollection about this, since they described a volume of firing which we are sure did not occur at this stage. As for Private INQ 1582, who described hearing “a couple of rounds” fired, it is possible that he heard some of the firing further west in the William Street area, to which we have referred⁵ in our consideration of the events of Sector 1. Private INQ 1010 told us that he thought that a soldier was shot in front of him as they went through Barrier 14.⁶ In our view he was mistaken. There is no other evidence from any source to suggest that this happened.

C Company soldiers at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street

65.124 As we have noted above,¹ 7 Platoon of C Company advanced from Barrier 14 to the corner of William Street and Rossville Street. At least some members of 9 Platoon seem to have moved in this direction as well.

65.125 A number of soldiers from these platoons gave evidence of hearing incoming fire, stating that they heard it either as they moved to the junction or once they had arrived there.

65.126 Second Lieutenant 110, who commanded 7 Platoon, told the RMP that he heard a burst of eight Thompson sub-machine gun shots while standing at the corner, and he thought that they came from “a two storey block of flats west of Kells Walk”.¹ In his evidence to this Inquiry he stated that he could no longer recall the detail of his 1972 statement, but he assumed that it recorded his recollection at the time.² Instead, he said that he remembered hearing a mixture of high velocity and low velocity fire as he moved towards Rossville Street.³

65.127 Corporal INQ 444, another member of 7 Platoon, stated in his written evidence to this Inquiry that he heard Thompson sub-machine gun fire after he had moved through Barrier 14, and while he was moving along William Street. He recalled that there were two bursts of fire, with six to seven rounds in each. He initially stated that the firing came from somewhere to the south-west of his position on William Street, but he later expressed some uncertainty as to the location of the gunman or gunmen, and the time at which he heard the bursts of fire. Nonetheless, he stated that he was convinced that the firing in question came from a Thompson sub-machine gun.¹

65.128 Corporal INQ 444 also told us that at some stage he heard high velocity rifle fire coming from the direction of Glenfada Park. The firing continued for some time, and he formed the impression that he was listening to an ongoing gun battle; he told us that he did not himself feel threatened by this firing.¹

¹ C444.4; Day 344/98-99

65.129 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal INQ 444 stated that he was “fairly sure”, but not certain, that as he ran along William Street he heard the sound of nail bombs exploding in the area of Glenfada Park and Kells Walk.¹ In his oral evidence he agreed that it was possible that the noises that he heard were the shots fired by Lieutenant N along the Eden Place alleyway,² which we have discussed above.³ For reasons given elsewhere in this report,⁴ we are sure that no nail bombs exploded in any of the sectors on Bloody Sunday. In our view (assuming his recollection of hearing sounds is accurate) what Corporal INQ 444 heard was the firing of baton rounds or the shots fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway.

65.130 Lance Corporal INQ 1799 of 7 Platoon also told this Inquiry that the first gunfire he heard was two bursts of Thompson sub-machine gun fire after he had moved through Barrier 14. Initially he recalled moving into Chamberlain Street, but during his oral evidence he stated that he was no longer sure that this was the case. However, he told us that he remained “absolutely certain” that he heard Thompson sub-machine gun fire.¹ As we have commented above,² we came to the conclusion that this soldier had little clear recollection of events. We consider below³ Lance Corporal INQ 1799’s evidence of seeing armed civilians, including a man with an automatic pistol in the area of Chamberlain Street or William Street.

² Paragraph 65.46

65.131 INQ 736, who appears to us to have been in 9 Platoon, told this Inquiry that either while he was at the corner of William Street and Rossville Street, or as he moved there from Barrier 14, he heard high and low velocity rounds. He said that while it was difficult to distinguish (Army) SLR fire from (IRA) M1 carbine fire, he thought that he heard the latter. He attributed the low velocity shots to the firing of a Thompson sub-machine gun, but he could not recall whether these rounds were fired in bursts. INQ 736 also recalled hearing outgoing shots, fired from closer to him, but he thought that there was more incoming fire than outgoing and that it was, with one exception, the heaviest firing that he heard in Northern Ireland. INQ 736 thought that the incoming high and low velocity shots sounded like they were coming from the south, from the direction of the Rossville Flats, and were aimed towards his position.¹ He told us he recalled seeing Support Company moving as if they were under fire.²

² C736.2-3; Day 310/146-154

65.132 INQ 736 also told us that he recalled hearing two small explosions, which were louder than a baton round or a gas canister and could have been from a nail bomb. He said that he did not pay any particular attention to them, as he knew they were too far away to be directed at him.¹ In his written statement to this Inquiry, INQ 736 recorded that he heard these explosions as he ran down William Street.² However, in his oral evidence he said that he could not remember where he was when he heard the noises, but he thought that they occurred after he had passed through Barrier 14, but before the Support Company vehicles went into the Bogside.³

65.133 For reasons given earlier,¹ we have taken the view that it would be wise to place little reliance on the accounts given by INQ 736 of what he saw and did. As we have already concluded, there were no nail bomb explosions on Bloody Sunday.

65.134 Private INQ 1093, a signaller in 9 Platoon, told this Inquiry that he saw the strike of rounds fired from what he took to be an automatic weapon about 10m to 12m in front of him as he advanced down either Chamberlain Street or Rossville Street. We have earlier expressed the view¹ that it would be unwise to rely on his evidence.²

² C1093.3-4

65.135 Private INQ 587, another member of 9 Platoon, later became a weapons instructor. He told this Inquiry that as he moved towards the junction of William Street and Rossville Street he heard a mixture of firing, which went on for 20 minutes. He estimated that 20 per cent of the shots that he heard on Bloody Sunday came from non-military sources.¹ Private INQ 587 said that he thought that the first weapon he heard was a Thompson sub-machine gun, and that this was followed by shots from SLRs and a Garand rifle (a high velocity weapon that was not carried by soldiers on 30th January 1972).² However, he stated that he could only identify these weapons in retrospect years later, and that he would not have been able to identify the types of fire at the time.³

65.136 In our view it would be unwise to rely on this retrospective identification of the sound of weapons, years after the event.

65.137 Private INQ 131, a member of 7 Platoon, told us that he heard incoming fire from a low velocity, low calibre weapon as he reached the junction of William Street and Rossville Street; he was sure that this was not SLR fire.¹ Lance Corporal INQ 1056 of 9 Platoon told us that he recalled hearing small arms fire at some point shortly after he moved through Barrier 14, but his precise location at the time was not clear.²

² C1056.3

65.138 Sergeant INQ 488 stated to this Inquiry that he heard low velocity gunfire coming from the south when he was about 20 yards from the corner of Rossville Street.¹ He was not able to identify the type of weapon from which this came.² During his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant INQ 488 expressed himself as sure that what he heard was not the sound of baton rounds, because he had heard the “crack and then thump” which he said applied to both high and low velocity rounds but not to baton rounds.³ In our view Sergeant INQ 488

was mistaken in seeking to distinguish low velocity rounds from baton rounds on the basis that the former made a “crack and then thump”. He was correct in describing the “crack” as the sound of a round passing overhead or close by⁴ and the thump as the explosion in the breech of the weapon, but the “crack” is the sound of the round breaking the sound barrier, which is why it is heard before the “thump” of the weapon being fired. A low velocity round does not exceed the speed of sound, so that the sound of the bullet (if heard at all) will not be heard before the sound of the weapon being fired.⁵ It follows in our view that we cannot accept Sergeant INQ 488’s basis for distinguishing between low velocity rounds and baton rounds, both of which are subsonic. His written description of hearing a “booming” sound is in our view apt to describe the sound made by the firing of a baton gun.⁶

C Company soldiers on the Eden Place waste ground

65.139 After they had deployed through Barrier 14 some C Company soldiers, including the Officer Commanding, Major 221A, and a significant proportion of 7 Platoon, eventually made their way onto the waste ground to the east of Rossville Street. We have heard evidence from some of these soldiers that while they were in this area they heard incoming fire or saw the strikes of incoming rounds on the ground.

65.140 Major 221A prepared a statement, dated 31st January 1972, which included a Diary of Operations. This contained the following entry for the time period 1610–1620 hours:¹

“During asslt [assault] 22 persons were arrested. I heard gunfire from my right. I quite definitely heard an M1 carbine firing from Rossville Flats across the open ground to the North. I saw the strike of several enemy rounds in the Rossville/William St area.”

65.141 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Major 221A said that he had no aural recollection of any shooting on the day, and nor did he remember seeing rounds striking the ground. However, he had no reason to think that his 1972 statement was untrue.¹ He also stated that at the time of Bloody Sunday he would have had considerable knowledge as to the different sounds made by different weapons.² He told us that he recalled that he made his way to the Eden Place waste ground via Chamberlain Street and Eden Place, and once there he saw that Support Company had taken up defensive positions.³ He was unable, though, to help us further as to the timing of his movements.⁴ He also commented that he believed that he would have included a reference to hearing automatic gunfire in his Diary of Operations, had he in fact done so.⁵

65.142 Lance Corporal 003, a member of 7 Platoon, gave the following account to the RMP on 4th February 1972:¹

“I had moved from Rossville Street with [Second Lieutenant] 110 to the corner of number 36 Chamberlain Street where I was able to observe the flats ... There was quite a lot of firing coming from the flats at this time directed towards us. I was unable to locate any gunmen.

When we ran from Rossville Street to the corner of No 36 Chamberlain Street I saw one member of Support Company, I do not know who he was, take up a kneeling position and fire several rounds in the direction of Columbcill Court where gunfire was coming from. I did not see any gunman fire from that area but I heard automatic fire coming from there. It could possibly have been a Thompson MG [machine gun].”

65.143 Number 36 Chamberlain Street was at the southern end of the terraced houses that backed onto the Eden Place waste ground. Lance Corporal 003's evidence of hearing shots once he had moved to that position, or at least as he moved to that position, contrasts with Second Lieutenant 110's 1972 account, discussed above,¹ of hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire while at the corner of William Street and Rossville Street.² However, Second Lieutenant 110 told this Inquiry that he did move to the back of 36 Chamberlain Street,³ and it is clear, as is noted above,⁴ that he gave an earlier statement to the RMP on 3rd February 1972, which has not survived and in which it is possible that he might have referred to further incoming fire.

65.145 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 003 told us that he recalled that he heard Thompson sub-machine gun fire as he ran from the corner of William Street and Rossville Street to the back of the houses at the southern end of Chamberlain Street.¹ He also stated that he saw the strike of rounds on the ground.² He said that he was sure that the incoming fire was that of a Thompson sub-machine gun and attributed the more equivocal identification contained in his RMP statement to the statement taker's choice of words.³ He told us that he thought that the fire was coming from the general direction of Columbcille Court and not necessarily the complex itself, as had been implied by his RMP statement.⁴ He also told us that he was not aware of any shooting until he was crossing the Eden Place waste ground.⁵

65.146 Lance Corporal 003 was asked about the reference in his RMP statement to incoming fire from "the flats" which was directed towards his position. In his written statement to this Inquiry, he told us that he understood this to mean shots from the Rossville Flats and that although he no longer recalled such firing, "if I said it then, we were fired at".¹ During his oral evidence, it was suggested to Lance Corporal 003 that what he had said to the RMP was "just wrong". He replied: "No, at the time I would say that that is the truth, but I cannot recollect it now, to this day, not now."² However, a little later in his evidence Lance Corporal 003 told us that "we were not fired at while we were at the back of Chamberlain Street" and that the firing that he had recorded in his RMP statement was that which he heard as he was crossing the waste ground.³

He told us that he recalled that this shooting continued for some time, and that as he ran from the corner to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses he saw the dirt jumping from the bullet strikes on the ground.⁴ He stated that the shots could have come from anywhere, but he thought that they were being fired in his direction.⁵ Private INQ 131 stated that he also heard SLR fire at this time, which he believed came from members of Support Company who were then positioned in the Kells Walk area.⁶ In contrast to Lance Corporal 003, Private INQ 131 told us that he did not recall hearing any automatic gunfire.⁷

C Company soldiers at the northern end of Chamberlain Street

65.157 Lance Corporal INQ 1334, a member of 8 Platoon, told this Inquiry that as he entered Chamberlain Street he heard the “distinct sound” of one or two short bursts of Thompson sub-machine gun fire,¹ which he believed was being fired on William Street rather than at him.² He was “absolutely certain” that the sound he heard was a Thompson sub-machine gun firing,³ and he said that he did not recall hearing any high velocity shots at that time.⁴ Lance Corporal INQ 1334’s evidence was that he heard these shots before he saw Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy moving up Chamberlain Street.⁵

65.158 Lance Corporal INQ 2045, another member of 8 Platoon, told this Inquiry that while he was in Chamberlain Street he “had the impression” of hearing automatic Thompson sub-machine gun fire, and he was also “aware” of single shots, which he thought were high velocity, passing over his head as he heard the sound of a “crack”. However, his memory of the events of Bloody Sunday, and particularly of the sequence in which they occurred, was very limited.¹ Lance Corporal INQ 2045 told us that he initially thought that he heard the relevant shots when he had advanced about three-quarters of the way down the street to the south.² However, as he believed that he did not see Fr Daly and the group carrying Jackie Duddy until after he had heard the shooting, he thought it possible that he was actually far further to the north than he had originally recalled.³

65.159 Lance Corporal INQ 2045’s evidence appeared to be that these shots took place in the context of a short and intensive gun battle, involving Thompson sub-machine gun fire and high velocity, single shots which he thought probably came from SLRs.¹ He said that he did not think that he would have confused the sound of Thompson sub-machine gun fire with baton rounds.² He described the Thompson sub-machine gun fire as having come from the south-west of his position, although he could not be sure on this point.³

65.160 Private INQ 1073 also told this Inquiry that he heard Thompson sub-machine gun or small arms fire as he turned into Chamberlain Street. He stated that he was not sure where the firing was coming from, but it did not seem to be directed at his position and “nobody commented about it”. He stated that he did not recall hearing any high velocity fire.¹

65.161 Private INQ 12, another member of 8 Platoon, gave evidence to this Inquiry of coming under fire and taking cover, as he and his colleagues turned into what we are confident was Chamberlain Street.¹ He said he thought that the source of the incoming shots was either a semi-automatic rifle, or from a bolt action rifle that was fired rapidly, although he also thought it possible that the shots came from more than one weapon.² He said that he did not think that the firing sounded like SLR fire or baton rounds.³ In his written evidence to this Inquiry he described the shots as being high velocity.⁴ In his oral evidence he said first that they were lower velocity than an SLR, and then that they were low velocity; but when the discrepancy between this evidence and his written statement was pointed out, he said that he must have been mistaken and that the shots were high velocity after all.⁵

65.162 Private INQ 12 stated throughout his evidence to this Inquiry that after the shots were fired, he and his platoon took cover.¹ Some people dived in the gutter, but he kicked open a door of a family home and hunkered down in the doorway, while another soldier entered the hallway.² He also stated, in his oral evidence, that he saw the strike of rounds hitting the ground,³ and that he thought that they were fired straight down the road towards them.⁴

65.163 Private INQ 12 told us that from his position in cover, he heard SLR fire and then saw a civilian gunman on the roof of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. Private INQ 12 said that he did not have a weapon at that stage and so he could not fire at this man; in any event, he said he recalled hearing the Lieutenant commanding 9 Platoon telling soldiers not to fire as Support Company was in that building.¹ We discuss this aspect of his evidence further below.²

² Paragraphs 65.213–219

65.164 Private INQ 12 made statements to the RMP and the RUC in the months after Bloody Sunday.¹ These dealt with the arrests that he made on Bloody Sunday and made no reference to his having heard incoming fire or having seen a gunman. He told this Inquiry, and we accept, that he was not asked to include this aspect of his evidence when he made those statements.²

² Day 351/88-93

65.165 Having listened to Private INQ 12, we formed the impression that he had very little real recollection of Bloody Sunday and that it would be unwise to place much reliance on his evidence. We return to this soldier's evidence when considering the arrest of civilians in 33 Chamberlain Street and their subsequent treatment.¹

65.166 One member of 8 Platoon, Private INQ 471, told this Inquiry that he was sure that he did not hear Thompson sub-machine gun fire as he entered Chamberlain Street. He stated that he knew the sound of the weapon as he had been injured by one.¹ Private INQ 471 said that he did hear shooting either while he was at the corner of William Street and Chamberlain Street, or at a time when he had advanced to the junction of Eden Place and Harvey Street.² Initially he thought that he heard hostile rounds followed by a pause and then a return of fire.³ However, he later accepted that the first shots might have been those fired by Lieutenant N along Eden Place and into Chamberlain Street, and that it was quite possible that soldiers were responsible for all of the fire that he heard.⁴ He was unsure as to the direction and type of the first firing that he heard.⁵

65.167 Lance Corporal INQ 1056, a member of 9 Platoon, gave evidence to this Inquiry that he heard small arms fire and then high velocity rounds shortly after he moved through Barrier 14. The small arms fire came from his left and the high velocity shots from his right. His evidence was unclear as to where he was when he heard these shots, but he may, on his account, have been somewhere close to the northern end of Chamberlain Street.¹

C Company soldiers at the southern end of Chamberlain Street

65.168 Second Lieutenant 026 commanded 8 Platoon. In an RMP statement timed at 1640 hours on 4th February 1972, he recorded that he witnessed the following events after his platoon, accompanied by an APC, had taken up positions at the southern end of Chamberlain Street:¹

“At this time I heard the sound of two distinct weapons firing between 20–30 rounds within a space of five–ten minutes. The fire was not directed at us but the projectiles passed across our front. One weapon was almost certainly a M1 Carbine while the other was possibly of a .303 calibre. It was definitely not a 7.62 weapon.

I could not see the target in question, neither was I able to pinpoint the exact position of the gunmen. I could not see any weapon or flashes indicating firing position consequently we did not return any fire.

From my own observations, I am of the opinion the both weapons were located on the roof of Rossville Flats in the immediate vicinity of a lift-housing. I have marked the area concerned on the map the approximate map reference being 43281675.”

65.169 The map to which Second Lieutenant 026 referred has not survived. However, the grid reference indicates that the position to which he was referring was the south-east corner of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, as is shown on the following image, which was created for this Inquiry.

65.170 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he recalled hearing, while at the southern end of Chamberlain Street, two or three shots from a high velocity weapon, which sounded to him (and to some of his men) like an M1 carbine.¹ He said that he was sure of this identification, and that he did not think that he would have mistaken the sound for that of SLR fire.² The shots were fired rapidly, and he thought that there might have been two gunmen.³ He was not sure of the position of the firer or firers, but he thought that they were above ground level and in or on Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.⁴ He told us that the shots were not aimed at him or his men and passed in front of them, having been fired in a north-westerly direction.⁵

65.171 In relation to his RMP statement, Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he believed that the details of the incident would have been clearer in his mind in 1972.¹ He was happy to stand by that statement as being correct,² although he did suggest that it was the RMP who first mentioned the lift housing on top of Block 2 of the flats.³

65.172 Second Lieutenant 026 told this Inquiry that, as far as he was able to recall, he reported these shots to his Company Commander on the radio.¹ C Company's Commander was Major 221A, who, as is explained above,² also gave evidence in 1972 of hearing an M1 carbine firing from the Rossville Flats, albeit while he was somewhere in the region of the Eden Place waste ground.³ Major 221A made no reference in his evidence to receiving a message concerning incoming fire from Second Lieutenant 026, and there is no log for the C Company net, on which such a report would have been transmitted. Whether Second Lieutenant 026 was right in thinking he recalled that he had made a radio report to his Company Commander remains in doubt.

² Paragraph 65.140

65.173 Corporal 007 also gave evidence of hearing M1 carbine fire at a time when he was at the southern end of Chamberlain Street. He gave the following account in an RMP statement timed at 1700 hours on 4th February 1972:¹

“From where I was standing, behind the APC I heard the sound of about 4 or 5 shots. I heard only one weapon firing, which in my opinion was a M1 carbine. It was definitely not 7.62 calibre. The shots panned across our position, and I do not believe the fire was directed at us.

From what I could see the gunman was in the vicinity of a lift housing on the roof of Rossville Flats. I did not actually see him or the weapon concerned, and I base my opinion on my experience alone and the sound of the weapon. I estimate the distance of the gunman from us to be about 100 yds. His position would be approximately MR 43281675 [the same reference as was given by Second Lieutenant 026, which is marked on the image above²].”

65.174 This Inquiry is in possession of the original handwritten notes of the RMP interviews conducted with Second Lieutenant 026 and Corporal 007. These show that both men were interviewed by the same RMP statement taker, Staff Sergeant Middleton-Jones. According to the timings given, the interviews took place within 20 minutes of one another.

65.175 As is noted above,¹ Second Lieutenant 026, who gave his statement before Corporal 007, told us that he thought that the reference to the lift housing in his statement was suggested to him by the interviewer.² The same words, and the same grid reference, are contained in Corporal 007’s statement.³ Corporal 007 told us that his RMP evidence on this point was an “assumption made after the event”, the result of being taken through “suggested areas”, in a “process of elimination”.⁴ Staff Sergeant Middleton-Jones is dead. He gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

65.176 Despite the caveat as to the location of the gunman, Corporal 007 gave a similar account to this Inquiry as he had done to the RMP. He recalled that as he was standing behind an APC at the southern end of Chamberlain Street he heard three to four high velocity shots fired in quick succession.¹ Although in his written evidence he stated that the shots “seemed to me to be from an M1 Carbine”, he said in his oral evidence that “Standing here today I could not say that [the shots came from an M1 carbine as opposed to another weapon], but obviously at the time I believed it was [an M1 carbine]”.² He told us he thought that the shots passed across the front of the vehicle and were not aimed at his position; that he did not know the exact location from which they were fired; and that he did not see anyone or any weapon.³ He said that this was the first gunfire that he could recall hearing since moving through Barrier 14.⁴

65.177 Lance Corporal INQ 1334, whose evidence of hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire shortly after moving through Barrier 14 is summarised above,¹ also told this Inquiry that he heard an M1 carbine while with 8 Platoon at the southern end of Chamberlain Street.² He said he thought that the incident occurred at around the time that people arrested by other members of his platoon were being brought out of 33 Chamberlain Street, although he accepted that his recollection of relative timings was hazy.³ Lance Corporal INQ 1334 told us that he did not feel that the firing was aimed at him,⁴ but was confident that the sound was that of an M1 carbine and not an SLR.⁵ He said he thought that the gunman was firing “double taps” (two shots in quick succession) and that there were a large number of shots fired, although he could not specify how many.⁶ He said that he did not see the source of the firing, but thought that it came from the central area of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.⁷

65.178 Lance Corporal INQ 1334 told this Inquiry that while he was at the southern end of Chamberlain Street he also heard low velocity pistol or single shot sub-machine gun fire. He thought that this came from the direction of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, and that it was possible that more than one weapon was being fired. He was not sure how many rounds were fired, but he was confident that he heard these shots after he had heard the M1 carbine fire.¹

65.179 According to his evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal INQ 1334 was with his pair, Private INQ 1596, when he heard the firing at the southern end of Chamberlain Street.¹ Private INQ 1596 gave no evidence to this Inquiry. However, Second Lieutenant 026 told this Inquiry that he thought that Lance Corporal INQ 1334 might well have been one of the soldiers who were with him when he heard M1 carbine fire at the bottom of Chamberlain Street.²

² Day 315/136

65.180 Corporal INQ 579, who was also a member of 8 Platoon, told us that he recalled being aware of high velocity fire aimed towards him as he moved down Chamberlain Street. He told this Inquiry that when he was about halfway down Chamberlain Street he heard the crack and thump of a high velocity round passing him. He said that he thought that this had been fired at him from a position in the Rossville Flats area. Corporal INQ 579 and his colleagues took cover, and within seconds a second shot was fired from the same direction. He said he asked if anyone had seen a gunman, but no-one had. It was his recollection that 8 Platoon then advanced under cover to the end of Chamberlain Street.¹

65.181 Corporal INQ 579's account is to be contrasted with that of Second Lieutenant 026, who told us that he was not aware of any gunfire from the time he went into Chamberlain Street with his soldiers until he got to the Rossville Flats end of that street.¹ Corporal 007 also stated that he did not hear gunfire until he reached the southern end of Chamberlain Street.² Had there been gunfire along Chamberlain Street, we are sure that Second Lieutenant 026 would not only have remembered it, as it would have meant that his soldiers were under attack, but would also have made mention of it in his RMP statement. In these circumstances we do not place any reliance on the account of firing given by Corporal INQ 579.

Consideration of C Company soldiers' evidence of non-military fire

65.182 We were greatly assisted by the report prepared by RA Davis, Michael Lower and Stuart Dyne of ISVR Consultancy Services, who advised us on various aspects of sound and sound perception in relation to the firing of weapons.¹ We accept the views of these experts.

65.183 In general terms, and according to most definitions, a high and medium velocity weapon fires a supersonic bullet, the former at a greater speed than the latter, while a low velocity weapon fires a subsonic round. When a high velocity weapon is fired, a listener in front of the firearm and close to the passage of the bullet will, if he or she is some distance from the weapon, hear a crack and then a thump or boom. The crack is the sound of the bullet breaking the sound barrier. The thump or boom is the sound of the blast from the muzzle of the weapon. The latter noise travels at the speed of sound and is accordingly heard after the crack of the supersonic bullet. Thus the closer the listener is to the weapon, the less the interval between the two different sounds. The presence of a crack sound would enable an experienced listener to deduce that the shot was from a high velocity firearm. The absence of a crack sound does not permit the listener to draw any conclusion regarding the type of firearm.

65.184 Part of the ISVR Consultancy Services report considered the feasibility of conducting experiments to test the abilities of listeners to identify firearms subjectively.¹ The conclusion was that experiments would be extremely difficult to carry out, the results would be difficult to interpret, and the findings would be of limited use to this Inquiry.

65.185 The reasons for this conclusion were as follows:¹

“Test conditions

The witnesses on Bloody Sunday were in an urban environment with sound reflections and shielding by buildings, considerable background noise, and many distractions. Firearms sounds may have occurred with little or no warning, and any decision made by an individual about the type of weapon being fired would have relied on a spontaneous judgement. Any identification of a weapon may also have been based on other cues, particularly visual cues, on the individual's surmise about or knowledge of what had happened, or on the individual's expectations of which weapons were likely or unlikely to be extant. It is obviously not possible to reproduce the above conditions for the purposes of an experiment, although the effects of buildings on the propagation of sounds can be reproduced to some extent in a similar environment.

Test subjects

The individual witnesses who heard gunfire or similar sounds on Bloody Sunday would have fallen into several categories, including soldiers, police and civilians. They would not be from a single, homogeneous group. To have been able to discriminate between weapons, or to identify particular types of weapon from the sounds produced, individual witnesses would not only have to have been exposed to weapons noise previously, but they would have to have seen, or known for certain, which type of firearm was being fired at any time, so that they could learn to associate a given sound with a given type of weapon. The opportunities available to each individual to obtain such experience, and the range of firearms encompassed by that experience, must have varied considerably from person to person and cannot be quantified. It is therefore obviously impossible to match the experience of potential subjects to the experience of the individual witnesses to Bloody Sunday. If an experiment were to be carried out the abilities tested would be those of the subjects participating, and it would not be possible to relate their abilities to the abilities of the original witnesses.

Test firearms

We do not know what types of weapon and ammunition, if any, were used on Bloody Sunday other than by the Army. Thus the choice of any firearms or ammunition to be used in a subjective listening experiment would be arbitrary and not necessarily representative of the firearms and ammunition which might possibly have been used on Bloody Sunday. It would also not be possible to include test firings of one of the most important firearms, a baton gun with ammunition of the type used in 1972, because the particular type of ammunition has long been superseded.

Practical difficulties and design complexities

It is extremely difficult, even with the best of loudspeakers, to reproduce waveforms of very short-duration, very high-level, impulsive sounds of nearby gunfire at a realistic level or with convincing realism. Therefore we concluded that any experiment should involve listeners hearing real rather than recorded gunfire. Live firing experiments would be limited because, for safety, listeners would only be able to hear gunfire from behind or to the side of the firer, and certainly not in front.

We carried out some informal pilot tests using ourselves as subjects to listen to live firing. Close to the firing point, about 50 metres away, with an unobstructed sound path between us and the firearms, and with the benefit of a direct comparison, we could hear clear differences in sound level and character between the high- and low-velocity firearms (i.e. between rifles and pistols) fired in succession from the same position. However it was also clear that the benefit of direct comparison between sounds from different firearms made the discrimination relatively easy. If we wished to test the abilities of listeners to identify firearms from single shots we would need to take precautions to prevent listeners having an opportunity to compare directly sounds fired from the same spot and we would not be able to allow the listeners to hear more than one firearm at a time without changing the firing position, the listening position, or both.

At greater distances, or when screened by buildings, our observation was that the sounds of some of the high-velocity and low-velocity firearms could become very similar in character, although the actual sound levels of high-velocity weapons were still higher. This meant that if two shots were fired in succession from the same point, one from a rifle and one from a pistol, it could be deduced that the louder shot was obviously from a rifle and the quieter from a pistol. Again we would have to prevent listeners from making a comparison. We also considered that in some circumstances the sound of a rifle a given distance away could be similar in character to the sound of a pistol being fired at a shorter distance. This observation reinforced the conclusion that any formal experiment must be designed to allow the distance between the firing point and the listeners, and the direction of firing relative to the listeners, to be readily and randomly changed between successive shots.

These informal tests confirmed the practical and logistical difficulties which would be involved in carrying out a formal scientific listening experiment. In particular, the precautions which would need to be taken to prevent listeners from hearing more than one firearm at a time from any given firing position and at any given listening position would make an experiment long and unwieldy, and probably impracticable.

In some very specific circumstances, the sound of a firearm may assist identification. These circumstances are when a bullet from a high-velocity firearm passes close to the listener or witness. The presence of a 'crack' sound from a supersonic bullet's shock wave will identify the firearm as a high-velocity type to an experienced listener, whereas the absence of the crack will not assist identification. We do not know how close a listener would need to be to the bullet's path to be able to hear the crack of the shock wave. This particular point was not addressed in our Report No. 5903 R04, but is covered in our Report No 5903 R06 and summarised in Section 7 below."

65.186 An SLR and an M1 carbine both produce a crack sound. Revolvers and Thompson sub-machine guns, which fire subsonically, do not.¹

¹ E9.22; E9.181; Day 301/42

65.187 The evidence of Colour Sergeant 002 of Composite Platoon, Support Company (a weapons training officer) was that in a built-up area it is not possible to identify from the sound the type of weapon being used.¹ The evidence of Colonel James Ferguson, Commanding Officer of 22 Lt AD Regt, was that in a built-up area such as Londonderry, it would be very difficult for individual soldiers to know who was shooting and from where: *"One shot was all that it might take for everyone to believe that they were coming under fire."*² Colonel Roy Jackson, Commanding Officer of 1 R ANGLIAN, gave evidence to much the same effect, noting in particular that the topography of Londonderry made it "almost impossible" to identify from where a shot was fired unless the flash from the weapon on firing could be seen.³ In the light of the ISVR report, we prefer the evidence of these soldiers to those (such as Private INQ 587) who were positive that they were able from the sound to distinguish between different types of weapons and from where and in which direction firing was coming.

² B1122.11-12; Day 281/67

65.188 Bearing in mind these difficulties in the identification of weapons from the sound of firing, we turn to consider the evidence of C Company soldiers about non-military firing.

65.189 On the basis of the available material and as is explained above,¹ we consider that soldiers of 7 Platoon did not move across the Eden Place waste ground until a late stage, by which time the vehicles of Mortar Platoon had been moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and some Army vehicles were moving from there back along Rossville Street. In the course of this report,² we consider what was happening in Sector 3 after the vehicles had moved forward. We have found nothing that suggests to us that there was at that stage non-military firing of the kind described by soldiers of 7 Platoon into the area of the Eden Place waste ground.

² Chapters 121–124

65.190 There was (as we discuss in the context of the later events in Sector 3¹) late firing by soldiers of Support Company and Composite Platoon at a window on the western side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and in our view this is likely to be what the 7 Platoon soldiers heard from the Eden Place waste ground. As will be seen,² in our view other soldiers mistook this firing, or some of it, for firing by paramilitaries.

65.191 In these circumstances we do not accept the evidence of non-military firing given by soldiers of 7 Platoon who went across the Eden Place waste ground. In our view what, if anything, they heard was firing by soldiers of Support Company.

65.192 As to the 8 Platoon soldiers, as we have already observed,¹ it seems to us that before these soldiers had gone far along Chamberlain Street, the group carrying Jackie Duddy had come along that street and turned up Harvey Street; and that by the time soldiers had got to the southern end of Chamberlain Street and Second Lieutenant 026 had looked into the car park, all the casualties in Sector 2 had been sustained. We do not find convincing the evidence of non-military fire from soldiers who were at the southern end of Chamberlain Street. They did not suggest that it was directed at them and in our view it is much more likely that what they heard were some of the shots fired at a late stage by soldiers at a flat in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, which we consider in detail later in this report.²

65.193 We are of the view that there was no non-military firing along Chamberlain Street, as was suggested by Lance Corporal INQ 2045, Private INQ 12 and Corporal INQ 579. In our view, had 8 Platoon come under fire in Chamberlain Street, Second Lieutenant 026 would have noticed it or been told of it and would have recorded the fact that his soldiers had come under fire in his 1972 account.

65.194 We now consider the remaining accounts of non-military firing.

65.195 For the reasons given above,¹ we are unable to accept the evidence of those soldiers of C Company who said that they were able to distinguish between different types of high or medium velocity weapons. In our view it must also be borne in mind when considering what reliance to place on the evidence of C Company soldiers of non-military fire, that shortly after they crossed Barrier 14, Lieutenant N fired three shots up the Eden Place alleyway; and soon after that other soldiers of Support Company opened fire in Sectors 2 and 3, followed by further Army fire in Sectors 4 and 5. We discuss this firing in detail in our consideration of the events of the five sectors.² Within a short space of time, probably ten minutes or less, Support Company soldiers fired over 100 rounds, as well as a substantial number of baton rounds. In our view this must have given rise to a belief among soldiers who had come through Barrier 14 that 1 PARA soldiers had become engaged in a full-scale gun battle. In these circumstances some soldiers at least would be expecting to hear non-military fire, and would be ready (albeit in good faith) to ascribe some of what they heard to such firing. As will have been noted, Corporal INQ 444 and Private INQ 1582 in effect told us that this is what they thought. In our view there was in fact no such gun battle, as will be seen from our detailed consideration of what took place in the five sectors; but soldiers of C Company could understandably have mistaken what was going on.

² Chapters 30, 51, 73, 81, 84, 85, 97, 107 and 119

65.196 As to those who described hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire, much the same considerations apply. As will be seen from our consideration of the events of Sector 5,¹ soldiers on the City Walls described hearing and in one case seeing Thompson sub-machine gun fire from Glenfada Park North. We are sure, for the reasons we give, that there was no such firing from there; and in our view what these soldiers thought was sub-machine gun fire was in fact a soldier firing repeatedly at the corner of Glenfada Park North and Rossville Street. To our minds this instance provides a striking example of soldiers mistakenly attributing repeated high velocity Army gunfire to fire from a Thompson sub-machine gun.

65.197 The only evidence of Thompson sub-machine gun fire given in 1972 by members of C Company was that of Second Lieutenant 110 and Lance Corporal 003. The former recorded that he heard a burst of eight rounds fired from a two-storey block of flats west of Kells Walk,¹ while he was at the corner of Rossville Street and William Street. The latter recorded that as he ran across the Eden Place waste ground with Second Lieutenant 110 he saw a member of Support Company fire several rounds in the direction of Columbcille Court, from where he could hear automatic gunfire, “possibly” from a Thompson.² There is nothing in the evidence from the soldiers of Support Company who went into the Bogside that suggests to us that there was automatic gunfire from Columbcille Court or elsewhere to the west of Kells Walk.

65.198 Corporal INQ 444 told us that he recalled hearing two bursts of Thompson sub-machine gun fire, of six to seven rounds each, as he was moving along William Street, but in view of the state of his recollection, on which we have commented above,¹ it is difficult to rely on his account of where he was when he said he had heard this firing.

65.199 Lance Corporal INQ 1334, Lance Corporal INQ 2045 and Private INQ 1073, all of 8 Platoon, also described hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire when they were in or turning into Chamberlain Street. However, there is no record of such firing by Second Lieutenant 026 (the Commander of 8 Platoon) in his 1972 account. As already noted, Private INQ 471 (also of 8 Platoon) told us that he knew the sound of this weapon as he had been injured by one; but he did not recall hearing Thompson sub-machine gun fire as he entered Chamberlain Street.

65.200 We have already expressed the view¹ that it would be unwise to rely upon the accounts given by INQ 736 and Private INQ 1093. We have also expressed the view² that it would be unwise to rely upon the retrospective description of Thompson sub-machine gun fire given by Private INQ 587 and that Lance Corporal INQ 1799 had no clear recollection of events.

² Paragraphs 65.46, 65.130, 65.136 and 65.156

65.201 In all the circumstances we are doubtful whether any of the soldiers of C Company heard or witnessed Thompson sub-machine gun fire. It is possible that some of them did, but it is in our view more likely that what happened was that they mistakenly thought or came to believe that some of the substantial firing by soldiers of Support Company was that of paramilitary gunmen with Thompson sub-machine guns. Elsewhere in this report¹ we consider other evidence about Thompson sub-machine gun fire, and give reasons for our conclusion that although we cannot eliminate the possibility that there was some such firing on Bloody Sunday, we consider it more likely that there was not.

65.202 As to other low velocity gunfire, it is possible that some soldiers did hear what little low velocity firing there was in the sectors; but for the reasons already given,¹ it is our view that it is equally likely that they were mistaken about this.

Evidence from C Company soldiers of seeing civilian gunmen

65.203 Some members of C Company gave evidence of seeing a civilian gunman or civilian gunmen on Bloody Sunday. Their accounts can be divided into soldiers who claim to have seen or been aware of a man with a rifle running at ground level in the vicinity of Block 1 or Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, those who thought that there was a gunman on the roof of one of the blocks of the same flats, and the account of Lance Corporal INQ 1799 of seeing a man with an automatic pistol on either Chamberlain Street or William Street.

A gunman at ground level in the vicinity of Block 1 or Block 2 of the Rossville Flats

65.204 Second Lieutenant 110, the officer in command of 7 Platoon, gave the following evidence of seeing a gunman in his RMP statement of 4th February 1972:¹

“At approximately 1600 hrs I was positioned in a recess at the rear of houses facing Chamberlain St observing in the direction of Rossville Flats. Whilst in this position I saw a male person aged about 25 yrs and was wearing jacket and trousers. The distance between this person and myself was about 100 metres, so I could not say what colour of clothing he was wearing.

I observed that this person was carrying a weapon under his right arm, all I saw was the butt of the weapon sticking out from underneath his arm. Again fire was not returned to the best of my knowledge.”

65.205 Second Lieutenant 110 gave a similar account of seeing a civilian carrying a gun in his evidence to this Inquiry. He told us that he recalled that the man moved from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats to Block 2 at ground level and then disappeared from view. Second Lieutenant 110 stated that he recalled that the man was carrying a long weapon, of which he could see both the butt and the barrel. Second Lieutenant 110 stated that he did not fire at the gunman as he only had a baton.¹ He marked his position and that of the gunman with red and green arrows on the following photograph.²

² Day 350/71-72; B1726.010

65.206 Another member of 7 Platoon, Corporal INQ 444, also gave evidence of seeing, from a position at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, a man with a rifle close to the corner of Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. In contrast to Second Lieutenant 110, Corporal INQ 444 recalled that the gunman passed from Block 2 to Block 1. Corporal INQ 444 stated that events took place so quickly that he was unable to take any action and only had a fleeting glimpse of the man in question. He added that the gunman, who was alone, was carrying the rifle in both hands and making no effort to conceal it. The gunman, according to Corporal INQ 444, did not aim the weapon. Corporal INQ 444 stated that he was “pretty certain ... not 100 per cent, but ... pretty certain” that the man was carrying a rifle.¹

¹ C444.5; C444.9; Day 344/81; Day 344/99-103; Day 344/129-133

65.207 Lance Corporal 003, also of 7 Platoon, told this Inquiry that he was with Corporal INQ 444 as they moved across the Eden Place waste ground and to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses.¹ He stated that at some point during the time they spent at the back of the houses he heard Corporal INQ 444 ask whether or not he had seen a man with a weapon between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. Lance Corporal 003 told us that he did not see this, nor any gunman.² Lance Corporal 003 did not mention this incident in his RMP statement, although he did state that he was “unable to locate any gunmen”, despite being aware of incoming fire.³ In his evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal INQ 444 said that he did not recall shouting a warning to anyone in his platoon, but he thought that it was possible that he might have done so.⁴

65.208 Lance Corporal INQ 1799, again of 7 Platoon, recorded in his written evidence to this Inquiry that while he was sheltering behind a “boulder” at the southern end of Chamberlain Street he saw a civilian gunman lying prone with an M1 carbine at the low wall in front of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats. He nearly fired at this man, but did not due to the proximity of a civilian, who he thought was seeking to restrain the gunman. He also recalled that Major 221A, the Commander of C Company, was with him and gave an order not to fire at that time. The gunman, on Lance Corporal INQ 1799’s evidence, crawled back towards a “pillar type object”.¹

65.209 In his oral evidence Lance Corporal INQ 1799 said that he was “Absolutely certain” that he had seen a man armed with an M1 carbine, but he thought that he, Lance Corporal INQ 1799, might have been in the Eden Place waste ground, while the gunman was in the waste ground to the north of Block 1.¹ He did not, however, see any Army vehicles or soldiers in the vicinity of the gunman.² Lance Corporal INQ 1799 said that he saw the gunman at a time when he could hear the firing that is described above.^{3,4}

⁴ Paragraph 69.154

65.210 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Major 221A stated that he did not recall being with Lance Corporal INQ 1799 at the southern end of Chamberlain Street, but, as he gave oral evidence before Lance Corporal INQ 1799, he was not asked about the latter’s change of evidence as to his and the gunman’s position.¹ Major 221A stated that he had no recollection of the incident described by Lance Corporal INQ 1799 and no reference to it appeared in his 1972 statements; however, he thought it was still possible that it happened as Lance Corporal INQ 1799 described.²

² Day 294/165-169; B2166; B2166.1; B2168

65.211 We have already expressed the view¹ that it would be unwise to rely on the accounts given by Lance Corporal INQ 1799.

65.212 In our view it is unlikely that Second Lieutenant 110 and Corporal INQ 444 saw a gunman. As we have already concluded,¹ by the time Second Lieutenant 110 and Corporal INQ 444 had got to the back of the Chamberlain Street houses, from where they said that they had seen a gunman, the shooting in Sector 2 had finished, but there were soldiers and Army vehicles in the area of the Rossville Flats. In these circumstances it seems to us that a gunman would be foolhardy in the extreme to come into the open with his weapon in full view, when the Rossville Flats provided a ready means of moving, concealed from the soldiers.

A gunman on the roof of one of the blocks of the Rossville Flats

65.213 Private INQ 12, a member of 8 Platoon, told this Inquiry that as he advanced down Chamberlain Street he saw a gunman, armed with a rifle and dressed in civilian clothing, on the roof of the block of flats 300 to 350 yards in front of him (which would have been Block 2 of the Rossville Flats).¹ He said that he saw this man just after he had heard incoming fire; his evidence of this firing is discussed above. Private INQ 12 told us that he recalled that the man emerged from behind a structure on top of the roof and looked as if he was getting into a firing position, but that he did not see him fire;² and that the gunman subsequently stood up again and walked away.³ Private INQ 12's evidence was that he could not engage the target as he did not have a weapon; and that in any event he heard one of the Lieutenants, who he believed was in command of 9 Platoon, shout three times that no-one was to fire as Support Company was in the building.⁴

⁴ C12.3; Day 351/23

65.214 As already noted,¹ we do not have any evidence from anyone who claimed to have commanded 9 Platoon.

65.215 Private INQ 12's evidence of seeing a man with a rifle close to a structure on top of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats is comparable to the 1972 accounts, described above, of Second Lieutenant 026 and Corporal 007. Both of these soldiers, also members of 8 Platoon, thought that they heard rifle shots fired from the area around what was described in their RMP statements as the "lift housing" at the eastern end of the Block 2 roof.¹ Neither Second Lieutenant 026 nor Corporal 007 claimed to have seen a gunman, and both expressed reservations as to the extent to which the description of the source of fire reflected their memory, as opposed to the RMP statement taker's interpretation.²

² Day 315/139-140; Day 315/166-168; B1384.003; B1384.005; Day 310/32-33; Day 310/77-80

65.216 This Inquiry has a number of photographs showing the roof of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, but in none of these is there any evidence of the presence of what might be described as lift housing. There was a raised structure running all the way along the southern edge of the roof, but we doubt whether this would have been visible to a soldier at ground level at the southern end of Chamberlain Street.

65.217 While most of the relevant photographs, including those shown above, were not taken on Bloody Sunday, a still image from film footage taken on that day seems to confirm that the roof at the south-eastern end of Block 2 would have appeared to be flat when viewed from ground level.

65.218 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Private INQ 12 said that he was unable to explain why, contrary to his stated memory, there did not appear to be any structure on the roof of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹ Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he could not recall seeing a lift housing, and suggested that the phrase was that of the RMP statement taker.² However, he did suggest that from the ground level he might have had the impression, possibly mistakenly, of seeing a raised area on the roof in the relevant position.³ Corporal 007 was not asked specifically about the apparent lack of any structure on the roof of Block 2. In our view the top of the Walker Monument, which was some 180 yards south of the Rossville Flats, could hardly be mistaken for a lift housing.

³ Day 315/166-168

² Day 315/139-140

65.219 We have already¹ expressed the view that it would be unwise to place much reliance on the evidence given by Private INQ 12. We do not accept that he saw a gunman on the Rossville Flats.

65.220 Another member of 8 Platoon, Lance Corporal INQ 2121, gave evidence to this Inquiry of seeing a gunman on the roof of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Lance Corporal INQ 2121 stated that he did not deploy through Barrier 14 with other members of his platoon as he remained behind guarding a broken-down vehicle. He was subsequently driven into the Bogside as the guard to a Medical Officer, and he disembarked somewhere in the region of the entrance to Pilot Row, close to the Rossville Flats.¹

¹ C2121.2-3; Day 369/211-215; P520

65.221 Lance Corporal INQ 2121 told this Inquiry that as he disembarked he heard two shots fired in the direction of the vehicle, and the crack as the bullets passed over him.¹ Although he did not recognise the type of weapon used to fire the shots, he thought that the sound was slower and lighter than that of an SLR.² He said that these were the only shots that he recalled hearing, and he said that he was “definite” that they were incoming fire.³ He told us that he was not sure where the shots came from, but he did see a man, who was on his own, moving in a crouching position from east to west across the roof at the north-west corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.⁴ Lance Corporal INQ 2121 said that he formed the impression that the long object that the man was holding in both hands was a rifle or a carbine,⁵ and he shouted to a colleague that he had seen a gunman.⁶ However, the man disappeared before Lance Corporal INQ 2121 could fire.⁷

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal INQ 2121 said that his recollection was that the bullets passed overhead and that he could not be sure that one of them struck the vehicle.⁴

65.223 In his interview with Lena Ferguson, Lance Corporal INQ 2121 appeared to say that he thought that one of the shots might have come from a Thompson sub-machine gun, and that this was a “heavier calibre shot” than those of SLRs.¹ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal INQ 2121 denied that he intended to give this impression, and said he thought that he might have been referring to some other shooting that he could no longer recall. He reiterated that he could not tell what type of shots were fired at him, other than that they were not SLR rounds.²

² Day 369/237-240

65.224 It is not easy to tell from the evidence of Lance Corporal INQ 2121 when he entered the Bogside,¹ but in general his account suggests that by the time he disembarked from his vehicle the main shooting incidents were over.²

² C2121.3; Day 369/223

65.225 1 PARA's Medical Officer on Bloody Sunday was Captain 219. In an RMP statement dated 14th February 1972, he recorded driving into Rossville Street at about 1630 hours in order to attend "a paratrooper who had fallen from a building and concussed himself".¹ The injured soldier was probably Private INQ 455, a member of Machine Gun Platoon who fell while entering the Abbey Taxis building on William Street at a time when the march was still in progress,² as we have described earlier in this report.³ It is not clear why there was such a delay in calling for medical assistance for him.⁴ Captain 219's vehicle was an APC converted for use as an ambulance, and marked accordingly. He believed that this was the only such vehicle that was in the vicinity of the Rossville Flats on that day.⁵ This suggests that Lance Corporal INQ 2121 was present in the same ambulance as Captain 219, even though the latter did not mention the former in his 1972 evidence. For his part, Lance Corporal INQ 2121 could not recall the name of the officer he accompanied, although he did remember that he was a Captain.⁶

65.226 The timing given in Captain 219's 1972 account is supported by the 1 PARA log, which records in an entry at 1630 hours that Support Company had incurred a casualty. In the "Action" column, there is a note reading "Medic passed" (entry 35).¹ This entry seemingly represents the moment at which Captain 219 was called forward. While the times contained in the log and Captain 219's RMP statement might not be exact, they would seem to indicate that the military ambulance did not enter the Bogside until after the main shooting incidents were over. Further, the evidence to this Inquiry of both Captain 219 and Lance Corporal INQ 2121 is that it took them some time to reach Support Company's position. Captain 219 recalled getting lost,² and Lance Corporal INQ 2121 remembered driving for about five minutes before stopping by the Rossville Flats.³

² B2162.003

65.227 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Captain 219, who was not called to give oral evidence, told us that he recalled hearing incoming fire as he disembarked from his ambulance. He stated that the rounds did not strike the ambulance, but did hit the ground near it. Although other soldiers thought that the shots were coming from the top of the Rossville Flats, Captain 219 believed that they were fired from the Glenfada Park North direction. Captain 219 stated that he took cover and then heard “a lot of high velocity fire but also some low velocity fire”. He recalled that there was a lot of firing, and that he thought that the soldiers might have fired more than the rounds that were officially recorded as having been expended.¹

65.228 In his one-page RMP statement, Captain 219 made no reference to hearing any firing when he was in the vicinity of the Rossville Flats.¹

¹ B2160

65.229 In our view there was no gunman on the roof of the Rossville Flats. As we describe elsewhere in this report there were soldiers on lookout on the City Walls in positions overlooking the Rossville Flats; and in an Observation Post (OP) on the Embassy Ballroom to the north-east of William Street. Any gunman on the roof of those flats and visible from the ground would also have been visible from either of these locations; but we have found nothing that suggests that one was spotted that day. It should be noted that the evidence of Gunner 023, a sniper stationed at the Peter England shirt factory on Sackville Street, was that he did not recall seeing anyone on the roofs of Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats.¹ Furthermore, it would have been foolhardy in the extreme for anyone minded to fire at the soldiers to take up a position on the roof, in full view of soldiers on the City Walls and the Embassy Ballroom OPs, who customarily kept a look-out from those positions.

65.230 As to the evidence of Lance Corporal INQ 2121 and Captain 219, we are sure that they did not arrive in the area until after most of the events of Sectors 2, 3, 4 and 5. As we discuss in our consideration of the events of Sector 3,¹ there was at a late stage firing by soldiers at a window on the west side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The journalist Fulvio Grimaldi had taken a photograph (shown below) from that window shortly before soldiers had fired at it, which shows the converted APC ambulance.

65.231 As we describe elsewhere in this report,¹ some of the firing at this window came from soldiers on a walkway on the west side of the Kells Walk flats, behind the ramp which can be seen in the left background of this photograph. These shots would have passed more or less over the ambulance. In our view this was the firing that Lance Corporal INQ 2121 and Captain 219 described hearing. We do not accept that they witnessed a shot hitting the ambulance or the ground nearby.

65.232 Other soldiers fired at the window from positions at ground level near the converted ambulance. In our view Lance Corporal INQ 2121 and Captain 219 probably also heard this firing, and may have again mistaken it for incoming fire.

65.233 In our view this incident is another example of soldiers mistakenly believing that they were witnessing incoming fire by paramilitaries.

Lance Corporal INQ 1799's account of seeing a man with an automatic pistol

65.234 Lance Corporal INQ 1799's evidence of hearing shots after he deployed into the Bogside and of seeing a gunman close to the Rossville Flats is considered above.¹ We have already noted² that he also told this Inquiry that as he moved down either Chamberlain

Street or William Street he saw a gunman armed with an automatic pistol among the crowd. According to Lance Corporal INQ 1799 the gunman, who was dressed in a black parka jacket, raised the pistol with both hands and pointed it in the general direction of Lance Corporal INQ 1799, who took cover in a doorway, from where he heard Thompson sub-machine gun fire. Lance Corporal INQ 1799 stated that he could not remember the gunman firing the pistol, but he thought that it was possible that he did so. Although Lance Corporal INQ 1799 only had a “short, fast exposure” to the gunman, he had a “quite ineradicable” impression of seeing the weapon.³

65.235 We have already expressed¹ the view that Lance Corporal INQ 1799 had no clear recollection of events. We consider it unlikely that he saw a gunman. No other member of C Company gave evidence of seeing a civilian with a handgun at this location and at this time.

Conclusions on the evidence of C Company soldiers of seeing civilian gunmen

65.236 For the reasons given above,¹ we are of the view that soldiers of C Company are unlikely to have seen civilian gunmen on Bloody Sunday.

We now turn to consider the circumstances in which members of 8 Platoon of that company arrested people who, as we have also explained earlier,² had taken refuge in 33 Chamberlain Street. We should note that in this report, unless otherwise indicated, we use the words “arrest”, “arrested”, “arrestees” and “prisoners” in a non-technical sense as meaning simply that the people in question were detained by soldiers and were not free to leave. It should not be understood that the use of such terms carries the inference that the formalities of a lawful arrest had necessarily been observed.

The scene in 33 Chamberlain Street as the soldiers arrived

66.2 We set out below a photograph on which we have marked 33 Chamberlain Street. The house was at the southernmost end of Chamberlain Street, on the east side.

66.3 Bridget Nelis was the occupier of 33 Chamberlain Street. She was in the house when soldiers from C Company arrived there, as were her two daughters, Anna and Margaret, who lived with their mother, and her son George. A number of civilians who had sought shelter in the house and its back yard were also present. In addition, and as we have described elsewhere in this report,¹ Margaret Deery and Michael Bridge, who had been shot and injured in the Rossville Flats car park, had been carried there. The following photographs, taken by Fulvio Grimaldi, show Michael Bridge in the back yard of 33 Chamberlain Street and Margaret Deery² in the house.

They were: an individual whose name has been redacted, Robert Brady, Noel Breslin, Matthew Campbell, William Leo Carlin, William Duddy, James Ferguson, Joseph Hutchman, Kevin Leonard, Charles McCarron, William McCloskey, Maurice McColgan, James McDermott, Henry McGurk, Thomas Meehan,

John Morrison, George Nelis, George O'Neill and Otto Schlindwein. Of these, Otto Schlindwein, James McDermott, William McCloskey and Charles McCarron were charged with offences; Noel Breslin, Henry McGurk, George Nelis, Joseph Hutchman, Maurice McColgan, Robert Brady, William Duddy, the individual whose name has been redacted and James Ferguson were released pending further inquiry; and no further action was taken against Matthew Campbell, William Leo Carlin, Kevin Leonard, Thomas Meehan, John Morrison and George O'Neill. In those cases where individuals were charged, proceedings were subsequently dismissed, the prosecution having offered no evidence.¹

The arrival of the soldiers at 33 Chamberlain Street and the arrests

66.7 The manner in which members of 8 Platoon deployed south along Chamberlain Street, and their accounts as to what they saw and heard at that time, are described in the previous chapter of this report.¹ In the following paragraphs, we consider the evidence of those soldiers who arrived at, and in some cases entered, 33 Chamberlain Street.

66.8 The Platoon Commander, Second Lieutenant 026, told this Inquiry that having reached the southern end of Chamberlain Street, he attempted to take cover in the doorway of a house. He stated that he “nudged” open the door and ordered a non-commissioned officer (NCO) “to check the occupants”.¹ Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he was “generally aware” that “people, rioters as we thought they were, who had moved down Chamberlain Street, had disappeared in the general area of that house”.²

² Day 315/141

66.9 Having been informed that there were “no fewer” than 30 people inside the house, Second Lieutenant 026, according to his evidence to this Inquiry, radioed his Company Commander, Major 221A, and was ordered to detain the people and take them “back up”

Chamberlain Street".¹ Second Lieutenant 026 said that he did not enter the house himself.² He could not recall whether he told Major 221A that he suspected the people in the house of being involved in a riotous situation.³

³ Day 315/143

² Day 315/142

66.10 Major 221A's evidence to this Inquiry was to the effect that he did not know that arrests were made inside a house in Chamberlain Street,¹ and that his recollection was that his company made their arrests in Harvey Street/High Street.² Major 221A's recollection in this regard is clearly wrong. Whether Second Lieutenant 026 is correct in his recollection that he contacted Major 221A, and that Major 221A ordered the arrest of those inside 33 Chamberlain Street, remains in doubt.

² Day 294/171

66.11 Second Lieutenant 026 told us that he could not remember the name of the NCO whom he thought he ordered to check the occupants of the house.¹ It is unlikely that this was Sergeant INQ 2000, because this NCO's 1972 evidence (considered below²) as to how those in the house came to be detected differs from the account given by Second Lieutenant 026 to this Inquiry. It is possible that it was Corporal INQ 579, whose evidence we also consider below,³ but he said nothing about receiving an order from Second Lieutenant 026 to enter the house. It is notable that Second Lieutenant 026 did not refer to ordering men into 33 Chamberlain Street in his Royal Military Police (RMP) statement,⁴ and in view of the accounts given by Sergeant INQ 2000 and Corporal INQ 579, it is possible that Second Lieutenant 026 was mistaken in his recollection to this Inquiry that he was responsible for sending soldiers into the house. In the end we remain in doubt whether Second Lieutenant 026 did order soldiers into 33 Chamberlain Street.

³ Paragraph 66.25

² Paragraph 66.12

⁴ B1541

66.12 In an RMP statement dated 19th May 1972,¹ Sergeant INQ 2000 made no mention of being ordered by Second Lieutenant 026 to check the house. Instead, he said that his patrol was approached by a woman who had come from 33 Chamberlain Street, and who asked for an ambulance to be called for a wounded person in the house. Sergeant INQ 2000 stated that he detailed Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 to enter the house and ascertain the extent of the casualty's injuries while he used the radio in his Armoured Personnel Carrier to call for an ambulance. Sergeant INQ 2000 continued:

“A few minutes later, Cpl 007 and Pte INQ 12 came out of the house and informed me that it was full of people. These people were the ones we had chased up CHAMBERLAIN ST after having seen them throwing stones at the Security Forces in WILLIAM ST/CHAMBERLAIN ST. I then went into the house with Cpl 007 and Pte INQ 12 and recognised these people as the ones who we had seen running down CHAMBERLAIN ST.”

66.13 In this statement,¹ Sergeant INQ 2000 described how the people taken from 33 Chamberlain Street were searched outside the house and then taken to Fort George, where they were searched again:

“I then positively identified [name redacted], CHARLES McCORRAN [sic] and WILLIAM MACCLOSKEY [sic] a people I had seen throwing stones at the Security Forces in WILLIAM ST and CHAMBERLAIN ST. I also identified JAMES PATRICK FERGUSON as being present in 33 CHAMBERLAIN ST, however, I had not seen FERGUSON throwing stones and he was only taken to FORT GEORGE for screening.”

66.14 Sergeant INQ 2000 signed statements at Fort George, in which he recorded that the first three of these people (ie name redacted, Charles McCarron and William McCloskey) had thrown stones at the military.¹ This Inquiry also has the Arrest Report Forms for these men, each of which lists the relevant offence as “RIOTOUS BEHAVIOUR”, and records either that “The prisoner was seen throwing stones and taking part in a riot in Chamberlain St”,² or that he was “seen throwing stones in Chamberlain St”.³ In the case of James Ferguson, his Arrest Report Form does not contain an entry next to the heading “Offence”, and neither this document, nor the statement signed by Sergeant INQ 2000 at Fort George, records any details or evidence of riotous or other criminal activity on his part.⁴

² C2000.6; C2000.15

⁴ C2000.12-13

66.15 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant INQ 2000 told us that he had “absolutely no recollection” of the events of the day. He did not give oral evidence.

66.16 Corporal 007 gave a statement to the RMP dated 19th May 1972,¹ that is similar to the account given by Sergeant INQ 2000 in his RMP interview of the same day. In his statement, Corporal 007 recorded that on entering the house he saw a woman with a gunshot wound in her thigh lying on a settee, and around 30 other people, some of whom he recognised as “being in the crowd which we had chased out of WILLIAM ST into CHAMBERLAIN ST”. Corporal 007 told this Inquiry that he could no longer recall seeing any injured people in the house.²

² B1384.003-B1384.004; Day 310/34

66.17 Corporal 007 was recorded in the Arrest Report Forms as having arrested James McDermott and Otto Schlindwein for “throwing stones and taking part in a riot in Chamberlain St”, and William Duddy for “throwing stones at the Security Forces”. He signed statements at Fort George in which he stated that these people had thrown stones at the military. However, in his RMP statement of 19th May 1972, he recorded that while he *“positively identified [the three men] as being members of the crowd which were throwing stones at the Security Forces in WILLIAM ST ... I did not see any of these three people actually throw any stones.”*¹

66.18 In relation to the arrests, Corporal 007 told this Inquiry¹ that all of the men in the house were detained, and that identifications were then made by the soldiers of those individuals that they had seen in William Street and Chamberlain Street as they deployed. He described his evidence in this regard as being “to the best of my recollection”, but subsequently stated that he “assume[d]” or “would imagine” that this was what had happened. He also said that when he initially identified the three men he arrested as having been involved in stone throwing or rioting, he “must have believed it to be true, or I would not have said it”.²

² Day 310/73-77

66.19 Private INQ 12 made three statements in 1972 and gave two written statements and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In a statement taken by a Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) officer on 10th March 1972,¹ Private INQ 12 described entering the house after being told by a woman that there were two injured people inside. He said that he saw the two casualties and arrested George Nelis, whom he recognised as being “in the hostile crowd in William Street”. Although it is not entirely clear, this statement appears to us to record that Private INQ 12 recognised George Nelis as one of those throwing stones at Barrier 14; and that on going through the barrier, he had seen this individual run up Chamberlain Street and into the house.

66.20 In his RMP statement dated 19th May 1972, Private INQ 12 gave an account similar to those of Corporal 007 and Sergeant INQ 2000 as to how they came to enter the house and make arrests. However, in contrast to what we believe he had told the RUC, Private INQ 12 recorded nothing about seeing a man run along Chamberlain Street and into a house. Instead he stated that “a group of rioters ran out of WILLIAM ST. into CHAMBERLAIN ST. we gave chase, but on our arrival in CHAMBERLAIN ST they had disappeared.”¹ As we have discussed in the previous chapter,² we consider this to be a more reliable account of what actually happened in Chamberlain Street. Private INQ 12 also said in this statement that he “positively identified” six people from 33 Chamberlain Street, including George Nelis, “as persons I had seen throwing stones at the Security Forces in WILLIAM ST”.³

² Paragraph 65.89

66.21 In a further statement dated 17th November 1972,¹ Private INQ 12 stated that he was “personally responsible” for the arrest of five men, one of whom was George Nelis. In this statement, Private INQ 12 said that although he could not say “positively” that George Nelis had been throwing stones, he could say that he (George Nelis) had been “one of the crowd all of whom were shouting abuse and encouraging the stone throwers”. In this statement he denied allegations of abuse made against him by George Nelis, which we discuss further below.^{2,3}

³ In his statement dated 17th November 1972, Private INQ 12 recorded that 22 people were arrested in the house. We do not know the reason for this figure, as opposed to the 19 that we believe were arrested.

66.22 In fact, Private INQ 12 was listed as the arresting soldier on the Arrest Report Forms of six people on Bloody Sunday. Of these, only one, Noel Breslin, was recorded in the arrest documentation as having been seen throwing stones. In the cases of the other five men, including that of George Nelis, the offence of “riotous behaviour” was recorded on each of their Arrest Report Forms, but neither these forms nor the statements signed by Private INQ 12 at Fort George contain any details or evidence as to how the alleged offence was committed.

66.23 In his first written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 12 told us that he “vaguely” recalled a woman approaching his patrol and requesting assistance for an injured person in her house. He said that he and a Platoon Corporal, whom he later identified as Corporal 007,² were detailed by the Platoon Sergeant to enter the house and ascertain the extent of the casualty’s injuries.³ Private INQ 12 went into the hallway and noticed about 20 to 30 people in the house. He stated that he recognised some of those present as people who had “been involved in the civil rights demonstration and rioting”. The people were brought out of the house and searched while standing against a wall.

² Day 351/24-25

66.24 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 12 said that before entering the house he did not know that it contained people who had been rioting. His evidence was that all of the people in the house were taken outside, even though he was not in a position to say that each of them had been involved in the riot. In relation to those that he identified at Fort George, he said that he recognised them as having been at the riot, but he was not sure whether they had been stone-throwers or just people who were present.² He gave the following evidence in response to being asked to explain why he had not recorded, in the arrest forms that he signed at Fort George, seeing these individuals engaging in rioting:³

“A. ... because they were not arrested as such, they were arrested to be screened.

Q. What does that mean?

A. It means they go back and the details are taken and they are checked off to be screened.

Q. What is the point in screening somebody if no soldier is coming forward to say that he had been doing anything illegal?

A. I am sorry, sir, they were doing illegal – they were illegal in the first place because they were at the riot.

Q. Why did you not say that in the statement?

A. Because I was never asked that, sir.

...

Q. What did you understand the purpose of these statements to be?

A. As we said, we took them there to be screened and this is a statement, I suppose, so they could hold them for a time to screen them.

Q. Is the true position that you did not identify any of these people as rioters in your statements because you knew that the first time you had clapped eyes on any of them was when you went into the house on Chamberlain Street?

A. No, sir.”

² Day 351/41-42

66.25 Two other soldiers, Private INQ 1073¹ and Corporal INQ 579², gave accounts of having entered 33 Chamberlain Street, but playing no role in the arrests. The account given by Corporal INQ 579 would place him in the house before Sergeant INQ 2000, Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12.³ Corporal INQ 579, who described a more tranquil scene in the house and back yard than his three colleagues, was “Absolutely” clear that no-one was arrested in the house while he was there and said he was “Gobsmacked” that more than a dozen people were arrested there.⁴ He told us that he had satisfied himself that the occupants “were just bystanders, onlookers”.⁵ The sequence implied by Corporal INQ 579’s evidence, that he and another soldier entered and left the house before those members of his platoon who made the arrests, is similar to the account given by Margaret Nelis in her Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) and RUC statements.⁶

66.26 Sergeant INQ 2000, Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 were the only soldiers who are recorded as responsible for the arrests of the people in 33 Chamberlain Street.

66.27 Those detained were made to stand against the outside wall of 33 Chamberlain Street, where they were searched. So far as Private INQ 1073 and Corporal INQ 579 are concerned, they appear to have played no part in arresting people, and in our view they were probably the first soldiers to go into 33 Chamberlain Street.

Allegations of physical and verbal abuse as the arrests were made

66.28 On 4th February 1972, George Nelis complained to Sergeant Boyle of the RUC that after being arrested in 33 Chamberlain Street, and while he was being held awaiting transportation to Fort George, a soldier had threatened to shoot him.¹ Chief Superintendent Frank Lagan approved a recommendation that the complaint be investigated further.² On 10th March 1972, Sergeant Dorsett of the RUC submitted two reports of his investigation into the complaint, in which he summarised interviews that he had conducted with George Nelis, Bridget Nelis, Anna Nelis, Margaret Nelis, Joseph McGurk, Thomas Meehan, James Ferguson, William Leo Carlin, Joseph Hutchman, Kevin Leonard, Charles McCarron, Matthew Campbell, James McDermott and George O'Neill.³ On 18th December 1972, Sergeant Cooke of the RUC reported the results of interviews with 12 soldiers, only three of whom were members of C Company, namely Sergeant INQ 2000, Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12.⁴

66.29 Although George Nelis's complaint was about his treatment while on the waste ground awaiting transport to Fort George, the RUC investigation was not restricted to events there. Some of the civilians interviewed alleged that verbal and/or physical abuse occurred in 33 Chamberlain Street, as well as while they were being escorted to the waste ground, while they were being transported to Fort George, and at Fort George itself.

66.30 With respect to verbal abuse by the soldiers in 33 Chamberlain Street, George Nelis told us that he heard the two soldiers who ordered people from the house making remarks about the two wounded people such as "let them bleed to death" and "they deserve it".¹ Anna Nelis told us in her written evidence to this Inquiry that one soldier "seemed very hyped up" and used obscene language, saying of Margaret Deery "Let the whore bleed to death" and, having learned of the wounded Michael Bridge in the back yard, "Let them all die".² Margaret Nelis stated to us that two soldiers were "unpleasant", but she could not recall what they said.³ However, in statements to NICRA and Sergeant Dorsett made in February 1972 she said that one soldier asked the injured man (Michael Bridge) "Are you not dead yet mate".⁴ Bridget Nelis, who died in 1980, recorded in a statement taken by Sergeant Dorsett on 18th February 1972 that a "small, squat Scot soldier ... used the most obscene and abusive language and seemed to be enjoying himself".⁵

'Let the whore bleed to death.'*"¹

66.32 Not only Nelis family members made allegations of verbal abuse in the house. Matthew Campbell told Sergeant Dorsett on 7th March 1972 that he heard a soldier say "Let the bastards or whores bleed to death", and that a "wee, stout Scot soldier [...] used the most obscene language to everybody".¹ Thomas Meehan also mentioned a soldier using the phrase "Let the bastard bleed to death" both in his statement to Sergeant Dorsett on 26th February 1972 and in his NICRA statement.² Joseph Hutchman told Sergeant Dorsett on 1st March 1972 that "a Sergeant, with a Liverpool accent" said "Let the bastards bleed to death", and that a "private [...], a short fat man with dirty teeth and a scotch accent" referred to those in the house as "F_____ Irish bastards".³ In his evidence to this Inquiry, Joseph Hutchman said that he could no longer recall the former comment, but he did remember the Private with a Scottish accent "giving a lot a old lip to [a] woman".⁴

66.33 Charles McMonagle said in his Keville interview that "the women in the house started to argue with the soldiers and they were verbally abused and rather obscene language".¹ Before us, he agreed that any abuse was verbal, and that both civilians and soldiers had used abusive language.² James Ferguson³ told Sergeant Dorsett on 26th February 1972 that, while he was not badly treated, he heard "a soldier using obscene and abusive language to some women"; it is unclear from the statement whether this occurred inside or outside the house.⁴ In his statement to Sergeant Dorsett on 7th March 1972, James

McDermott said that a “small Scot soldier went into the parlour and started using dirty language about all and every F_____n pig of an Irishman was under arrest”.⁵ However, he did not mention the abusive language in his NICRA account.⁶

66.34 Some of those present in 33 Chamberlain Street also made allegations of rough treatment by the soldiers. In his statement to Sergeant Dorsett, Matthew Campbell said that “A young soldier hit me twice on my [shoulder] with his rifle butt, (actually it was more of a hard push)”.¹ James McDermott told Sergeant Dorsett that a “small Scot soldier” hit him several times about his shoulder with a baton.² Kevin Leonard said in his statements to both NICRA and the RUC that he was kicked by a soldier as he was being searched outside Chamberlain Street.³ In his account to Sergeant Dorsett, Thomas Meehan stated that he was shoved with a butt of a rifle as he tried to assist the ambulance men who had come for the wounded. He also stated that while he and others were standing against a wall, “We received the odd poke with a baton and kicks on the inside of our legs no matter how far we had them apart”.⁴ It is not clear whether the wall to which Thomas Meehan referred was in Chamberlain Street, or whether he was suggesting that this alleged incident took place while the prisoners were awaiting transportation to Fort George. It is also relevant to note that neither Thomas Meehan nor James McDermott mentioned the allegations of rough treatment in their NICRA statements.⁵

66.36 In his first written statement to this Inquiry, Private INQ 12 said that the soldiers and the civilians both used “choice language” and he accepted that he swore while taking the prisoners out of the house.¹ However, he denied that his language was “directed at, or personal to, any particular individual”, and he specifically denied seeing any wounded people in the house, or making the remarks that had been attributed to him by those civilians interviewed in the course of the RUC investigation.² He also stated that he “did not physically or verbally abuse anyone, at the house, in the lorry or at Fort George”.³ Before us, Private INQ 12 stated that he had not remembered anything about going into 33 Chamberlain Street until he saw his 1972 statements.⁴ Counsel to the Inquiry put to him a large number of allegations of physical and verbal abuse contained in the evidence of those present at 33 Chamberlain Street. Private INQ 12 admitted that he had used a certain amount of bad language in the house but otherwise denied the allegations.⁵

66.37 The evidence of Private INQ 12 to this Inquiry has to be considered in the light of his inaccurate claims that there were “thousands” of people rioting at Barrier 14 and that petrol bombs were thrown during the Barrier 14 riot, causing the feet of one soldier to be set alight.¹ It may be that Private INQ 12 was mistaking Bloody Sunday for another day. In his first written statement to this Inquiry, he told us that he accompanied the arrestees to Fort George and went back later in the evening to be photographed with the persons he identified as rioters.² As will be seen in the part of this report dealing with allegations of abuse at Fort George,³ Private INQ 12 is mistaken about this, as the Chamberlain Street prisoners were taken to Fort George in the third and final trip there and were immediately processed. This was unlike the previous two groups, who had to await the return of the identifying Support Company soldiers. For these reasons, we view the evidence that Private INQ 12 gave to us with some caution.

66.38 Corporal 007 recorded in his 1972 RMP statement that “a great deal of obscene and abusive language was being directed at the Security Forces” by those who had been arrested in 33 Chamberlain Street. Corporal 007 stated: “I did not reply to these people nor did I hear anyone else.”¹ Before us, he said that he did not either hear or make remarks such as “Let her bleed to death” about Margaret Deery.² In his written statement to this Inquiry, he had recorded that the only force that was used when removing the men from 33 Chamberlain Street was “to put our hands on their shoulders to move them along”.³

66.39 As is noted above,¹ Sergeant INQ 2000 told us that he had no memory of the day, and his RMP statement makes no mention of any incidents of verbal or physical abuse in the house. However, he did record, in similar terms to Private INQ 12 and Corporal 007, that he got into an exchange of swearing with some of those who had been arrested, seemingly as they were being moved to the vehicles that took them to Fort George.² He also stated: *“During the time that these people were in my custody, I did not assault any of them nor did I see any other members of the Security Forces assault them.”*³

² C2000.3

66.41 The arrest photographs show that Private INQ 12, at 5 feet 6 inches, was the shortest of the three arresting soldiers. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private INQ 12 confirmed that this was his height and that he was of stocky build and a Scotsman.¹ A soldier fitting this description was singled out by some of the occupants of the house as the most abusive and aggressive of the arresting soldiers. In our view this was Private INQ 12, who, despite his denials, we consider was, without justification, both verbally and physically abusive towards occupants of 33 Chamberlain Street, though we remain in doubt as to whether he was the soldier, or one of the soldiers, who singled out Margaret Deery or Michael Bridge for abuse.

The justification for the arrests

66.42 The arrest documents indicate that Corporal 007, Private INQ 12 and Sergeant INQ 2000 were the arresting soldiers for all of those arrested at 33 Chamberlain Street.

66.43 As we have already noted,¹ although Corporal 007 had made statements at Fort George to the effect that he had seen those he arrested throwing stones at the security forces, he later admitted that this was not the case. We do not accept that at the time he made the former statements he “must have believed it to be true, or I would not have said it”.² In our view Corporal 007 knew throughout that he had not seen any of those he arrested throwing stones, and knowingly made false statements at Fort George. In view of this, we find it impossible to accept his assertion that he had identified any of those he arrested as being part of a rioting crowd in William Street.

² Day 310/74

66.44 As to Private INQ 12, as we have also already noted,¹ our reading of his account to the RUC of seeing the man he had identified as throwing stones running down Chamberlain Street and going into number 33 means that this account is inconsistent with the account that he gave to the RMP and his evidence to this Inquiry that he did not realise, before entering the house, that it contained people who had been rioting. He later admitted that he could not say positively that George Nelis was throwing stones, though he maintained that George Nelis was one of the crowd, all of whom were shouting abuse and encouraging the stone-throwers. In view of these matters, we take the view that Private INQ 12 knowingly made a false statement to the RUC that he had positively identified George Nelis as a stone-thrower. In these circumstances, as with Corporal 007, we find it difficult to accept Private INQ 12’s assertion that he had identified any of those he arrested as being part of a rioting crowd in William Street or that he had identified five others, in addition to George Nelis, as persons he had seen throwing stones at the security forces in William Street.

66.45 As to Sergeant INQ 2000, in his RMP statement¹ he recorded that Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12 informed him that the house was full of people: “These people were the ones we had chased up CHAMBERLAIN ST after having seen them throwing stones at the Security Forces in WILLIAM ST/CHAMBERLAIN ST. I then went into the house with Cpl 007 and Pte INQ 12 and recognised these people as the ones who we had seen running down CHAMBERLAIN ST.” The first part of this quotation would appear to be what, according to Sergeant INQ 2000, he was told by Corporal 007 and Private INQ 12, since he had yet to go into the house and at that stage did not himself know who was inside. The second part of the quotation merely recorded that Sergeant INQ 2000 recognised the people as those whom he had seen running down Chamberlain Street. In our view there is little in his RMP statement to suggest that, out of the people taken from 33 Chamberlain Street, Sergeant INQ 2000 had actually himself identified the three he claimed he had seen throwing stones before he got to Fort George.

66.46 Furthermore, as we have described earlier in this report,¹ the moment C Company soldiers were seen approaching Barrier 14 the situation rapidly changed, with the rioters fleeing from the immediate area of the barrier. At the time the C Company soldiers actually started going through the barrier, the street immediately in front of them, from where the rioters had been throwing stones, was clear or virtually clear.² Sergeant INQ 2000 was the Platoon Sergeant of 8 Platoon, the last of the three platoons of C Company to go through the barrier. Thus, although 8 Platoon soldiers could have seen rioting after they had arrived in the vicinity of Barrier 14 from Waterloo Place and before C Company soldiers started to move to cross Barrier 14, they would have been behind the soldiers manning the barrier. In such circumstances we are left in doubt as to whether Sergeant INQ 2000 had been able to see sufficient of the rioting to be able, either at 33 Chamberlain Street, or later at Fort George, to allow him to make a positive identification of people who had been throwing stones. Since Sergeant INQ 2000 told us that he had “absolutely no recollection” of the events of the day,³ we took the view that little purpose would be served by calling him to give oral evidence to this Inquiry. We are unable to determine whether or not Sergeant INQ 2000’s identifications were made in good faith.

The allegation that Private INQ 12 threatened to shoot George Nelis

66.47 Once those arrested at the house had been searched, they were made to walk north along Chamberlain Street to a waste ground at the corner of William Street. There they were held while awaiting transportation to Fort George.¹ Some of those being held are shown in the following photograph, taken by Gilles Peress.

¹ C2000.3; B1384.004; AN9.21; AN9.4; AH91.7; AH91.4; Day 102/181-182; AM120.4; AC40.3; AC40.8

66.48 George Nelis has said throughout his evidence that it was while he was being held at the waste ground that a soldier threatened to shoot him. In a report dated 10th February 1972, Sergeant Boyle recorded that on 4th February 1972 George Nelis had told him that:¹

“When they reached the waste ground, they were forced to sit on the ground, facing a wall. One of the soldiers [...] (he is not sure of rank) about 5' 3" tall, Scotch, wearing a maroon coloured ‘flash’ on the upper arm of his battle dress, threatened to shoot him that night. [The soldier] also boasted of having shot four people in Belfast, relating in which part of the anatomy he had placed his shots.

Nelis alleges that he would know [the soldier] again, as both had their photographs taken together at Fort George, where he had been detained for the remainder of that day.

Apart from this, Nelis stated that he was treated quite well by the security forces.”

66.49 George Nelis’s arrest photograph shows him with Private INQ 12, whose name was written on the board above his head.¹

66.50 On the day before he spoke to Sergeant Boyle, George Nelis had given a similar account to NICRA, in which he said that the soldier who made the threat had also told him that he had been “critically injured in Belfast”.¹ George Nelis also gave consistent accounts to Sergeant Dorsett on 17th February 1972,² and to this Inquiry.³ However, in his oral evidence, George Nelis said that he no longer had any recollection as to whether the soldier who threatened him at the top of Chamberlain Street was the same one with whom he was photographed at Fort George, although he thought that it probably was.⁴

³ AN9.4; Day 103/95-96

⁴ Day 103/101-103; Day 103/136-138

66.51 George Nelis’s brother-in-law, George O’Neill, was also arrested at 33 Chamberlain Street and taken to the waste ground. In his statement to Sergeant Dorsett he said: “a small scot soldier [...] said to my brother-in-law, George Nelis, that he’d shot so many people in Belfast and that he’d shoot George, or words to that effect. I couldn’t look too much or they’d have carried the head off me.”¹ In his evidence to this Inquiry, George O’Neill said that he no longer recalled this incident.²

² Day 113/15

66.52 As we have set out above, Private INQ 12 told the RUC and the RMP that he was responsible for arresting George Nelis. In his third statement, made on 17th November 1972, Private INQ 12 addressed the allegations made against him.¹

“... at no time did I say to Mr Nelis that I had shot four (4) people in Belfast, or indicate that I was going to shoot him. I have been in N. Ireland for a total of 25 months and although I have been shot in the leg myself, I have never shot any person.

At no time did I threaten abuse or in any way ill-treat the prisoners nor did I witness any other person doing same.”

66.53 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Private INQ 12 categorically denied saying that he had shot four people in Belfast, and stated that he had never shot anybody.¹ He specifically denied threatening George Nelis in the way that George Nelis had described.² However, he did accept that he had been wounded in Belfast, and he was unable to explain how George Nelis would have known this unless he had heard Private INQ 12 say it.³

³ Day 351/48

² Day 351/47

66.54 We are of the view, on considering the evidence, that Private INQ 12 probably did make the impugned remarks.

Other allegations of abuse at the waste ground in William Street

66.55 A number of other people who were arrested at 33 Chamberlain Street alleged that threatening language was used by soldiers as they held the prisoners at the waste ground in William Street. William Duddy told us that: “The soldier in charge said: ‘Shoot the fuckers’. I heard a rifle click and said my prayers, but nothing actually happened.”¹ Joseph Hutchman told us, but not Sergeant Dorsett, that while waiting to be taken to Fort George soldiers were saying things like “‘We’ll get you this time you bastards’”.² Thomas Meehan told Sergeant Dorsett that “A wee stout soldier was very aggressive, he threatened several people with what he would do to them down in the dockyard [Fort George], he used very obscene and abusive language”.³ Charles McCarron said in his RUC statement that “some soldier was doing a lot of shouting but I didn’t look up to see who it was”.⁴

⁴ AM80.3

66.56 We consider that it is likely that abusive remarks were made at this time, although we cannot say by whom.

66.57 Other prisoners allege that the soldiers used unnecessary physical force. William McCloskey stated in his evidence to this Inquiry that, while he was being escorted up Chamberlain Street, he was struck on the head with a rifle butt after refusing to place his hands on his head.¹ Maurice McColgan told us that the prisoners were lined up against a wall and had their legs kicked apart before being searched.² Kevin Leonard gave similar evidence to this Inquiry,³ but his statement to Sergeant Dorsett suggests that this alleged incident occurred while he was still in Chamberlain Street.⁴ As is discussed above,⁵ Thomas Meehan also gave evidence to the RUC of being kicked while he was searched either in Chamberlain Street or possibly at the waste ground.⁶

² AS2.3

66.59 We are of the view that William McCloskey and Otto Schlindwein were probably assaulted as they described. Otherwise, we are left in doubt as to whether the other arrestees were subjected to unreasonable physical coercion while being taken to the end of Chamberlain Street, or while waiting there.

66.60 The allegations made by Chamberlain Street arrestees of abuse during their transport to Fort George and while they were there are considered later in this report.¹

Chapter 67: Introduction

- 67.1 Sector 3 is concerned with what happened in the area of Rossville Street, to the immediate west of the area covered by Sector 2. The area covered by Sector 3 is highlighted on the map below.

67.2 There is no doubt that in Sector 3 Michael Kelly, Hugh Gilmour,¹ John Young, Michael McDaid, William Nash and Kevin McElhinney were killed by Army gunfire. Alexander Nash, the father of William Nash, was wounded by gunfire having probably previously been hit by a baton round, though whether his gunshot wound was the result of Army or civilian gunfire was a matter of dispute. All these casualties occurred in the area of the rubble barricade on Rossville Street, which we describe in detail below. It was submitted by the soldiers' representatives that there was at least one additional casualty of Army gunfire in this area, who was engaged in paramilitary activity when he was shot, but whose existence has for this reason been kept secret.² We consider this submission later in this report.³

¹ In many documents the surname of this casualty is given as "Gilmore" but we understand that "Gilmour" is correct.

67.3 It must be kept in mind that, to a significant degree, there is a chronological overlap between the events of Sector 2 and those of Sector 3.

68.1 The most important feature in Sector 3 was the rubble barricade on Rossville Street, the position of which is marked on the map shown above,¹ since it was at that barricade or in its immediate vicinity that the casualties of Sector 3 were shot. We describe this barricade later in this chapter.²

Rossville Street

68.2 As can be seen from the map reproduced below, Rossville Street ran from the junction of William Street and Little James Street in a south-westerly direction towards Free Derry Corner. For most of its length there was a relatively wide area of footpath or open ground on either side of the road. The distance between the junction of William Street and Little James Street and Free Derry Corner was approximately 370 yards. The distance from that junction to the north-eastern corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, which ran along the eastern side of Rossville Street, was approximately 140 yards. From Barrier 12 in Little James Street to the same corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats was approximately 240 yards.

- 68.3 The junction of Rossville Street, William Street and Little James Street, which was sometimes referred to, usually by the Army, as Aggro Corner, is shown near the centre of the following aerial photograph.

- 68.4 Rossville Street is the street leading from that junction towards the top of the photograph, in the direction of Free Derry Corner, which is out of view. This photograph, although approximately contemporaneous with Bloody Sunday, was taken on another occasion and does not show the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association march on that day.

The south-eastern side of Rossville Street

- 68.5 As can be seen from the aerial photograph shown above, the route from the junction with William Street down the south-eastern side of Rossville Street passed initially along the side of Con Bradley's public house, which fronted onto William Street, and adjacent buildings. These buildings extended from William Street for about 25 yards along Rossville Street, before the area opened up into the Eden Place waste ground, at the point at which a soldier is shown kneeling in a photograph (shown below) taken on Bloody Sunday by Colman Doyle of the Irish Press.

68.6 For approximately 100 yards beyond that point, the left side of Rossville Street passed along the north-western edge of the Eden Place waste ground, upon which the buildings of Eden Place and Pilot Row had formerly stood. Nothing remained of those buildings in January 1972, but the position previously occupied by the two streets was still discernible. They ran approximately parallel to one another from Rossville Street to the backs of the houses of Chamberlain Street on the opposite side of the waste ground. This area has been described in greater detail in our description of Sector 2.¹ At the south-western end of the waste ground, an access road led off Rossville Street to the car park of the Rossville Flats.

68.7 Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, which was situated beyond this access road, was a ten-storey residential building containing both flats and maisonettes. It was a little over 60 yards long and ran parallel to Rossville Street. We have provided a fuller description of the Rossville Flats in the part of the report concerned with Sector 2.¹

68.9 The main entrance to Block 1 was situated at the south-western end of the side overlooking Rossville Street. It consisted of a double door, outside which was a canopy supported by four posts. The entrance can be seen in a photograph (which we show below) taken by Eamon Melaugh, although not on Bloody Sunday, which also shows the telephone kiosk that was located around the corner from the main entrance, at the southern end of Block 1.

- 68.10 On the right side of the photograph above can be seen the lowest of three walkways that connected Block 1 to Block 2. In the foreground is visible one of six low hexagonal brick structures known to many witnesses as the Threepenny Bits. These can be seen more clearly in a photograph taken from Block 2 on Bloody Sunday by Derrik Tucker Senior.

- 68.11 Between the Threepenny Bits and Block 2 of the Rossville Flats there was access to a pedestrianised area leading off Rossville Street towards the City Walls. A line of trees occupied the centre of this area. The trees can be seen in the following photograph which also shows the south-western (front) side of Block 2 and Rossville Street in the background.

- 68.12 The distance from the main entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats to Free Derry Corner was approximately 175 yards. In this area Rossville Street became broader and the road divided into two carriageways, separated by two islands of empty ground. On the south-eastern side of the road, extending along most of this distance, lay the two three-storey residential blocks of Joseph Place. The first of these blocks, that is, the block closer to the Rossville Flats, was set back some 40 yards from the road at its north-eastern end but ran towards the road in a south-westerly direction. The second block of Joseph Place ran parallel to the road and closer to it. A second-floor walkway connected the two blocks. All these features can be seen in the following aerial photograph.

68.13 The next photograph shows the south-western end of Rossville Street, with the two blocks of Joseph Place on the left of the picture.

- 68.14 As the photograph shows, the carriageway that ran in front of Joseph Place ended at a T-junction. At this junction it met Fahan Street, on which were situated a small terrace of houses and, further to the west, the gable wall of Free Derry Corner painted with the inscription “YOU ARE NOW ENTERING FREE DERRY”. The other carriageway of Rossville Street ran past Free Derry Corner on the western side, beyond which point the street became Lecky Road. The following photograph shows Free Derry Corner. This photograph was not taken on Bloody Sunday.

The north-western side of Rossville Street

- 68.15 Closest to the junction with William Street on the north-western side of Rossville Street were the gable wall of a building on William Street and an adjacent lower wall. The next building to the south had a large garage door on the ground floor. The inside of the latter building was in a derelict state on Bloody Sunday. The following photograph, taken on Bloody Sunday, shows this part of Rossville Street.

- 68.16 The residential block known as Kells Walk was the next building on Rossville Street after the building with the garage door. Between Kells Walk and the latter building was an alley, occasionally also referred to as Kells Walk, which gave pedestrian access to a road that ran along the northern side of Columbcille Court, which was the larger complex of flats that lay behind Kells Walk, and led to Abbey Street. These features are illustrated in the following aerial photograph.

68.17 Kells Walk was a rectangular three-storey block, about 40 yards long, positioned alongside Rossville Street, opposite the Eden Place waste ground. At first floor level each maisonette had access to a small balcony overlooking Rossville Street. In front of the block, and beneath these balconies, lay a small garden area enclosed by a low, and in places dilapidated, brick wall. At the southern end of the block a ramp passed between two slightly higher brick walls, giving pedestrian access to a parking area on the eastern side of Columbcille Court. The more northerly of the walls that enclosed this ramp projected from the southern end wall of Kells Walk. At the northern end of Kells Walk was an external staircase leading to a walkway (sometimes referred to as a verandah), which ran the length of the western side of the building at first floor level. Most of these features (although not the first floor walkway) can be seen in the following aerial photograph.

68.19 A clearer view of the walls between which the ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk passed is given in two further photographs taken on Bloody Sunday, the first by Jeffrey Morris, from the north looking south, and the second by a freelance photographer, Liam Mailey, from the south looking north.

68.20

As the second of these photographs shows, the ramp described above passed beneath the upper flight of another ramp, sometimes referred to as a pram-ramp, which led down from the walkway, or verandah, at first floor level on the west side of Kells Walk. The upper flight of that ramp descended from north to south. The lower flight returned from south to north on the Columbcille Court side to complete the descent, and at ground level met the ramp that gave access from Rossville Street. The descent of the ramp from the first floor walkway of Kells Walk can be seen in a photograph taken by Larry Doherty of the Derry Journal from halfway up the ramp, looking towards Kells Walk.

- 68.21 The next feature to the south on this side of Rossville Street was a brick wall, about 4ft high, which started from the southern end of the ramp that led down from the first floor walkway of Kells Walk. This wall projected a short distance towards Columbcille Court before turning to the left and running south for about 15 yards, approximately parallel to Rossville Street. Most of this wall can be seen on the left side of another of Liam Mailey's photographs.

68.22 Beyond the southern end of this wall, an alley led off Rossville Street, passing between Columbcille Court to the north, and Glenfada Park North to the south. The entrance to the alley can be seen in a photograph taken on Bloody Sunday by Private 017.

68.23 As the photograph above shows, on the southern side of the alley, and lying parallel to it, was situated a ramp, again sometimes referred to as a pram-ramp, which rose in two flights, leading to a walkway. This walkway gave access at first-floor level to the Glenfada Park complex of buildings. To the south of the ramp, and overlooking Rossville Street opposite Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, lay the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. This three-storey block was similar in size and design to Kells Walk. As at Kells Walk, there were balconies on the eastern side of the block at first floor level, and beneath the balconies a low brick wall enclosed a garden area. The walkway reached from the ramp ran along the other side of the block, facing the interior of Glenfada Park North. The following aerial photograph shows these features.

68.24

Another photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris on Bloody Sunday provides a closer view of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North.

- 68.25 It was possible to reach the interior of Glenfada Park North either through a passage leading to the left from the foot of the ramp, or by an entry between the ramp and the northern wall of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. The second of these routes is illustrated in a photograph taken by Larry Doherty from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

- 68.26 A turning off Rossville Street at the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North provided access for vehicles to a parking area, sometimes described as a courtyard, inside Glenfada Park North. This entrance can be seen in the following photograph.

68.27 On the southern side of this entrance lay another ramp, beyond which was the south-eastern block of Glenfada Park South. The ramp started at the north-eastern end of that block, rose in a north-easterly direction parallel to Rossville Street, and returned to the south-west, leading to a walkway at first floor level that ran around the interior of Glenfada Park South. It was possible to enter Glenfada Park South at its eastern corner either from the base of the ramp, by passing under its upper flight, or from Glenfada Park North, by passing down the north-western side of the ramp and beneath the walkway. The south-eastern block of Glenfada Park South was similar in design to its counterpart in Glenfada Park North, although not so long. There were balconies overlooking Rossville Street at first floor level, and once again beneath the balconies there was a garden area enclosed by a low brick wall. The block faced south-east across Rossville Street towards the northern block of Joseph Place. At its south-western end was a staircase leading to another part of the walkway. The following aerial photograph shows these features.

68.28 The photograph above also shows the street that led off Rossville Street in a north-westerly direction immediately south-west of Glenfada Park South. This street was Fahan Street West, often called the Old Bog Road. Further south, buildings that formed part of Lisfannon Park occupied the area on the north-western side of Rossville Street between the Old Bog Road and Free Derry Corner. Those buildings, and many of the others we describe, can be seen in the following aerial photograph, which shows the whole of Rossville Street, viewed from south-west to north-east.

68.29 At the beginning of this Inquiry the buildings of Joseph Place, Kells Walk, Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park remained largely unaltered, although substantial modifications were made to Kells Walk and Glenfada Park during the course of the Inquiry. We were therefore able to walk around these buildings and see their layout. This was not possible in the case of the Rossville Flats, which were demolished in the 1980s. There are now new buildings where the Rossville Flats used to be and on what was formerly the Eden Place waste ground.

The rubble barricade

68.30 The rubble barricade ran across Rossville Street, from a point close to the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, to about the midpoint of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, approximately 30 yards from the north-western corner of the block and 25 yards from the doors at the south-western corner. To show where the barricade was in relation to the other features of Sector 3, we reproduce below an aerial photograph. This photograph was not taken on Bloody Sunday and it should be borne in mind that since the barricade was in existence for some time before and after Bloody Sunday, photographs taken on other dates may not show its exact configuration on the day. A barricade across Rossville Street had probably been in existence since August 1971, although it may have been cleared by the Army on one or more occasions and then rebuilt.

68.31

There was a gap near the middle of the barricade, on the western side of the road. A still from the Army helicopter footage filmed on Bloody Sunday, reproduced below, shows the eastern part of the barricade, the gap and some of the western part. Another photograph, taken by the Derry Journal photographer Larry Doherty and also reproduced below, shows the barricade as it appeared from the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, ie looking towards the north, but as this photograph was taken on 12th March 1972 it is possible that it does not show the barricade in the same state as it was in on Bloody Sunday.

68.32 It can be seen from the first of these photographs that there was an oil drum on top of the eastern part of the barricade. In front, that is to the north, of the drum there was a wooden trestle. Behind it there were further trestles, including one that barred the gap in the barricade, which could be moved to allow vehicles to pass. These trestles and other features of the barricade can be seen in three photographs (shown below) taken on Bloody Sunday by Ciaran Donnelly of the Irish Times.

68.33 Robert White took the following photograph on Bloody Sunday. It shows the eastern part of the barricade.

68.34 Other photographs of the rubble barricade taken on Bloody Sunday include two taken from the north by Colman Doyle, the Irish Press photographer. We show these photographs below.

68.35 The following photograph, taken on Bloody Sunday by the freelance photographer Fulvio Grimaldi, shows the barricade viewed from the south.

Chapter 69: The movement of the soldiers

Other evidence relating to the movements of Corporal P and Private 017	69.49

69.1 In our consideration of the events of Sector 2,¹ we described the movement of the first two vehicles to come into the Bogside, namely the two Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) of Mortar Platoon. With the exception of Corporal P and Private 017, who had travelled in the second APC commanded by Sergeant O, the other soldiers in those APCs deployed on the Eden Place waste ground and in the Rossville Flats car park and were involved in the events of Sector 2, though Private U and the baton gunner Private 112, who also disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street, were also involved in the events of Sector 3, in the course of which the former fired a shot.

69.2 These two APCs were followed into the Bogside by Major Loden's command vehicle, behind which was a Ferret scout car with a mounted Browning machine gun. In turn came two APCs of Machine Gun Platoon, which were empty but for the drivers and (possibly) vehicle guards, the other members of Machine Gun Platoon still being in the Abbey Taxis building, as described in our discussion of the events of Sector 1.¹ Two soft-skinned lorries containing Composite Platoon (Guinness Force) followed these APCs. At the rear were the two APCs of Anti-Tank Platoon.

69.3 The vehicles that followed the two APCs of Mortar Platoon all initially stopped in Rossville Street. The first of these (Major Loden's command vehicle) stopped some yards short of Pilot Row; the Ferret car stopped to its side and a little behind; and the other vehicles lined up in turn behind these two, as can be seen from an enlargement of a photograph taken by Ciaran Donnelly, which we have reproduced in full above,¹ and from a photograph taken by Liam Mailey, both of which are shown below.

69.4 Private 037 drove Major Loden in the command vehicle.¹ Warrant Officer Class II Lewis, the Company Sergeant Major (CSM), was also in this vehicle,² as were two radio operators, Lance Corporal 033³ and Lance Corporal INQ 627.⁴

69.5 Corporal INQ 993 drove the Ferret scout car.¹ Corporal INQ 1826 also travelled in this vehicle.² Private INQ 665 was another Ferret car driver. Although this soldier told us he was sure that he was not with C Company,³ we are of the view that he was mistaken about this, as he also told us that he drove through a barrier which most of the company crossed on foot; and that he then drove to the corner of Little James Street and William Street where he went “static”.⁴ Sergeant INQ 1822 initially thought that he was in a Ferret car attached to Support Company, perhaps with Corporal INQ 993, but later in his oral evidence said that he now thought that he was mistaken about this and that he had in fact accompanied Private INQ 665 and C Company.⁵

69.6 Behind these vehicles were the two APCs of Machine Gun Platoon. As noted, these were empty save for their drivers and (possibly) guards. Private 005 drove one of these vehicles¹ and it seems likely that Private INQ 439 drove the other.² Whether vehicle guards accompanied them is not clear. Private 005 recollected that he was on his own, but Private INQ 1544 (a member of Machine Gun Platoon) told us that he recalled guarding an APC close to the Rossville Flats.³

Composite Platoon

69.7 The next two vehicles, the two soft-skinned lorries, contained Composite Platoon (Guinness Force). As we have explained earlier in this report,¹ this platoon was a rifle platoon made up of soldiers who had other regular duties, such as administrative, band and catering tasks. Captain 200, the officer commanding Composite Platoon, described it as follows:²

“When the whole battalion is employed in an operation the Administrative Company provides an operational force in the form of a composite platoon usually known as guinness force. This operates under the command of the officer commanding Administrative Company and for the operations of 30 January was commanded by me. In those operations guinness force was used to strengthen Support Company.”

69.8 Another, and less formal, description of Guinness Force was contained in the January 1972 edition of Pegasus, the magazine of the Parachute Regiment:

“Guinness Force is the nickname given to Admin Company when it turns out as a Rifle Company. This stalwart body, consisting of Quartermaster’s staff, Orderly Room Clerks, Pay Clerks, Bandsmen, off duty Dog Handlers, spare Drummers and not infrequently volunteer drivers and signallers from Command Company, was first formed during the severe rioting in Bligh’s Lane, Londonderry, in July this year.”

69.9 On 29th January 1972 Captain 200 made a manuscript list¹ of the 36 members of his platoon who were to be in service the following day. The list was typed “prior to our movement”² with notations in manuscript added to the typescript following the engagement.³ The call sign for the first lorry, with Captain 200 in command, was 71, while that for the second lorry, commanded by Colour Sergeant 002, was 71A. Captain 200’s list makes the following division of the soldiers between the two call signs:

71	71A
Captain 200	Colour Sergeant 002
Warrant Officer Class II INQ 1710	Sergeant 014
Colour Sergeant INQ 147	Sergeant 035
Sergeant 106	Sergeant K
Sergeant INQ 1318	Corporal 039
Corporal INQ 468	Corporal INQ 25
Corporal INQ 739	Corporal INQ 812

Private 024	Private INQ 748
Private 203
Private INQ 24

¹ B2022.063

² Day 367/50

³ B2022.064

⁴ When the Inquiry approached Lance Corporal INQ 1175, he told us that he was not present on Bloody Sunday and was attending a course in England on that day. It is possible therefore that the soldier named in the unredacted version of Captain 200's list was another soldier with the same surname, who has not been traced. The surname is a common one, so this is a real possibility.

69.10 In the event, we are satisfied that the allocations for call sign 71A reflect what occurred on the day. The driver of this vehicle was Private INQ 405.¹ Colour Sergeant 002's radio operator was Private INQ 127.²

² B2022.064; Day 360/130

69.11 The allocations for call sign 71, however, have discrepancies. Corporal INQ 993 was driving the Ferret scout car on the day.¹ Bandsman INQ 1854² told us that he stayed in the area in front of the Presbyterian church off Great James Street and never went into the Bogside, though he may be mistaken about this, since he also told us that he had no recollection of his colleagues in Composite Platoon going in either. In addition, Private 203³ and Lance Corporal INQ 2047⁴ recalled, in our view mistakenly, that they, and in the case of Lance Corporal INQ 2047, all the soldiers of this call sign, went in on foot.

69.12 Six soldiers from Composite Platoon claimed to have fired (in total) 15 live rounds in Sector 3.

Anti-Tank Platoon

69.13 Anti-Tank Platoon were in the ninth and tenth (the last two) of the vehicles that entered the Bogside. Both these vehicles were APCs.

69.14 Lieutenant 119 commanded the first of these two vehicles.¹ His radio operator was Private 027² and his driver Private INQ 1581.³ Corporal E⁴ and Private H⁵ also travelled in this vehicle. For the reason given below,⁶ we think it likely that Private INQ 635 and Private INQ 1558 were also in this vehicle.

⁴ B106

² Day 364/2-5

⁵ B233

³ B1752.012

⁶ Paragraph 69.16

69.15 Sergeant INQ 1694 commanded the second of these APCs.¹ Private 147 was his radio operator and Lance Corporal 036 the driver.² Lance Corporal F,³ Lance Corporal J⁴ and Private G also travelled in this vehicle. In addition it is likely that Lance Corporal 018⁵ and Private Longstaff⁶ were in this vehicle. Private INQ 1237 told us that he was in the same vehicle as Lance Corporal F and Private 027 and possibly Private Longstaff.⁷ In our view he was mistaken about this, as Lance Corporal F and Private 027 travelled in different vehicles. However, Private INQ 1237 also told us that at the end of the operation he was in the same vehicle as Lance Corporal F and Lance Corporal J. In our view he too probably travelled in the second APC.

² B1886

⁶ Day 374/65

³ B145

⁷ C1237.4

⁴ B276-7

69.16 According to the nominal roll of Anti-Tank Platoon, 17 soldiers of this platoon were deployed on Bloody Sunday. In the case of two soldiers (Private INQ 635 and Private INQ 1558) it is not apparent from the evidence in which APC they travelled. Private INQ 635 told us he had no recollection,¹ while Private INQ 1558 gave no evidence of any kind. However, to put these in the second APC would mean a significant imbalance in the numbers in each APC, and so on the whole we consider that, as noted above,² they probably travelled in Lieutenant 119's APC.

² Paragraph 69.14

69.17 Private INQ 1940 told us that he did not travel in either of the APCs, but went in on foot after receiving an order from Warrant Officer Class II Lewis to act as an escort for persons under arrest.¹ We do not know whether or not he was correct in this recollection.

69.18 Five soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon claimed to have fired (in total) 14 live rounds in Sector 3.

Summary of the disposition of the soldiers in Sector 3

69.19 The tables below show the weapon carried by each soldier and, in some cases, his position of command or other specific role. The evidence on these issues is not wholly consistent; for example, Private G told the Royal Military Police (RMP) that two members of Anti-Tank Platoon carried baton guns and 16 carried self-loading rifles (SLRs),¹ but the other evidence indicates that there were only 17 members of Anti-Tank Platoon present on the day, of whom only one is known to have carried a baton gun. Confusion may have been caused by the fact that some soldiers initially carried baton guns and then exchanged these guns for SLRs. Captain 200's annotated list of members of Composite Platoon² indicates that at least three soldiers with baton guns had sub-machine guns, as did the signallers. According to Captain 200's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ five soldiers had baton guns. Major Loden, in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, said that three members of Composite Platoon who carried baton guns also carried sub-machine guns.⁴ The tables below show what weapons the soldiers were in our view probably carrying. For the sake of completeness, we include in these tables the soldiers of Mortar Platoon who were involved in the events of Sector 3.

Mortar Platoon soldiers in Sector 3

69.20 In the course of our consideration of the events of Sector 2,¹ we explained that Corporal P and Private 017 disembarked from Sergeant O's APC when it briefly stopped in Rossville Street, before it continued and turned into the car park of the Rossville Flats. Unlike the other soldiers who disembarked in Rossville Street from this APC, Corporal P and Private 017 (a baton gunner) crossed to the western side of Rossville Street. At this stage they were in front (ie to the south) of the other soldiers coming into Sector 3, and so it is convenient to start with their movements. We have referred to their accounts of hearing incoming fire in the context of Sector 2,² but for the sake of clarity we shall refer again to their evidence on this topic in discussing the events of Sector 3.

Corporal P

69.22 According to his first RMP statement timed at 2230 hours on 30th January 1972,¹ Corporal P had cocked his rifle no later than when he was in the APC. When he disembarked he “and two others” deployed to the right of the APC (ie to the west) and “immediately came under heavy stoning and bottling from the rioters”. His statement continued:

“About 20 of the rioters were advancing towards us and were throwing stones and other missiles at us continually. One of the two chaps with me and armed with a anti riot gun fired a number of rubber bullets in an attempt to disperse the 20 who were attacking us. They were about 50 metres away at this time. The rioters on being hit by these rubber bullets split up.”

69.23 According to this statement it was at this stage that Corporal P saw a nail bomber at the back of the crowd and fired two shots; and a little later that he fired at a man holding a pistol. We return later in this report¹ to this part of Corporal P's account and to his firing of further shots.

69.24 In this statement Corporal P recorded that he went to the right of the APC with two others. One of these, as already noted, was the baton gunner Private 017, but whether there was a third soldier remains unclear. Corporal P did not mention a third soldier in his later evidence; and none of the other soldiers who disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street claimed to have moved to the western side of that street. In our view Corporal P was probably mistaken in referring to a third soldier, though it is possible that one of the others may temporarily have gone in that direction before moving back to the eastern side of the street.

69.25 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal P gave the following description:

“When the vehicle stopped the section got out and split into twos and threes in order to make arrests. I was with another soldier. It was at this time that I cocked my rifle. As we got out of the vehicle I noticed a small crowd in the area in front of a wall on the left-hand side (from the direction I was looking) of the low rise flats in front of Columbcille Court. The crowd were throwing missiles in the general direction of the troops on the ground in front of the Rossville Flats. I was wearing a gas mask and I signalled to the soldier I was with to advance in the direction of the crowd in order to make arrests. As we moved across Rossville Street they dispersed up the alley way into Columbcille Court and the alleyway to the left of Columbcille Court (from the direction I was looking). By the time we reached the wall the crowd had dispersed. Upon reaching the wall we came under fire from roughly the direction of the barricade. At that time I could not see anyone firing at us. There were two shots which I thought to be high velocity shots. They appeared to go over our heads as I heard the crack of the round going overhead. We then took cover along-side the wall. Shortly after this we noticed a group of people coming along the alleyway who started stoning and bottling us. The soldier I was with then fired a number of baton rounds into the crowd in an attempt to disperse them. The crowd on being hit split up...”

¹ B592

69.26 It will be noted that in this account Corporal P described hearing two shots that he stated he believed to be high velocity and coming from “roughly” the direction of the rubble barricade. Corporal P continued with a description of then seeing and firing at a nail bomber at the back of the crowd and at a man with a pistol, and of later shots, to which we return below.¹

69.27 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Corporal P said that when he disembarked there was a crowd of people on the waste ground and another crowd “across the road from us”. Both crowds were rioting, “throwing stones, bottles, all sorts of missiles”.¹

69.28 Corporal P then gave a description of moving to a wall on the Kells Walk side of the street, and of hearing two shots that had come from the direction of the barricade. He told the Widgery Inquiry that there were quite a few people behind the barricade, throwing stones or moving back to Free Derry Corner. He said that there were only one or two people on his side of the barricade, trying to cross to the other side of the barricade, but that he then noticed “a group of people coming out from the Columbcille Court alleyway and they started stoning us and bottling us”. The other soldier he was with fired some baton rounds to disperse them.¹ He then again described his firing, to which we return below.²

² Chapter 73 and paragraphs 85.2–28

69.29 Corporal P gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written account¹ he told us that he had very little recollection of the day, but that he relied on what he had said in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.²

² B623.004

69.30 In his oral evidence to the present Inquiry, Corporal P said that Bloody Sunday was the only time he had fired live rounds, apart from on the rifle ranges, but despite this he said that he had practically no memory of the day.¹ He could give no explanation for why he had told the RMP that his rifle had been cocked while he was in the APC, whereas he had told the Widgery Inquiry that he had cocked it on disembarking,² nor for the fact that there was no mention in his RMP statement of the two shots he told the Widgery Inquiry that he had heard.

² Day 353/15-16

69.31 We return to Corporal P's evidence later in this report,¹ when we consider the firing by soldiers in Sector 3.

Private 017

69.32 In his first RMP statement timed at 0130 hours on 31st January 1972, Private 017 described how, armed only with a baton gun, he disembarked and moved to a position near a low wall to the north-west of the northernmost block of the Rossville Flats:¹

“A barricade had been erected by the crowd in Rossville St some 60 metres to my front. This barricade was made up of bricks and rubble. There was a rioting crowd at the barricade and they were stoning troops who deployed around the flats. I fired a number of baton rounds at the crowd. They stoned me. A group of about 4 to 5 male youths came close to me around the corner of a wall to my right. They stoned me heavily. I realised that I could make an arrest from this small group and prepared to rush forward. As I ran towards the corner I saw a man walk around the corner towards me.”

¹ B1472

69.33 Private 017 then explained that this man was carrying a handgun, and gave an account of firing a baton round at him. We consider this evidence later in this report.¹

69.34 Private 017 made a second RMP statement timed at 2030 hours on 4th February 1972,¹ in which he described being behind a brick wall about 10m from No 2 Columbcille Court. He stated that there was a crowd of about 50 people milling around in front of the barricade. “They rushed towards me so I fired one round from my rubber bullet gun, which split them up.” Private 017 then gave a description of seeing a man come from behind the crowd with what he took to be a nail bomb, at whom Corporal P, “who was located just behind me”, fired one shot. The man fell, the bomb did not go off, and the crowd carried the man away. We return to this part of Private 017's evidence when considering below² the firing by Corporal P.

¹ B1479

² Paragraphs 73.11–18

69.35 The brick wall about 10m from 2 Columbcille Court is the wall near which Private 017 can be seen in photographs that we consider below.¹

69.36 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private 017 gave this account:^{1,2}

“2. About 4.10 that afternoon my platoon debussed at the north end of Block 1 of Rossville Flats. Whilst we had been moving to this position in our vehicles we could hear stones continuously hitting our armoured vehicle and on leaving the vehicle we were surrounded by a large crowd who were milling about the area of the front of the flats and in Rossville Street and the other side of the road and a lot of stones and debris was thrown in my direction.

3. Immediately after leaving the vehicle and together with soldier ‘P’ who was armed with an SLR as a protection for myself I went across Rossville Street to the side of a wall in front of Columbcille Court. Soon after we took up this position I heard two single high velocity shots which I believe may have come from around the area of Rossville Flats but I am not sure what the direction of the fire was. There was a crowd of about 50 people in front of the barricade in Rossville Street, they rushed towards me so I fired one round from my rubber bullet gun which split the crowd up.”

² In this statement Private 017 was given the cipher 125.

69.37 This statement continued with Private 017’s account of seeing a nail bomber who had come from behind this crowd and who was shot by Corporal P; of the crowd then retreating behind the rubble barricade; of people running in and out of the alleyway leading to Columbcille Court and throwing stones and bottles in the direction of the two soldiers; and of then firing his baton gun at a man with a handgun who came round the corner of that alleyway. We deal with the man with the handgun below.¹

69.38 Private 017 gave written¹ and oral evidence² to this Inquiry. As already noted,³ though in his written statement he told us that he was pretty sure that he had been in the leading APC, in his oral evidence he said that this was wrong and that he had been in Sergeant O’s vehicle. For reasons already given,⁴ we take the view that he had indeed travelled with Sergeant O.

³ Paragraph 24.12

² Day 358/35-185

⁴ Paragraph 24.12

69.39 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private 017 described firing a rubber bullet and chasing the crowd after he disembarked from the APC. The crowd generally moved south and “A lot of them joined the main crowd at a barricade across Rossville Street”. He stated that he initially made his way to a point that he described as the north-east corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats (although on a map¹ he marked it as the entrance to the access road leading from Rossville Street to the car park of the Rossville Flats), and that he then crossed to the west side of Rossville Street. He told us that at this stage he heard some shots but did not know where they were coming from and did not think that they were aimed at him. He also told us that he was being stoned. His statement continued:²

“23. A group mainly of youths aged 20 to 25, broke away from the crowd behind the Rubble Barricade and made four or five half hearted approaches towards me. They were trying to urge the rest of the crowd to join them. They were shouting ‘Get him’. They would have ripped me to pieces if they had got me. Crowds had killed soldiers before. I felt very vulnerable there on my own.

24. I fired two or three rubber bullets into the riot. Shortly afterwards P joined me. He cannot have been far behind me because I think I was only there for seconds before he joined me.

25. The next thing I remember is that a large group of people (40 to 50) ran out of an alleyway that was on our right, leading from Rossville Street to Columbcille Court (grid reference J13). The crowd turned and ran south to join the main group of rioters at the Rubble Barricade. I didn’t fire any rubber bullets as the group ran past but once they joined the rest of the crowd I fired a steady trickle of rubber bullets to contain them. In all, I think I fired 12–15 rubber bullets that day.”

69.40 After giving a description of Corporal P shouting a warning about a nail bomber, and of hearing him fire, Private 017 stated:¹

“29. Not long after that, I looked west down the alleyway immediately to my right (the one leading to Columbcille Court). I could see rubble and old prams lying around, across the alleyway. Four or five youths had formed a line and were throwing bottles or bricks towards me. In particular, I saw a guy with long hair and I decided to arrest him. As I ran forward, the youths doubled back and ran away and I saw a man with a pistol come around the corner, from the north east corner of Glenfada Park North, into the alleyway towards me. The gunman was about 20 to 30 yards from me. I don’t remember which hand his gun was in, but I could see that it was a pistol. He was pointing it in my direction. I fired a rubber bullet at him and he shied away. I then ran round the corner, back into Rossville Street and called P. I can’t be certain, as I did so, whether or not the man with the pistol fired at me, but I think that he did. The gunman was a young man, not fat but of normal build. If I had seen him again that day I would have recognised him.”

69.41 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 said that he had fired his baton gun at the crowd, rather than bouncing the rounds off the ground. He agreed that he had probably fired his baton gun soon after disembarking from the APC, although the crowd was running away, to “Keep ’em moving”.¹ He also corrected his written statement, in which he had recorded that he had initially made his way to a point on the eastern side of Rossville Street, agreeing that he had only later gone to that position, having first gone to the western side of Rossville Street.²

¹ Day 358/49; Day 358/135-136; Vid 48 12.26

² Day 358/51-52

69.42 Private 017 said that at this stage he had heard what he thought was high velocity fire, but could not say how many shots he had heard. Asked how big the crowd was at the barricade, he estimated the number at “around 100”. Asked what they were doing, he said:¹

“They were mainly behind the barricade. On occasions they charged forward and stopped in front of the barricade and then went back; they were making half-hearted attempts to charge.”

69.43 Private 017 said that he was about 50 metres or so from the barricade.¹

69.44 During his oral evidence Private 017 was asked to look at a photograph, which was taken by the Irish Press photographer Colman Doyle, and to which we have already referred¹ when considering, in our discussion of the events of Sector 2, the arrest of William John Dillon:

69.45 Private 017 agreed that the figure in the background on the left of the photograph was probably him. "It looks like I am firing a rubber bullet gun and that is the smoke from it." He also identified the soldier with him as Corporal P. He said he did not recall being any closer than this to the rubble barricade before the incident in which he fired a baton round at a gunman.¹

69.46 Next, Private 017 was shown two photographs taken by the freelance photographer Liam Mailey in the order shown below.

69.47 Private 017 identified himself as the soldier on the left standing at the corner of the wall. He did so because of the pouch that can be seen at the hip, in which he carried a camera. He agreed that it was from this position that he had fired his baton gun. He also identified the soldier behind him as Corporal P.¹

69.48 Private 017 said that the group that had run out of the alleyway leading from Columbcille Court was not the 40 to 50 he had described in his written statement, but “round about 15”.¹ He was sure that this group had turned south and run towards the rubble barricade; and he thought that the two incidents involving the nail bomber and the gunman were separate from this.²

² Day 358/61-62

Other evidence relating to the movements of Corporal P and Private 017

69.49 From the photograph taken by Colman Doyle, which we have reproduced above,¹ and Private 017’s identification of himself and Corporal P, it can be seen that when the photograph was taken Private 017 had just discharged his baton gun, with Corporal P close behind him. The following is the second photograph of the scene taken by Colman Doyle. This was taken immediately after the first photograph, as can be seen from the different positions of the soldier on the right running towards the group in the foreground.

69.50 As will have been seen from our account of the arrest of William John Dillon in Sector 2,¹ Colman Doyle took these photographs after Lieutenant N had fired up the Eden Place alleyway, but before Lieutenant N had returned to his APC.

69.51 As to the photographs taken by Liam Mailey, those shown to Private 017 are part of a series taken of this scene. We set the complete series out below, in the order in which they were taken, which is established by the contact prints.

The first photograph

69.52 Of the six in this series, we have already shown the first¹ when describing the arrival of the vehicles in Rossville Street. By the time this photograph was taken, the two APCs of Mortar Platoon had moved from Rossville Street into the Eden Place waste ground and the Rossville Flats car park and so are out of sight. On the left of the photograph can be seen a group of soldiers.

The second photograph

69.53 The group of soldiers is in much the same position in the second photograph, but in front of the sloping wall of the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk another soldier can be seen, apparently running west. Liam Mailey told the Widgery Inquiry that this soldier had a rubber bullet gun.¹ This photograph was referred to as photograph 6 in Liam Mailey's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

The third and fourth photographs

69.54 The third and fourth photographs are those in which Private 017 identified himself and Corporal P. The latter also identified himself and Private 017 in the third photograph in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.¹ Liam Mailey told that Inquiry that the soldier with the rubber bullet gun shown in the second photograph could be seen in the third in the position from which he fired rubber bullets.² In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Liam Mailey recorded that when he took the third photograph this soldier had just fired a few rubber bullets.³

³ M50.58

² WT7.30

The fifth and sixth photographs

69.55 The next two photographs show that by this stage other soldiers had arrived at the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk. Liam Mailey told the Widgery Inquiry that “the troops ran towards the ramp and towards the alleyway there. They should have obviously gone between the walls. They ran in front of them and turned back again and went up between the walls.”¹

69.56 The last two of these six photographs show soldiers at the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk. In Colman Doyle's two photographs of the scene (reproduced above¹), no soldiers can be seen in this position, from which we conclude that he took these photographs before they arrived and probably just before Liam Mailey took his third and fourth photographs, the third of which, as noted above,² Liam Mailey told the Widgery Inquiry he had taken just after the soldier with the rubber bullet gun had fired.

69.57 Although Private 017 told us that he thought he was not one of the soldiers shown in the fifth of Liam Mailey's photographs, because he did not recollect "that amount of people being there",¹ we consider, in the light of this series of photographs, that he was mistaken about this and that he was the soldier seen furthest to the left in the fifth and sixth photographs. Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry that he had fired two shots at a man he said was a nail bomber, before the group of soldiers had arrived at the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk.²

² WT13.48-49

69.58 On the basis of this evidence, we are satisfied that Corporal P and Private 017 did initially go to the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street and that Private 017 fired some baton rounds when standing at the southern corner of the wall of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk, with Corporal P close by. Private 017 appears to have fired at least one of these baton rounds after William John Dillon had been arrested. Later in this report¹ we consider Corporal P's account of firing two shots at a man with a nail bomb and Private 017's account of firing his baton gun at a man with a handgun.

Chapter 70: The actions of civilians in Rossville Street on and after the arrival of the Army vehicles

70.1 In our consideration of the events of Sector 2,¹ we concluded that while some civilians threw stones and bottles at the vehicles as they came into the Bogside, the general reaction of the crowd was to run away. So far as Sector 3 is concerned, there was initially the same general movement away, as can be seen from the film of the two leading vehicles driving in.²

² Vid 48 12.26

70.2 We have referred earlier, in our consideration of the events of Sector 2,¹ to photographs taken by Derrik Tucker Senior from Block 2 of the Rossville Flats, before and as the Army vehicles came in. We set out below the photograph that he took after the Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) of Mortar Platoon had turned off Rossville Street.

70.3 Ciaran Donnelly, the Irish Times photographer, took a number of photographs when the vehicles arrived. He told us that he took the first two of these from the ramp at the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park South (ie from behind and slightly above the rubble barricade) and the second two at ground level and also from behind the barricade.¹ His contact prints show that the photographs were taken in the following order.

70.4 At the stage when these photographs were taken, Lieutenant N's APC had already turned into the Eden Place waste ground and Sergeant O's APC into the Rossville Flats car park, and so they are out of view.

70.5 Before the sequence of six photographs taken by Liam Mailey that show the arrival of Corporal P and Private 017 at the pram-ramp wall south of Kells Walk, which we have set out above,¹ Liam Mailey had taken another photograph, which we show below.

70.6 Although each of the photographs that we have set out above shows only a moment in time and must be treated on that basis, together they give a view of people moving away from the Army vehicles, a number gathering at the rubble barricade, some to the north of that barricade and some apparently armed with stones and similar missiles. A number of civilians gave evidence that there was rioting at and north of the barricade, in the form of throwing bricks, stones and similar missiles.

70.7 Thomas Heaney,¹ Vincent McCauley,² Ciaran Donnelly³ and Peter Lancaster⁴ told us of rallying cries and calls for people at Free Derry Corner to return to the rubble barricade. Some witnesses, such as Don Mullan,⁵ told us of returning to the barricade with “maybe a dozen or two dozen people” to throw stones.⁶ Paul McGeady put the number returning at “maybe several dozen”.⁷ Gavan Duffy said “about ... 80 people ... surged forward towards the [Free Derry Corner side of the] barricade” from Glenfada Park North on seeing a soldier hitting a youth with a rifle butt.⁸

70.8 Vincent McCauley told us of rioters “charging towards the soldiers”¹ and of “youths running towards the soldiers with the intent of tackling them with bricks”,² from about the south end of Glenfada Park South.³ Paul McGeady thought “maybe between 6 to 12 people” went over the barricade,⁴ while George Downey thought “three or four guys” went over the barricade “five or six foot”.⁵ Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that 30 to 50 people ran towards soldiers at the corner of the Rossville Flats, and that he thought that there had been “30/40 of us north of the barricade”.⁶ Frankie Mellon said that “20 or 30 people”, including Hugh Gilmour (one of those shot and killed in Sector 3), would pick up fist-sized stones from behind the barricade and run forward “about 40 or 50 yards” to hurl them at the soldiers.⁷ James Quinn said that, while he threw stones from behind the barricade, some were stoning from the north side of the barricade.⁸ George Roberts said that he and between 15 and 20 others threw stones from the rubble barricade, but the soldiers were too far away for them to reach.⁹

Many civilian witnesses described seeing or taking part in rioting at the barricade itself. Paul McGeedy thought “Maybe a dozen” youths were involved in the stoning.¹ Brian Kelly described rioting by some of “between 12 and 15” youths behind the barricade, but thought that the youths would have realised that the stones “could not reach the soldiers and that there was no chance of causing injury”.² Gavan Duffy believed that only a minority in the crowd were rioting with stones and bottles while the remainder watched without participating.³ Ciaran Donnelly said that of the 20 or so youths lined up behind the barricade, only six to ten “were constantly throwing stones”.⁴ Ronald Wood said that a crowd of ten to 15 people were throwing rubble and pieces of brick from the centre of the rubble barricade, among whom were two young men who fell, though he said that he had not actually seen the two men throwing stones.⁵ Professor Terence O’Keeffe (who in 1972 was Fr O’Keeffe) told us that he had the “impression” that “a small group of youths, about 7 or 8, towards the middle of the barricade” were throwing stones.⁶ George Roberts put the number at “15 to 20 maybe”, but said that the soldiers were out of range.⁷ Jack Nash threw stones from behind the barricade and saw others do the same.⁸ Donal Deeney thought that “There might have been more” than 10 to 20 rioters.⁹

Assistant Chief Constable Robert Campbell, of the Renfrew and Bute Constabulary, and Superintendent Samuel McGonigle, then the Planning Officer of that constabulary, were visiting Northern Ireland in order to study the methods employed there for dealing with major incidents; and were present on Bloody Sunday. They accepted an invitation from the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) to observe the civil rights march from near the Walker Monument on the City Walls. We indicate the position of the Walker Monument on the following map and photograph.

70.11 Both these police officers reported being able to observe, among other things, part of the rubble barricade, though their view of Rossville Street further north was obscured by the Rossville Flats; and that they saw people running north to the rubble barricade and hurling stones and similar missiles at what they assumed were soldiers out of their view.¹ According to Superintendent McGonigle, a crowd formed up behind the rubble barricade and then ran forward throwing these missiles.²

70.12 There was some evidence to suggest that a number of people at the rubble barricade went forward and threw stones after seeing a person arrested by soldiers on the Eden Place waste ground.

70.13 George Downey,¹ Gavan Duffy,² Paul McGeady,³ Alphonsus Cunningham,⁴ Noel McCartney⁵ and Hugh Patrick O'Donnell⁶ all gave accounts of what some described as a “surge” forward, with numbers varying from about three and four up to as many as several dozen crossing the barricade and going forward. However, none suggested that they came close to the arresting soldiers or near enough to do them harm. We accept that, as George Downey said, the surge was really more a gesture than a real attempt to engage the soldiers.⁷

70.14 Although it is not certain, we consider it more likely than not that the arrest, or one of the arrests, to which these civilians were referring, was that of William John Dillon. We considered this arrest in our discussion of the events of Sector 2.¹ Neither of the soldiers who arrested William John Dillon (Private 006 and Private 037) gave any evidence of being approached by civilians or being stoned as they did so.

70.15 As we noted while considering the arrest of William John Dillon,¹ both Jeffrey Morris of the Daily Mail and Colman Doyle of the Irish Press photographed this event. The first photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris from the Eden Place waste ground gives a view across Rossville Street and of part of the rubble barricade.

70.16 There is an enlargement of the left-hand side of this photograph shown below.

70.17 This shows two figures north of the rubble barricade and perhaps moving northwards. However, the photograph as a whole shows no-one near the soldier arresting William John Dillon, and the part of Rossville Street in view (from the western part of the rubble barricade to a position a few yards from the corner where Corporal P and Private 017 can be seen in the photographs we have considered above¹) is shown entirely clear of people.

70.18 As we have also already noted¹ when discussing the arrest of William John Dillon, Colman Doyle took a very similar photograph from a position that must have been close to Jeffrey Morris. Colman Doyle's contact prints show that after that he took five further photographs of the arrest of William John Dillon. In the background of the last three of these can be seen Corporal P and Private 017. Two of these photographs we have reproduced above.² The contact sheet we show below.

² Paragraphs 69.44 and 69.49

70.19 In our view there can be little doubt that this series of photographs, and those of Jeffrey Morris, were taken over a short period of time. With the exception of the figures just to the north of the rubble barricade shown in the enlargement of Jeffrey Morris's photograph, none shows any civilians (apart from William John Dillon) in the area of Rossville Street or along its western side.

Conclusions on the rioting at and near the rubble barricade

70.20 From the evidence we have considered above we are sure that rioting broke out at the rubble barricade soon after the Army vehicles arrived in Rossville Street, in the form of some dozen or more men collecting and throwing stones, bricks, rubble, bottles and the like towards the soldiers. Some went forward of the rubble barricade to stone from nearer the soldiers, but in our view none came near enough to soldiers to pose a real danger to them. At this stage most of the soldiers in Sector 3 were some 70 yards away from the rubble barricade, in the Kells Walk area of Rossville Street.

Chapter 71: Rioters coming from the Columbcille Court alleyway

71.1 In a part of his first RMP statement¹ that we have quoted above,² Corporal P described about 20 advancing rioters, who were about 50m away and at whom Private 017 fired a number of baton rounds, causing the rioters to split up. The rubble barricade would have been about 50m away from the corner where Corporal P and Private 017 can be seen in the photographs shown above.³ However, in a part of his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that we have also quoted above,⁴ Corporal P described taking cover against a wall (which appears from the context to be the wall where he and Private 017 can be seen in the photographs), after which a group of people came along the alleyway and started stoning and bottling them. Again from the context, this would appear to be the alleyway that led off Rossville Street towards Columbcille Court. This alleyway is shown in the following photograph, on which we have also marked the position of Corporal P and Private 017 when they were photographed by Colman Doyle.

Private 017, when photographed
by Colman Doyle

- 71.2 The distance between the position occupied by Corporal P and Private 017 at the wall and the alleyway into Columbcille Court is only some 20m. According to Corporal P's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, it was at a crowd that came along this alleyway that Private 017 fired his baton gun, splitting them up.
- 71.3 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private 017 described going to a low wall and seeing about 60m in front of him the rubble barricade where there was a rioting crowd at which he fired a number of baton rounds. (In his second RMP statement,² he recorded that he had fired one round at this crowd.) He then described a group of about four to five youths coming close to him round a corner to his right, and stated that he decided to go forward to try to make an arrest. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ he described firing one baton round at the crowd near the barricade, which in this statement he recorded was rushing towards him. He then gave an account of people coming from the Columbcille Court alleyway and throwing stones and bottles, and of then seeing a man with a handgun coming round the corner, and of firing a baton round at this man. We consider the incident involving the gunman later in this report.⁴
- ¹ B1472 ³ B1482
² B1479 ⁴ Chapter 74
- 71.4 The evidence that Corporal P (in his first RMP statement) and Private 017 gave about the state of the crowd at or near the rubble barricade corresponds to a significant degree with the evidence given by civilians. We therefore conclude that there were a number of rioters at the rubble barricade, some of whom came forward to throw stones and similar missiles, but none of whom advanced more than a few yards from the barricade.
- 71.5 In his later evidence Corporal P referred to Private 017 firing baton rounds, not at the crowd near the rubble barricade, but at a group of people who had come out of the alleyway leading to Columbcille Court. Private 017 had given an account of this group in his first RMP statement, but both in this statement and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he recorded that he had first fired at the crowd coming from the barricade, and then at a gunman who came round the corner of the alleyway.
- 71.6 There is only one other witness who gave an account of people coming out of the alleyway and stoning soldiers. This was Brendan Carlin, who gave written evidence to this Inquiry¹ but did not give oral evidence.

71.7 Brendan Carlin was 13 at the time of Bloody Sunday. He stated that he had run down Chamberlain Street and through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville Flats, and taken shelter at the Threepenny Bits (the hexagonal brick structures to the south of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats). His account continued as follows:¹

“12. I could see up Rossville Street but I have no recollection of what was happening around the Rubble Barricade. What grabbed my attention was two soldiers who were in the area I have marked D on the map in map reference K12. They were standing on an area that had cobbled stones pushed into cement. I do not recall seeing any other soldiers around these two, as my attention was focused entirely on them. The crowd had come out of the alleyway eastwards from the north of Glenfada Park North at point E on the map at reference J13 and had turned to confront the soldiers. They were taking on the two soldiers and were giving them a right stoning. One of the soldiers had a rubber bullet gun and the other had a rifle. The one with the rubber bullet gun was loading his gun as fast as he possibly could and was firing out at the youths who were coming back and forth from the alley but he was going to lose out and he knew it. These two were under pressure and the other soldier with a rifle shot a live round. He did this with his right elbow at the hip but with the gun pointing above the heads of the youths. Witnessing this scene convinced me that things were going to go wrong.”

71.8 The area Brendan Carlin marked “D” was by the corner of the wall where Private 017 and Corporal P can be seen in the photographs that we have set out above.¹ The alleyway he marked “E” was the alleyway leading from Rossville Street to Columbcille Court.² Brendan Carlin told us that after witnessing this he crossed Rossville Street and went into Glenfada Park North, but did not remember seeing anyone injured at the rubble barricade at this time.

² AC30.9

71.9 We draw no adverse inference from the fact that Brendan Carlin did not give oral evidence. His account of the two soldiers in the position he described who were being stoned by people coming out of the alleyway leading from Columbcille Court in our view supports the evidence of Corporal P and Private 017 that on their arrival at the wall there were people who came out of that alleyway and threw stones and bottles. We return later in this report¹ to Brendan Carlin’s evidence of Corporal P firing a shot over their heads.

71.10 In summary, therefore, we conclude that in addition to the crowd at or near the rubble barricade, a few people (Private 017 told us it was about four or five¹) were throwing objects from the Columbcille Court alleyway towards him.

Chapter 72: The high velocity shots heard by Corporal P and Private 017

72.1 As we have noted,¹ in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Corporal P described hearing two shots as he and Private 017 reached the wall. He stated that he thought that these were high velocity shots that had come “roughly” from the direction of the rubble barricade and that he heard the crack of the round going overhead. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ Private 017 recorded that soon after he had taken up his position at the wall in front of Columbcille Court he heard two high velocity shots “which I believe may have come from around the area of Rossville Flats but I am not sure what the direction of the fire was”. In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ Private 017 told us he had heard some shots but did not know where they had come from and did not think that they were aimed at him.

³ B1482

² B592

⁴ B1484.004

72.2 We have found no other evidence from any source to suggest that two high velocity shots were fired from the area of the rubble barricade towards Corporal P and Private 017. It is noteworthy that Private 017 was from the outset uncertain of the direction of fire. In our view these shots were two of the three fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway, an incident that we considered in the context of Sector 2.¹ This incident, which occurred quite soon after Lieutenant N had disembarked from his APC, and some 85m from where Corporal P and Private 017 were situated, corresponds in time with the firing that Corporal P and Private 017 said that they heard. We do not accept Corporal P’s account of hearing the shots pass over his head. Had this happened, there is no reason why Private 017 should not also have heard this, but this soldier has never suggested that he came under fire. As will be seen later in this report,² we have concluded that Corporal P has throughout lied, to the RMP, to the Widgery Inquiry and to this Inquiry. This is an additional reason for not accepting his account that this was incoming fire.

² Paragraphs 73.27–28 and 85.25–28

Chapter 73: The initial firing by Corporal P

73.1 In his first RMP statement, Corporal P described firing two shots at a nail bomber who was behind a crowd about 50m away:¹

“About 20 of the rioters were advancing towards us and were throwing stones and other missiles at us continually. One of the two chaps with me and armed with a anti riot gun fired a number of rubber bullets in an attempt to disperse the 20 who were attacking us. They were about 50 metres away at this time. The rioters on being hit by these rubber bullets split up.

As they split up I saw a man aged about 23–25 yrs wearing a light coloured jacket just behind the crowd. I saw him light an object in his hand. I saw it fizzle and sparks came from it. I shouted a warning to the chaps with me and then fired two aimed shots. The first I saw strike the ground near the nail bombers feet. The second I saw strike him in the chest, and this knocked him backwards, he fell to the ground.

The crowd then pulled back temporarily about 5–10 metres. The nailbomb did not explode. They then surged forward again and removed the body of the man I had shot.”

¹ B577

73.2 On Corporal P's RMP map are marked two positions for him and two positions for his targets. The map was intended to mark not only the position of the nail bomber Corporal P had stated that he had shot but also the position of a man with a pistol he said that he had shot later behind the barricade. We consider the pistol man later in this report,¹ but so far as the nail bomber is concerned neither of the positions of Corporal P marked on the map corresponds with the position from which Corporal P had stated that he had fired, though his first target is perhaps intended to be indicated by the more southerly of the two “target” arrows.² We explain later in this report³ that the RMP maps were not prepared or approved by the soldier concerned. The map does not show the wall of the high ramp south of Kells Walk, which may have led the compiler of the map mistakenly to place Corporal P further to the south than this soldier had said he was.

² B579

73.3 Corporal P gave a significantly different account in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. In a part of his written statement for that Inquiry that we have previously set out,¹ he described a group of people coming along the alleyway and the soldier he was with (Private 017) firing a number of baton rounds to disperse them. This statement continued:²

“The crowd on being hit split up and I noticed a man (he appeared to be aged about twenty-five and was wearing a light-coloured jacket) who was taking cover behind the crowd light an object which I would describe as an explosive missile and which seemed to me to be a nail bomb which began to fizz. I told the other soldier I was with to watch out and I took aim at the man and fired two shots. The man fell, dropping the object which did not explode. At that time my attention was directed down Rossville Street but when I re-directed my attention to where I had shot the man, the body had been removed and I could not see any object on the ground.”

² B592

73.4 Corporal P's trajectory photograph put him at the wall where he can be seen in the photographs set out above,¹ and his first target at the entrance of the alleyway leading into Columbcille Court.

73.5 The longer of the two lines drawn on this photograph from the corner of the high ramp at the south end of Kells Walk relates to the shot that Corporal P said that he later fired at a man holding a pistol behind the rubble barricade. We note at this point that there is no entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements¹ that relates to any of the shots that Corporal P said that he had fired. The reason for this is that Corporal P had gone up to Altnagelvin Hospital with the bodies of three of the casualties at the time when Major Loden was compiling this list.²

² B593; WT13.52

73.6 Corporal P initially gave a somewhat similar account of shooting a nail bomber in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry:¹

"Mr. GIBBENS: The people behind the barrier, did they just throw a few stones and leave?

A. No, sir, they stayed where they were.

Q. Did they persist in throwing things?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened then?

A. Around this time I noticed a group of people coming out from the Columbcille Court alleyway and they started stoning us and bottling us. The other person I was with fired some baton rounds in an attempt to disperse them, which he did, but when they split up I noticed a man standing behind and attempting to light an object, an explosive missile.

LORD WIDGERY: Yes. Describe it.

A. It was black. It was a black object with what seemed to be a fuse sticking out of it and at the time it was fizzing.

MR. GIBBENS: What do you mean by fizzing?

A. Smoking and spluttering – that sort of thing.

Q. Have you ever seen similar things before in your service in Northern Ireland?

A. Yes, three or four times.

Q. What have they proved to be?

A. Nail bombs.

Q. What did you believe this one was?

A. A nail bomb.

Q. What did you do then?

A. I shouted a warning to this soldier I was with and fired two aimed shots at him.

Q. Not at the soldier?

A. At the nail bomber, sir.

Q. What position were you in when you fired those shots?

A. I was standing, sir.

Q. And where was your weapon?

A. At the shoulder.

Q. Did you ever fire any shots from the hip?

A. No, sir, it is not part of our training.

LORD WIDGERY: Forgive me. You and this other soldier who had been with you all the time, were you alone at this stage or were there others close to you?

A. There was a group of people, from what I understand, to the rear of us.

Q. I am talking about other soldiers of your battalion. You and your mate were there by yourselves?

73.7 Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry that the man dropped the object, which did not go off, that his attention was directed to the rear and that when he turned back the body had gone, along with the nail bomb.¹

73.8 A little later in his oral evidence Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry that the man with the nail bomb was about 50 to 75m from him.¹ This distance would suggest that the man was in the area of the rubble barricade, whereas the distance from Corporal P’s position to the Columbcille Court alleyway (and the distance between him and his target according to the trajectory photograph) was only some 20m. A little later in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Corporal P was shown his trajectory photograph. He agreed that the nail bomber would have been right in the open on the concrete pathway; and said that the nail bomber was about 50 yards away; and was positive that he had hit him in the chest.²

² WT13.69

73.9

Corporal P initially told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen the man light the nail bomb:¹

“Q. This nail bomb, was it fizzing at the time when the man had it in his hand?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Did you see him light it?

A. Yes sir.

Q. How did he light it?

A. Well, he just held it down, struck a match.

Q. Did he have it in his left hand or right?

A. Left.

Q. Did he have the match in his right hand?

A. I believe so.

Q. Did he strike it on a box?

A. I couldn't be certain.

Q. If he did not strike it on a box, what did he strike it on?

A. I could not be certain, sir.

Q. Could you show me now how you think the man with the nail bomb in his left hand lit it with his right?

A. Well, he had the nail bomb and, as I say, I don't know how he struck the match. He just lit the fuse.

Q. Would you just go back? Two seconds before you see a lighted match in his right hand. Can you tell me how that match materialized in his right hand?

A. No, I couldn't say, sir.

Q. You could not say?

A. No.

Q. Did it appear as if by magic?

A. I shouldn't think so, sir.

Q. Did he have a wall on his right-hand where he may have struck it?

A. He would have an entrance to the alleyway.

Q. When he was in Rossville Street, looking towards William Street, would it not be quite untrue to suggest that he had a wall near his right-hand? Do you recall where you pointed out to my Lord only a few minutes ago where the man was standing?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Are you trying to tell the Tribunal that he would have had a wall near his right hand?

A. No sir.

Q. Did he have a matchbox then?

A. I couldn't be certain, sir.

Q. If he got it lit, you saw the match come towards the nail bomb?

A. I saw the nail bomb fizzing."

73.10

However, at the end of Corporal P's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, there was this question and answer:¹

"Q. ... As regards the man with the nail bomb, did you or did you not see him actually light the match or did you first see the match lit?

A. I did not see the match being lit. I just seen the object spluttering and a certain amount of smoke coming from it."

- 73.11 Private 017 mentioned nothing in his first RMP statement about Corporal P shooting a nail bomber. However, in his second RMP statement¹ he gave this account:

“Further to my statement of 30 Jan 72 which I made at Londonderry. I would like to add that I was positioned behind a brick wall about 10 metres from No 2 Columbcille Court. There was a crowd of about 50 people milling around in front of the barricade which was built across Rossville St. They rushed towards me so I fired one round from my rubber bullet gun, which split them up. From behind the crowd came a man wearing a blue coat and carrying in his hand what I took to be a nail bomb. It was lit as I could see the smoke coming from the fuse. As he raised his arm to throw the bomb towards us ‘P’ who was located just behind me fired 1 x 7.62 rd from his SLR. I don’t know where the round hit the man but he fell and was quickly enveloped by the crowd. The bomb did not go off and the crowd carried away the injured man.”

¹ B1479

- 73.12 Private 017 gave a similar account in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ In this statement, having described Corporal P firing at the nail bomber, he continued by describing how the crowd retreated behind the barricade but other people ran in and out of the alleyway and threw bricks and stones and bottles.

¹ B1482

- 73.13 Private 017 gave this description of the man with a nail bomb in his written evidence to this Inquiry:¹

“Not long after the crowd ran out of the alleyway, P shouted ‘Look out, bomber!’. There was a crowd just north of the Rubble Barricade in the area marked G on the map (grid references J14 and K14). At first I did not see the bomber because there were a lot of people there. I then saw some blue-white smoke low down amongst the crowd. I saw someone crouched down with a dark object in his hand, which I took to be a nail bomb. He had his arm back as if he was ready to throw. I couldn’t now give a description of the man. I heard a shot. I did not actually see the man struck by the bullet but I saw him spin to his right and go down. I don’t know if he fell on his back or on his face. Within seconds, he was engulfed by the crowd and that was the last I saw of him. When the crowd went back he had gone. The device did not go off. I was waiting for a bang but there was nothing.”

73.14 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 017 gave this explanation for making no mention of the nail bomber in his first RMP statement:

“I didn’t mention the nail bomber that [Corporal P] fired at in that statement. I thought seeing the gunman was more important so that is what I mentioned seeing. I think that was what I was specifically asked about.”

73.15 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 said that he had not mentioned the nail bomber in his first RMP statement “because Corporal P was ... dealing with that one”.¹ His evidence continued as follows:²

“Q. When you say, ‘Corporal P was dealing with that,’ had you discussed the matter with Corporal P?

A. No.

Q. Do you mean that he was dealing with it in the sense that he is the one who fired the shots at the nail bomber?

A. Yes.

Q. But nevertheless, if this evidence is right, you had seen a suspected nail bomber fall in front of your eyes?

A. Correct.

Q. Apparently shot by another soldier?

A. Yes.

Q. And presumably that nail bomber had been wounded or maybe killed; is that not right?

A. Correct.

Q. Was that not something sufficiently important to be included in your first statement to the Military Police?

A. Maybe, but they were not interested in it.

Q. How do you know they were not interested in it?

A. They were only interested in the gunman.

Q. Did you tell them about the nail bomber?

A. During that, during that night it could have been, the company commander asked if anybody had seen a gunman and I said I did and he said, 'You better make a statement,' and that is what I made, the early hours of the morning.

Q. Did you tell either the company commander or the RMP that you had seen a nail bomber shot in front of your eyes?

A. No, Corporal P did that.

Q. So you did not tell either the company commander or the military policeman who was taking your first statement, anything about the nail bomber?

A. No.

Q. The reason you did not is that the company commander had asked you whether you had seen a gunman; is that right?

A. I think it was the company commander, yes.

Q. Did it not occur to you that unless you told somebody that you had seen a nail bomber they would not be in a position to tell you whether that was something you ought to make a statement about or not?

A. Could you say that again?

Q. Yes. Did it not occur to you that unless and until you told somebody that you had seen a nail bomber being shot right in front of you, nobody would be in a position to say, 'Well, you ought to make a statement about that'?

A. It did not occur to me to, to mention it.

Q. Because you say the Military Police were not interested in the nail bomber?

A. Yes, he was just interested in my encounter with the gunman.

Q. How can you tell whether he was interested in the nail bomber if you had not told him that there was a nail bomber?

A. I took it that Corporal P was dealing with that.

Q. Did the military policeman not say to you in the course of taking that statement was there anything else that you saw?

A. No.

Q. Not at all?

A. Not at all.

Q. You are not suggesting, are you, that you had forgotten about the nail bomber when you saw the RMP?

A. No.

Q. Just that you took a conscious decision not to mention it?

A. Only because Corporal P had been – had given a statement the early hours of that morning about it.

Q. Did you know that?

A. Yes, or everybody that fired had to make a statement that morning.

Q. Do you say that you had no discussion, either before or after making your statement that night, with Corporal P about either what he was going to say or what he had said?

A. No.

Q. You then made a second statement to the Military Police on 4th February; is that not right?

A. Yes.

Q. And if we look at B1484.007, paragraph 46, you refer to that and you say:

‘When we got back to Palace Barracks, we were told that there was going to be an inquiry into what had happened that day. I was interviewed again by someone in civilian clothes ... A copy of that statement is attached marked appendix 2. We were told that anyone involved had to make a statement and anyone who had witnessed what had happened that day had to make a statement to back up the statement of the person who fired the round.’

Should we understand that the purpose of the second statement was to back up what Corporal P had said?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember who told you that you were required to make another statement to back up the statement of the person who fired the round?

A. It could have been platoon commander or the platoon sergeant, N or P – sorry, N or O.

Q. N or O. By the time you came to make this second statement, did you know what P had said in his first statement?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Had you still not discussed the matter with P at all?

A. We probably did mention it at 22nd Light Air Defence barracks, but just in talking, not in great detail.

Q. Can you remember anything that he said to you about what he had told the Military Police?

A. No, I cannot.

Q. It may be suggested that the reason why you did not mention the nail bomber in your first statement was that you had not seen the nail bomber and that it was only when you knew what P was saying that you decided to make a statement about the nail bomber yourself, in order to back him up. Is that what happened or not?

² Day 358/64-69

73.16

Private 017 was also asked about his second RMP statement and his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, in both of which he had stated that he had seen a smoking fuse:¹

“Q. Let us look at B1484.013, which is the second [RMP] statement. In the account that you give of the incident, you say: ‘From behind the crowd came a man wearing a blue coat and carrying in his hand what I took to be a nail bomb. It was lit, as I could see the smoke coming from the fuse.’ You have told the Inquiry in your statement of the year 2000 that you do not now remember smoke coming from a fuse?

A. I remember seeing smoke, but not like a fuse the size of a pencil sticking out of the bomb.

Q. Did you see a fuse at all, never mind what size it was?

A. No, just smoke and a dark object in his hand.

Q. If we go to B1484.008, paragraph 49.1 [Private 017's written statement to this Inquiry], you have said there: 'I do not think actually I saw a fuse. The RMP taking the statement would have put that in. All I saw was smoke and a dark object. The IRA were famous for using nail bombs, so I probably did say that the object was a nail bomb.'

So you are suggesting, are you, that the military policeman introduced the reference to seeing a fuse when you had not said anything about seeing a fuse?

A. Yes.

Q. Why would the military policeman have done that?

A. He was helping me along with the statement and, um, he has probably done it all before and he put it in.

Q. Did you read through the statement that he prepared before you signed it?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And would you not have spotted, when you read it through, that the reference to seeing a fuse was incorrect?

A. It did not occur to me as I took it it was a nail bomb which would have had a fuse.

Q. Let us look, then, at B1484.015, which is the statement that you made to the Treasury Solicitor. Do you remember making this statement?

A. Vaguely.

Q. Do you recall what the procedure was for taking the statement?

A. No, no, I do not.

Q. Can you remember someone asking you questions or was some other procedure followed?

A. I cannot remember.

Q. Do you remember whether you had your Military Police statements in front of you when you made this statement?

A. I am not sure.

Q. If we look in paragraph 3, you say:

‘P then told me to look out as he had seen a man come from behind the crowd. This man was about 25, wearing a light blue jacket and carrying in his hand an object which I could see had a smoking fuse which I took to be a nail bomb.’

Do you see there that in this statement as well you were saying that you could see a smoking fuse?

A. Yes, I see what you mean, but if I took it it was a nail bomb, it would obviously have a fuse.

Q. Is the position that you might have told the Treasury Solicitor that you could see a smoking fuse, even though in fact you had seen smoke but no fuse?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Did you in fact see anything in the hand of this person?

A. Yes, a dark object.

Q. Did you see smoke around him or around the object?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it clear to you that the smoke that you saw was coming from the object in the hand of this person?

A. Yes.”

73.18 We have concluded that the reason why Private 017 made no mention of a nail bomber in his first RMP statement was that he had not seen one. We find his varying explanations of why there is nothing about a nail bomber in this statement unconvincing and we reject them. In our view, after he had given his first RMP statement, Private 017 made up a false account of seeing a nail bomber in an attempt to provide support for Corporal P’s evidence. In this attempt he appears to have relied upon Corporal P's original version of shooting a nail bomber who was behind a crowd advancing from the Rossville Flats area; not the later version Corporal P gave of the nail bomber sheltering behind people appearing from the alleyway leading into Columbcille Court. The suggestion made by the representatives of the majority of the families that Private 017 colluded with members of the RMP and the solicitors working for the Widgery Inquiry "to provide an account of events consistent with that of Soldier P"¹ cannot therefore be sustained, as their accounts are not consistent.

73.19 There is, however, evidence that Corporal P did fire his rifle at about the time he said that he had shot a nail bomber.

73.20 We have referred above¹ to the evidence of Brendan Carlin, who told us that he saw a soldier, who from his account we consider must have been Corporal P, fire a shot from the hip over the heads of the people stoning him and the soldier with him.

73.21 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ the photographer Liam Mailey recorded that his impression was that just before he had taken what we have described above² as his third photograph (showing Private 017 at the corner of the wall of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk), the soldier on the right (Corporal P) had fired about two rifle shots towards the barricade from his hip.

² Paragraph 69.54

73.22 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Fr Thomas O'Gara described taking up a position about 15 yards south of the barricade in Rossville Street and seeing some soldiers in battle dress who were positioned beside a wall at the Free Derry Corner end of Kells Walk:

"One fired rubber bullets and the other got down on one knee several times pretending to fire. On the last of these occasions a sharp crack rang out and I knew this was live rifle fire. I saw no one fall. The soldier was aiming in the Glenfada park direction."

73.23 In the statement that Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team took from Eamon Melaugh, there is the following account:¹

“The soldiers who jumped out of the pigs caught a young lad and were giving him an unmerciful beating. He was on the g[ro]und and they were giving him a kicking. And a number of us ran forward to try and effect a rescue and we were throwing stones. There’s no doubt about I thre[w] stones. We ran forward for about 10 or 15 yards and then we could hear shooting. I would assume that this shooting was going up Chamberlain St to my right. A number of people turned and ran back up Rossville St. and I did the same. Residents from the first floor of the flats called down to me that I had dropped part of my camera. It was a lens hood. And I walked back down and collected it. I would be at this time the last civilian going up Rossville St. I was the last. I walked back up again to the barricade and I turned round and the a[rm]y were still pouring in on the left hand side of Glenfad[a] Park as I looked at it. There were three troopers who came the furthest up Rossville St. One was a rubber bullet man who was at the front and he was shooting his rubber bullet gun almost as quickly as he could load it. Immediately behind him and slightly further away because they were standing tight into the brick wall one of the troops I know now to be a paratrooper fired two rounds. He didn’t take aim. He fired from the waist. I know he was a paratrooper because it is generally recognised now that they were all paras.

I was in front of the barricade going down towards Rossville St at this time – on the rossville st. side of the barricade. When this happened I got up on top of the barricade and I attempted to take a photograph of the guy who had shot, but he saw I had long telephot[o] lens he turned his back to me and he walked down the length of the wall and he kept taking a quick glance over his shoulder to see if I had my camera to my eyes.

When I saw he had twigged on to what I was trying to do I got down off the top of the barricade into the Free Derry side.”

73.24 Although Eamon Melaugh claimed in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that some of the contents of these notes did not reflect anything that he had said to Peter Pringle, he did tell us that he remembered seeing a soldier fire two rounds from behind another soldier who had a baton gun; and that he attempted to photograph the soldier who had opened fire.² We should add that we are of the view that Peter Pringle probably did record accurately what Eamon Melaugh told him.

73.25 Thus there is evidence from three civilians and a priest that Corporal P fired at least one shot, if not two, at the stage under consideration.

73.26 For reasons that we give later in this report,¹ there is no doubt that the first person to be shot in the area of the rubble barricade was Michael Kelly. There is equally no doubt that he was shot by Lance Corporal F of Anti-Tank Platoon, since the bullet recovered from his body matched Lance Corporal F's rifle. There is no evidence from any source (including journalists but apart from that of Corporal P and Private 017) that anyone was shot in Sector 3 before Michael Kelly; and we are sure that Michael Kelly was the first casualty in that sector.

¹ Paragraphs 81.21–33 and 86.43–47

73.27 It follows that we reject Corporal P's account that he shot a nail bomber. Thus in our view either Corporal P fired at someone, or at more than one person, but missed, or he fired otherwise than at people. There is nothing to suggest to us that Corporal P fired by way of last resort, in order to avoid being caught by the crowd. Nor have we found any other evidence that suggests to us that he fired at someone with a nail bomb. On the basis of the evidence to which we have referred we have concluded that Corporal P fired from the waist or hip over the heads of the people further south on Rossville Street, as a means of frightening them off; and then made up accounts of shooting a nail bomber in order to conceal this firing. We can see no possible justification for this use of his weapon, fired in contravention of the provisions of the Yellow Card.¹

73.28 The false accounts that Corporal P gave of shooting at a nail bomber in our view make it difficult to rely on the accounts he gave of his later shots. We consider these accounts later in this report.¹

73.29 At this point we record that Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry¹ that when he disembarked from the APC he was wearing a respirator. He gave no evidence about whether or when he took it off. It is not possible from the photographs of Corporal P that we have discussed earlier in this report² to see whether or not he was wearing a respirator when they were taken.

Chapter 74: Private 017's gunman

74.1 Private 017 has given consistent accounts of this incident, starting with his first RMP statement. In the part of this statement that we have reproduced above,¹ Private 017 described a group of four to five male persons coming close to him from around a corner to his right and stoning him. He then stated that as he ran towards the corner a man came round it towards him:²

“He was a young man of about 19/20 years of age. He was wearing a blue shirt and a dark jacket. I could only see the part of the man above his knees. He was about 20 metres away from me. In his hand, I cannot say now which hand, he had a black object I recognised as a hand weapon; either a pistol or a revolver. I raised my baton gun and fired a round at the man. I did not hit him. I turned and ran off. As I did so I heard two small calibre weapon shots behind me as if the man had fired twice at me or other troops.”

74.2 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private 017, after giving an account of the nail bomber, continued:²

“4. After this had happened the crowd then went behind the barricade and continued to throw stones and bottles in our direction. Also bricks and stones and bottles were also being thrown at us by people who were running in and out of the alleyway leading to Columbcille Court. I noticed one man in particular who was throwing bricks from this position and I realized that I could arrest him. I therefore decided to run towards the alleyway. As I did so I saw a man walk around the corner towards me. From where I was he was about 15–20 metres away from me. He was aged about 20 and was wearing a blue shirt and a dark jacket. In his hand he had either a pistol or a revolver. I raised my baton gun and fired a round at him. I do not know if I hit him because my main concern was to get out of his line of fire so I turned and ran off back to where I had come from. As I did so I heard two small calibre weapon shots behind me as if the man had fired twice at me or other troops in my area.”

¹ B1482

² In this statement Private 017 was given the cipher 125.

74.3 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017, after giving the account we have rejected concerning the nail bomber, told us:¹

“Not long after that, I looked west down the alleyway immediately to my right (the one leading to Columbcille Court). I could see rubble and old prams lying around, across the alleyway. Four or five youths had formed a line and were throwing bottles or bricks towards me. In particular, I saw a guy with long hair and I decided to arrest him. As I ran forward, the youths doubled back and ran away and I saw a man with a pistol come around the corner, from the north east corner of Glenfada Park North, into the alleyway towards me. The gunman was about 20 to 30 yards from me. I don't remember which hand his gun was in, but I could see that it was a pistol. He was pointing it in my direction. I fired a rubber bullet at him and he shied away. I then ran round the corner, back into Rossville Street and called P. I can't be certain, as I did so, whether or not the man with the pistol fired at me, but I think that he did. The gunman was a young man, not fat but of normal build. If I had seen him again that day I would have recognised him.”

74.4 During the course of his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 was closely questioned about the gunman he said that he had seen and at whom he had fired his baton gun.¹ He did not resile from the accounts that he had previously given about this.

74.5 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 marked with a red arrow on a photograph the location from which he said that the gunman had come.¹ The photograph is reproduced below.² The blue arrow shows where Private 017 put his own position.

Private 017 and the Loden List of Engagements

74.6 In the course of our consideration of the events of Sectors 1 and 2,¹ we referred to what we described as the Loden List of Engagements, which Major Loden compiled from information provided to him by soldiers soon after the shooting on Bloody Sunday. We consider the preparation of this list elsewhere in this report.²

¹ Paragraphs 18.134 and 51.4–7

² Chapter 165

74.7 The seventh entry in this list is in the following terms:¹

“7. 1 gunman with pistol fired 2 rounds at a soldier armed only with a baton gun at GR 43231688 (Alleyway). Soldier fired one baton round and withdrew swiftly.”

74.8 Private 017’s position, as indicated by the grid reference, is shown in blue on the following map, prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families.¹

74.9 As is explained elsewhere in this report,¹ we take the view that the grid references contained in the list as a whole do not necessarily indicate the precise positions that those interviewed by Major Loden wished to convey, as inaccuracies undoubtedly arose as a result of the difficult circumstances in which the list was created. However, the similarity between the account of his encounter with a gunman given in Private 017's first RMP statement² and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ and the details recorded in the seventh entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements leave us in no doubt that he was the source for that entry. Private 017 could not remember being interviewed by Major Loden, but did remember telling someone about his encounter with the gunman, and agreed that he might have spoken to Major Loden as well as the RMP.⁴

¹ Paragraphs 18.137 and 165.8

³ B1482-1483

² B1472-1473

⁴ Day 358/184

74.10 It is our view, for reasons that we give when considering the list and individual entries in it,¹ that entries 1 to 7 in Major Loden's List of Engagements record engagements involving members of Mortar Platoon, entry 8 is an account given by a member or members of Machine Gun Platoon, entries 9 to 11 concern Anti-Tank Platoon and entries 12 to 15 refer to Composite Platoon (Guinness Force). From this it would appear that Major Loden interviewed members of each platoon in turn, and that Private 017 was the last member of Mortar Platoon to see his Company Commander.

¹ Paragraphs 18.135–138, 51.19–23, 51.93–95, 51.146–148, 51.178–184, 51.277–281, 74.7–9, 84.7–12, 97.58–66, 105.25, 123.16–18 and 165.13

74.11 There are thus consistent accounts from Private 017, the first given to Major Loden soon after the events of the day, of an encounter with a civilian carrying a handgun.

Military witnesses

75.1 Only one other military witness gave evidence of seeing a gunman in the area to which Private 017 had gone. This was Lieutenant Colonel INQ 1383.

Lieutenant Colonel INQ 1383

75.2 This officer was the Assistant Provost Marshal in Northern Ireland at the time and was present on Bloody Sunday. He told us that he had followed Support Company through Barrier 12. He was on foot and in civilian clothes. After hearing firing he saw a pistol man emerge from and withdraw behind a wall. According to his written statement to this Inquiry he did not recall whether the man fired, or his exact location, though he described the wall as being in Rossville Street.¹

75.3 Lieutenant Colonel INQ 1383 gave oral evidence to this Inquiry, during the course of which he was shown a photograph of the area. On this he marked his position as being on the eastern corner of the junction between William Street and Rossville Street when he caught a fleeting glance of a gunman who appeared from behind a wall in the area of the southern end of Kells Walk. He said: “... it appeared he had a pistol in his hand, fleetingly, and then disappeared.”¹ We set out below the photograph (not taken on Bloody Sunday) marked by this officer.²

² C1383.0010

75.4 Colonel INQ 1383 was unable to recall any details of the age or hair colour of the gunman he said that he had seen, though he told us that he might have been wearing a raincoat.¹

75.5 We have no reason to doubt Colonel INQ 1383’s account of catching a glimpse of a gunman in Rossville Street. Since this sighting appears to have been made at about the time when Private 017 was at the corner of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk, we think it possible that Colonel INQ 1383 saw the gunman described by Private 017, but in view of the lack of detail in his account, we cannot be certain of this.

Civilian witnesses

Fr Thomas O’Gara

75.6 Fr Thomas O’Gara is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry. However, he gave a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry and oral evidence to that Inquiry.

75.7 We have already noted¹ that in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Fr O’Gara described seeing two soldiers, who in our view were Private 017 and Corporal P, the former firing his baton gun and the latter kneeling and pretending to fire, though Fr O’Gara then heard the sharp crack of rifle fire. In the next paragraph of the statement, Fr O’Gara described the scene at the barricade:

“Secondly my attention was taken by some young lads on the barricade at the Flats. They were screaming for the mass of the people at Free Derry Corner to come back. None of them had fire-arms or nail bombs or petrol bombs. They shouted both at the army and their own people and I can vaguely recall some stones being thrown. I stood there for about 1 minute and heard some other muffled shots like rubber bullets all from the William Street area. I didn’t realise the danger.”

75.8 Fr O’Gara continued:¹

“The third incident which I can clearly recall happened about thirty seconds after the soldier discharged his shot. A young man appeared from the Cathedral side of Kells Walk unknown and unseen by soldiers, drew a pistol from his pocket leaned over a wall at the end of Kell’s walk and fired three shots quickly. The soldiers didn’t even recognize his presence and he disappeared. This was the only weapon I saw throughout that day. The man wore a ‘longish’ coat. He was completely separated from the main crowd even those around the barricade on Rossville Street. There was at no stage any gunfire from behind me or beside me. I am certain the revolver was fired after the troops opened fire.”

75.9 Fr O’Gara gave a similar account of this gunman in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. He added that the gunman “could not possibly have hit any troops but was possibly aiming at a Saracen car that was parked on Rossville Street about 25 yards away, I would say”.¹

75.10 It is not entirely clear from his account where Fr O’Gara put the gunman. From his viewpoint behind the rubble barricade “the Cathedral side of Kells Walk” could indicate the western side of Kells Walk. His evidence could also be interpreted as meaning that the gunman appeared between the walls of the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk. However, in view of the other evidence that we have considered above,¹ we consider this unlikely, as Corporal P and Private 017 had already gone south of these walls and other soldiers were not far away. To our minds the description Fr O’Gara gave could also apply to the wall extending south from the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk, which would put him in a position, and his firing at a time (soon after Corporal P had fired), that would correspond reasonably closely with the place and time given by Private 017. Fr O’Gara told the Widgery Inquiry that the soldiers did not see this gunman, but it remains possible that he either did not see Private 017 firing his baton gun or did not associate this with the gunman.

¹ Paragraphs 69.22–58 and Chapters 73 and 74

Marian McMenamin

75.11 Marian McMenamin was 17 at the time of Bloody Sunday. She gave a Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA) statement¹ in which she made no mention of seeing a civilian gunman, but in her written statement to this Inquiry she described running south from the junction of William Street and Rossville Street with her mother as the Army vehicles came in. Her account continued:²

“As we were running away, I saw a civilian with a gun. I hate myself for saying this; I have never told anybody about this before, not even my husband and we have been married for over 25 years. I feel disloyal to the innocent men who died on Bloody Sunday, but I did see him and I feel that the truth must now be told. The gunman was in an alleyway, near the pram ramp at the south gable end wall of Kells Walk. I have marked his approximate position on the attached map point D (grid reference K12).

The man was at ground level in the area around the pram ramps, but not actually on the pram ramp. To the best of my recollection, he had his back to the gable end wall of Kells Walk. He was young, probably in his mid to late 20s, about 5'8" tall, average build, dark hair and wearing dark clothing ($\frac{3}{4}$ black coat). He did not have his face covered with a mask or balaclava. He was on his own – there was no-one around him; he was just a single gunman. He had a quite big, squarish, hand gun in his right hand. He was holding the hand gun out in front of him, but not aiming it. I did not see him fire it. He appeared from behind the wall, walked east towards Rossville Street, looked south towards the Rossville Flats' shops and then withdrew again. I do not know where he went after that."

75.12

The part of the map on which Marian McMenemy marked point D is reproduced below.¹

75.13

In her oral evidence to this Inquiry, Marian McMenemy said that "it is still hard after 30 years to actually pinpoint" the gunman's location.¹ Initially, she told us that the gunman was in the area immediately south of the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, but she later expressed doubt about this as she would not have been able to see him if he had been in that area.² Later, she said that “quite possibly”³ he could have been in the area of the alleyway leading off Rossville Street between Glenfada Park North and Columbcille Court.

³ Day 194/211

² Day 194/207-211

75.14 Marian McMenamin marked with an arrow on the following photograph the area where she thought there was “a good possibility” she had seen the gunman.¹

75.15 She told us that the gunman was moving slowly along the wall of a block of flats with his back to it.¹ He came out towards Rossville Street but then withdrew without actually putting his foot onto Rossville Street. The wall was “much higher than him” and “sort of in a covered area”. She could only see the man from his knees upwards. On this basis it is possible that Marian McMenamin saw a gunman moving along the eastern wall of Columbcille Court and then approaching the low wall shown in this photograph from its western side.

75.16 Marian McMenamin told us that the man was confronted by a steward who told him to leave and that he would have been seen by “maybe half a dozen people”.¹

75.17 It is not surprising that Marian McMenamin cannot be precise. She had not previously spoken of the incident. She was running with her mother in a noisy, frightening and confusing situation as Army vehicles were coming south down Rossville Street. Nevertheless her accounts put a gunman close to where, according to Private 017, one appeared shortly afterwards.

Michael Lynch

75.18 Michael Lynch, who was then 16 years old and observing from the living room of a flat on the seventh floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, told us that he saw a young man with a handgun, who was wearing a three-quarter-length parka with its hood covering his head, come from the north-east side of Glenfada Park North.¹ Michael Lynch saw the gunman after the soldiers entered the Bogside and before he saw people lying on the barricade, one of whom was apparently dead. He stated that this man fired twice towards soldiers on Rossville Street by putting “his hand round the corner”.² He marked the gunman’s position with an arrow on the following photograph.³

¹ AL38.2; Day 148/231

² Day 148/189

75.19 It was suggested to Michael Lynch, who gave no statement in 1972, that he might have been confused and might in fact have seen the gunman we discussed when considering the events of Sector 2,¹ who has become known as “Father Daly’s gunman” (OIRA 4), while looking from the bedroom of the flat that overlooked the Rossville Flats car park. Michael Lynch acknowledged the possibility that he might have been looking out of the bedroom window rather than the living room window, but said that he still believed that this was not so and that he had seen the gunman when looking onto Rossville Street, though his confidence in this belief became somewhat less certain in the course of his evidence.²

² Day 148/216-219; Day 148/223-229

75.20 In our view Michael Lynch probably saw a gunman when looking onto Rossville Street. The gunman he described appears to have been dressed differently from OIRA 4; and there is some question as to whether OIRA 4 would have been visible from the flat from which Michael Lynch was watching. In addition, Michael Lynch described the gunman as having run both out of and back into an alleyway, and referred to “the speed of how quick he run out and run back again”,¹ which does not correspond to the actions of OIRA 4.

75.21 Not surprisingly, after so long Michael Lynch found it difficult to give any sort of estimate as to the length of time that passed between seeing the gunman and seeing the bodies on the rubble barricade.¹ He told us that he did not see any reaction from the soldiers but explained that he was not right up against the window so that his view was limited.² He was shown what Fr O’Gara had said about a gunman and agreed that it was possible that they were both describing the same man.³

³ Day 148/233-234

² Day 148/220

Margo Harkin

75.22 Margo Harkin also watched events in Rossville Street from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. She was in her grandmother’s fifth floor flat. She told this Inquiry that although she was not sure of the sequence of events, at a time when people were lying dead in Rossville Street, she saw two young men emerge from the alleyway separating Glenfada Park North and Columbcille Court. One of the men took a handgun from the other, “swung round the corner” and fired one unaimed shot southwards down Rossville Street.¹ Margo Harkin told us, in her written evidence to this Inquiry, that the gunman “went to the edge of the gable, ducked his head around the gable end to his right – and fired”. The gunman then appeared to return the gun to his companion.² The two young men (who Margo Harkin thought were aged between 16 and their early twenties and wearing jackets³), ran off in the direction from which they had come and then separated, the one who appeared to have the gun going to the left (towards Abbey Park) and the other to the right.⁴ According to Margo Harkin, this incident occurred as a soldier was inching his way down the eastern wall of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, and this soldier reacted to the shot by turning round.⁵ Margo Harkin remained confident, as she was questioned, that the two young men had come from, and returned along, the alleyway to the north of the pram-ramp at the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North, and not to the south of it. She was also certain that the gunman had fired in a southerly direction, not northwards.

⁴ Day 416/31-32

² AH23.17

⁵ AH23.16-17; Day 416/27

³ Day 416/25

75.23 There is no other evidence of a soldier moving or reacting to a shot in the way Margo Harkin described. However, we are of the view that she probably did at some stage see a gunman firing in Rossville Street, though it may well be that with the passage of time, her memory of the details of that sighting has become blurred. Thus whether this was the same gunman that Private 017 said that he had seen remains uncertain.

Liam Mailey

75.24 We have previously referred to some of the photographs taken by the freelance photographer Liam Mailey.¹ He recorded in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that after he had taken the photograph that we have reproduced above,² of civilians advancing over the rubble barricade in the direction of the soldiers, and before he took the six further photographs that we have numbered and reproduced above,³ he moved towards the Rossville Flats, and that as he did so he heard:⁴

“... 3 single shots which appeared to be of lower calibre than the rifle shots. They appeared to be fired from the area of Glenfada Park or Kells Walk. I cannot give the direction.”

¹ Paragraphs 69.51–56 and 70.5

³ Paragraphs 69.52–55

² Paragraph 70.5

⁴ M50.57-58

75.25 During his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Liam Mailey said that the sound of low calibre shots came from Kells Walk but “possibly in a built-up area it could have come from somewhere else”.¹

75.26 According to Liam Mailey’s evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, therefore, these shots were fired at a relatively early stage, before he took the photographs of Private 017 at the corner of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk, and before other soldiers arrived at the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk.

75.27 Liam Mailey did not mention these shots in his 1972 Sunday Times and NICRA interviews.¹ In his written evidence to this Inquiry he told us that he recalled hearing approximately three or four low calibre shots, but he could not remember exactly when he heard them or where he was when he did so. He told us that he thought that these shots came from the area of either Glenfada Park North or the southern end of Columbcille Court, with the latter being perhaps more likely.² Liam Mailey was unable to assist further during his oral evidence,³ and said that he considered his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry to be his most accurate account.⁴

Consideration of the evidence of a gunman in Rossville Street

75.28 Our consideration of the evidence we have set out above leads us to conclude that Liam Mailey heard shots fired by a civilian gunman, and that Lieutenant Colonel INQ 1383 and the civilian witnesses saw a civilian gunman, on the western side of Rossville Street after the soldiers had come in.

75.29 There are differences in the accounts of a gunman that the witnesses have given. Private 017 described the gunman as a young man of normal build, wearing a blue shirt and a dark jacket. Colonel INQ 1383 thought that the gunman might have been wearing a raincoat. Fr O’Gara described the man as young and wearing a “longish” coat. Marian McMenamin described the gunman as young, probably in his mid or late twenties, of average build, with dark hair and wearing a dark three-quarter-length coat. Michael Lynch described the gunman as a young man wearing a three-quarter-length parka with its hood covering his head. Margo Harkin described two young men wearing jackets, one of whom took a handgun from the other and fired southwards down Rossville Street. There are also differences between the accounts of the witnesses as to when and where the gunman appeared.

75.30 The differences between, and in some case within, the various accounts do not in our view establish that there was more than one gunman operating at the time and in the area of Rossville Street under consideration. The confusion, noise and panic created by the arrival of the soldiers, the short time during which the witnesses caught a glimpse of a gunman, the different viewpoints of the witnesses, and the fact that in most cases the witness was trying to recollect something seen decades ago, could well explain these differences. It could also be the case, for example, that Margo Harkin saw the same gunman as described by other witnesses but at a later stage. At the same time, we cannot reject the possibility that the witnesses were describing more than one gunman, though with the exception perhaps of Margo Harkin, we consider it more likely than not that they were describing the same man.

- 75.31 Much of this evidence supports the account that Private 017 gave of encountering a man with a handgun who shortly afterwards fired his weapon. Although his misguided attempt to support Corporal P's account of shooting a nail bomber leads us to treat Private 017's evidence with caution, in the end we are sure that he did, as he described, encounter a man with a handgun after Corporal P had fired. We are also sure that this gunman then fired one or more shots, possibly at Private 017.
- 75.32 We should note one further matter. With the exception of Colonel INQ 1383, no other soldier has given evidence of seeing a gunman at or about the same time and place as Private 017. There is thus nothing to suggest that this incident had anything to do with what happened very soon afterwards, when soldiers in Rossville Street fired towards the rubble barricade and killed people at or near that barricade.
- 75.33 No-one has admitted being the gunman discussed in the previous paragraphs, nor has either the Official or the Provisional IRA accepted that it could have been any of its members. We do not know who this gunman was.

- 76.1

For the reasons that we gave when discussing the events of Sector 2,¹ we consider it probable that Private 112, a baton gunner, disembarked from Sergeant O's APC when it briefly stopped in Rossville Street. After this he assisted Private U in the arrest of Charles Canning and then took up a position at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

- 76.2

In his RMP statement,¹ in which he did not mention being involved in the arrest of Charles Canning, Private 112 recorded that he took up a position at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and fired a number of baton rounds to disperse rioters, but he did not specify which corner, or where the rioters were located.

- 76.3

In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ he told us that he went first to the north-east corner of Block 1 and from there fired baton rounds towards stone-throwers who had emerged from the passage between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. Then he moved to the north-west corner of Block 1. A group of men advanced towards him from the rubble barricade, throwing bricks and rubble. He fired, on his estimate, about six baton rounds in their direction. They retreated and dispersed.

- 76.4

Private 112 also told us that as soon as he reached the north-west corner of Block 1 he noticed a body lying on top of the rubble barricade, apparently unconscious or dead.¹ This appears to indicate that he did not fire baton rounds towards the group of men who advanced from the rubble barricade until after at least one person had been shot at the barricade. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he could not remember whether he fired these baton rounds before or after he saw the body. We are left in doubt as to when Private 112 fired these baton rounds.

² Day 320/112

Lance Corporal 018

76.5 This soldier was a member of Anti-Tank Platoon who probably travelled in the last of the vehicles to enter the Bogside, ie the APC commanded by Sergeant INQ 1694.

76.6 In his RMP statement timed at 1915 hours on 4th February 1972,¹ Lance Corporal 018 recorded that he was armed only with a baton gun. He stated that after disembarkation he was initially positioned “ten metres south of the north east corner of a Block of Flats, against the east wall. The flats were situated forty metres west of the junction Eden Place, Rossville Street.”

76.7 On the basis of this description it would seem that Lance Corporal 018 was initially a short distance down from the northern end of the Kells Walk flats.

76.8 Lance Corporal 018 recorded in his RMP statement that while he was in this position he was:¹

“... fired on by a gunman located on the ground beside the doorway to Block 1 of Rossville Flats, near the south west corner of the block. I did not see anyone engage this gunman as he was operating from behind a crowd of people at a barricade.

The gunman’s shots fell short of my position by about twenty metres and nearly hit a camera crew who immediately ran to cover. I am unable to describe the gunman.”

76.9 Lance Corporal 018's RMP statement continued:¹

"I then moved my position by the Block of Flats and took up a similar position by the south east corner of the same block. From this position I fired at the crowd behind the barricade. The distance was about 120 metres and the direction south. The barricade was positioned near to the southern end of Block 1 of Rossville Flats and stretched across Rossville Street.

I moved positions again and took up a position behind the north east corner of a block of flats in Glenfada Park. The Block was situated about fifty metres west of block 1, Rossville Flats. I fired one baton round from this position at a woman who emptied liquid from a glass jar onto troops below. The round must have been weak because it did not reach the flats. I fired a further round from this position at people behind the barricade. I did not see a strike on any occasion."

76.10 Lance Corporal 018 gave written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ but was too unwell to give oral evidence. He told us that his recollection now differed from what was in his RMP statement; and that he believed that the latter contained some details that were not accurate and that some of the incidents were out of sequence.² He stated that he initially took up position at the northern end of Kells Walk, and lost contact with the rest of his platoon, whom he thought had moved to the other (western) side of Kells Walk.³ He made no mention of firing his baton gun before he fired at the woman in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, which in this statement he told us that he did from a position at the southern end of Kells Walk.⁴ He also recorded in this statement that (while he was still on his own) he fired a further baton round from the same position towards the rubble barricade in order to try to repel a group of people that had gathered on the south side of the barricade, some of whom were starting to throw pieces of rubble. He stated that he aimed this baton round at the ground in front of the barricade, in order not to hit anyone directly.⁵ Lance Corporal 018 then told this Inquiry that:

“Shortly after I fired the round, I noticed the group of men on the side of the Barricade nearest to Block 1 of the Flats move towards the middle of the Barricade ... Then a gunman appeared from the doorway at the (southwest) corner of Block 1 of the Flats. His approximate position is marked ‘F’ on the map (grid reference J16). I would estimate that he was a man in his mid 30’s. He was wearing dark clothing and, I think, a casual jacket. He was not wearing any head gear or a mask. He came out quickly from the doorway and fired two shots in quick succession from a weapon which looked like an M1 Carbine. He did not have time to get into a really steady position and I do not think the shots were aimed at any particular target. I do not think he was aiming at me, but the shots were fired in the general direction (northwards) up Rossville Street. After the shots were fired, the man moved quickly back into the doorway of the Flats and I did not see him again.”

⁴ B1491.005

² B1491.004

⁵ B1491.002

³ B1491.001

76.11 The position marked “F” on Lance Corporal 018’s map was at the south-western end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹ Lance Corporal 018 told us that as far as he could recall, there were no other soldiers in the area around him when the shots were fired and that he did not remember hearing any other gunfire at about the same time.²

² B1491.002

76.12 As to his RMP statement, Lance Corporal 018 told us that the details he gave of the gunman “are not quite as I remember them”. He told us that his recollection was that he was behind the low wall at the southern end of Kells Walk when he saw the gunman; and that he did not remember seeing the gunman’s shots falling short of his position. “I do remember seeing a camera crew running for cover, but I recall that they did so as a result of shots fired before the incident involving the gunman at the door of the Flats.” He explained that at the time he made his RMP statement, “I had so many images flashing through my mind that I could not give any details as to description”.¹

76.13 So far as his baton gun firing is concerned, it is far from clear at what stage Lance Corporal 018 fired any of his rounds. In his written statement to this Inquiry he told us that the reason he fired at the woman was not that she was pouring something from the window, but rather for her own protection, since by then he had heard live fire.¹ In view of what he had recorded in his RMP statement, it is difficult to accept this explanation.

76.14 We also find it difficult to accept his accounts of seeing a gunman. According to his RMP statement, the shots the gunman fired “nearly hit a camera crew, who immediately ran to cover”.¹ We have no evidence from any other source that this happened. If Lance Corporal 018 was at the northern end of Kells Walk, while there was still a crowd at the rubble barricade, there must have been soldiers of his platoon, or Composite Platoon, or both platoons in front of him. The account Lance Corporal 018 gave in his written statement to this Inquiry was to the effect that he was on his own when he saw the gunman and further south on Rossville Street. However, as will become clear in this report, by the time Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers had moved from Rossville Street, the rubble barricade was deserted or virtually deserted and remained so thereafter.

76.15 In his RMP statement Lance Corporal 018 recorded that he was unable to describe the gunman. This statement was given on 5th February 1972, and we find unconvincing Lance Corporal 018’s explanation for why he was unable at that time to give the detailed description he provided to us.

76.16 We did not have the opportunity to question Lance Corporal 018 about these matters. It is possible that what he had recorded in 1972 related to an incident, which we consider later in this report,¹ in which at a late stage a gunman fired a handgun from the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and that over the years his recollection of events has become distorted. In the end we concluded that we should place no reliance on Lance Corporal 018’s account of seeing a gunman. We have no reason to doubt that he fired his baton gun, though we have no other evidence about the round that he stated that he fired at a woman in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, or the further round that he said that he fired at people behind the rubble barricade, nor is it clear at what stage he fired any of his rounds.

76.17 Private 017, Private 112 and Lance Corporal 018 are the only soldiers who gave evidence in 1972 that they had fired baton guns towards the rubble barricade. In his written statement to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 010, a member of Composite Platoon (Guinness Force) who travelled in the second of the two lorries of that platoon, told us that he fired a baton round at the rubble barricade.¹ However, he had not mentioned doing so in his RMP statement,² and in his oral evidence to us³ he said that he thought that his recollection that he had fired a baton round was incorrect. In these circumstances we consider it unlikely that Lance Corporal 010 fired his baton gun on Bloody Sunday.

Chapter 77: The injury to Seamus Liddy

77.1 Seamus (or James) Liddy was 49 at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was arrested on Bloody Sunday. He is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

77.2 Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team interviewed Seamus Liddy on 18th May 1972. According to the note of the interview, in which his age is incorrectly noted as 43, Seamus Liddy ran into Glenfada Park when the Army entered the Bogside. The note continues:¹

“There was a group standing by the gable and he went over to it. He could see a soldier across near the barricade, standing at the bottom of the Rossville flats. The soldier fired a rubber bullet which hit Liddy in the chest close to his heart. He is not a strong man, is 43, and it hurt him badly. He was helped by his brother Barry and Fr Bradley. The next thing he saw was a group bending over the body of Michael Kelly...”

77.3 In his Keville interview,¹ Seamus Liddy had made no reference to this incident, claiming instead that the Army had detained him in William Street while he was on his way to work. It is likely that since he was at that time employed as a bar steward in the NAAFI (the bar run by the Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes) at Fort George,² he was concerned at the time of that interview not to admit that he had been among the crowd in Glenfada Park North or in the area of the rubble barricade.

² AL12.5-6

77.4 There is other evidence to confirm that Seamus Liddy received an injury from a baton round. His brother Barry Liddy, who was 45 years old at the time and who is also dead, did not make a statement to this Inquiry, but mentioned the incident in his Keville interview.¹ In an undated handwritten statement, Barry Liddy recorded that while he was at “the Gable End house” in Glenfada Park, someone shouted that his brother had been shot. He went to where a crowd had gathered and found his brother in a distressed condition. He helped him into the shelter of the houses and discovered that a baton round had struck him.²

² AL13.3; AL13.7

77.5 Paddy Doherty, who was accompanied on the march by his brother-in-law Joseph Donnelly, said in his written statement to this Inquiry that he was standing just out from the south-east corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North when he saw a “quite short and stocky” soldier with a rubber bullet gun step out from the northern end of that block. The soldier “made to fire” his baton gun whereupon everyone ducked or made for cover, but an older man behind Paddy Doherty, whose name he later heard was Liddy, was not fast enough and was hit in the chest by a rubber bullet when the soldier fired. He fell to the ground on the western side of Rossville Street just south of the entrance to Glenfada Park North. When Paddy Doherty offered assistance, Seamus Liddy said not to worry about him as a young man had been more badly hurt. Seamus Liddy was pointing to Michael Kelly when he said this.¹ Paddy Doherty mentioned the incident briefly in his NICRA statement of 1st February 1972² and also in his oral evidence to this Inquiry.³

77.6 Joseph Donnelly told us in his written statement to this Inquiry that he saw Seamus Liddy standing just south of the wall at the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, hunched over in some pain, and receiving assistance from two men. He recalled that Seamus Liddy had said that a baton round had hit him in the chest.¹ The incident is briefly mentioned in Joseph Donnelly’s NICRA statement² and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry.³

77.7 In a statement dated 23rd February 1972, John O’Kane recorded that he saw Seamus Liddy in terrible agony, standing with the help of people around him who were opening his collar and tie. John O’Kane recorded that he saw blood coming from Seamus Liddy’s front and heard that a baton round had hit him; and that this happened before the shooting of Michael Kelly.¹ In a supplementary written statement to this Inquiry, John O’Kane told us that he no longer remembered this incident, although he had “a vague recollection” of Seamus Liddy being there.² In his oral evidence, he said that “As far as I remember” he came across a man in Glenfada Park who had been shot with a rubber bullet.³

² AO48.32

77.8 On the basis of this evidence we are sure that Seamus Liddy was hit by a baton round when he was behind the rubble barricade and near the entrance to Glenfada Park North. This incident seems to have occurred just before Michael Kelly was shot and mortally injured near the rubble barricade.

77.9 Seamus Liddy himself, in his interview with Peter Pringle, attributed the baton round to a soldier “standing at the bottom of the Rossville flats”. Paddy Doherty, in his evidence to us, described the soldier stepping out and firing from the northern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. In our view the account given by Seamus Liddy in 1972 is the more likely to be correct. It will have been seen from our discussion of the movements of Corporal P and Private 017¹ that although the latter fired his baton gun towards the rubble barricade, he may have been too far from the barricade for his baton round to be travelling with sufficient force to cause Seamus Liddy to fall. As to Lance Corporal 018, it is difficult to tell from his accounts, to which we have referred in the previous chapter,² where he was when he fired his baton gun.

² Paragraphs 76.5–17

77.10 In these circumstances we have concluded that it is likely, though far from certain, that the baton round that hit Seamus Liddy was fired by Private 112 from the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He was the closest baton gunner in Sector 3 to the rioting near the rubble barricade. The distance between the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and the area where Seamus Liddy was hit was within, though at about the limit, of the effective range for a baton gun. There is nothing to suggest that Private 112 deliberately targeted Seamus Liddy; and we consider that this soldier may well (as he said) have been attempting to deter the advance of rioters beyond the rubble barricade. In our view the use of a baton gun for this purpose cannot fairly be criticised.

Chapter 78: The injury to Mary Smith

78.1 Mary Smith, who was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday, was watching events outside from the larger of the two windows of the sitting room of her mother's flat at 2 Kells Walk.¹ This was the southernmost window on the first floor on the eastern side of the block, facing Rossville Street and the Eden Place waste ground. The window can be seen in the following photograph.

78.2 In her written statement to this Inquiry, Mary Smith (now Mary Breslin) said that after the soldiers entered Rossville Street, a foreign photographer arrived in the flat and went to the smaller, more northerly window of the sitting room. Someone in the flat warned that a soldier was pointing a gun up at the flat. Mary Smith heard a bang and was hit on the left side of her face and in her left eye by flying glass. She did not think that anyone had been doing anything at either window to attract attention. Mary Smith was admitted to hospital and underwent an operation. She lost the sight in her left eye for a week or so.¹

78.3 Mary Smith's aunt, the late Kathleen Kelly, confirmed the substance of this account in her written evidence to this Inquiry, although she did not make a distinction between the two windows of the sitting room. Kathleen Kelly was in the room with her niece. She recalled that her sister had shouted out of the window to some soldiers "Leave them wee 'uns alone" and that a journalist had been trying to take photographs from the window. She then saw a soldier fire his gun from the western side of Rossville Street beneath the window of the flat. She believed that he had fired a baton round because the whole window was smashed.¹

78.4 Brian Power, a self-confessed “well known rioter”,¹ was also in the sitting room at 2 Kells Walk. In his written evidence to this Inquiry, he said that an officer was talking to a Corporal “in the area of the wall where there was a ramp up from Rossville Street”. The officer pointed to the window of the flat, obviously saying something to the soldier, who then swivelled around, aimed at the window and fired a baton round, which shattered the glass.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Brian Power said that no-one had been throwing anything out of the windows of the room and that he was not sure whether the photographer had been using his camera at the time when the baton round was fired.³

² AP18.4

78.5 Maura Power, Brian Power’s girlfriend at the time and later his wife, was in the room as well. She told us that as the photographer went to the window to take photographs, a rubber bullet was fired and the glass broken. She did not see the soldier who fired the baton round.¹

78.6 Damien Friel recorded in his NICRA statement¹ that he entered 2 Kells Walk as the soldiers were advancing down Rossville Street. From the flat he also saw soldiers in Rossville Street apprehend a young man. In our view this was William John Dillon. Damien Friel stated that a “French cameraman” stepped out onto the balcony overlooking Rossville Street. A soldier holding a baton gun was standing beside a Sergeant at the back of an Army vehicle along with three other soldiers. The Sergeant grabbed the soldier with the baton gun by the left arm, turned him towards the balcony and pointed at the cameraman. The soldier fired one baton round, which missed the cameraman by about a foot, smashed the window, hit the window frame and bounced back into the street. The broken glass severely cut the face of a girl in the room.

78.7 Damien Friel also described this incident in his written evidence to this Inquiry, in which he said that the cameraman “kept trying to look out of the window”. He said that before the baton round was fired people in the flat had implored the cameraman to come away from the window in case he drew fire. Damien Friel said that the soldier who fired the baton round had been standing near an Army vehicle just short of the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats.¹ In his oral evidence, he said that he was “not too sure” whether the cameraman was at the window or outside, but that his NICRA statement, in which he had stated that the cameraman was on the balcony, was more likely to be correct.²

² Day 159/147-148

78.8 The only soldier who has given evidence that he fired a baton round at a window in Kells Walk is Corporal 039 of Composite Platoon. In his RMP statement, he recorded that:¹

“... a first floor window opened in ... about the centre of the block and two women appeared and started to throw missiles at us. There was also one man in the window who had a camera and was trying to take photographs of us...”

¹ B1640

78.9 He stated that he fired a baton round in the direction of the window in order to clear the people away from it. When the smoke from the discharge cleared, he saw a hole in the main pane of the window, to the left centre. The three people had disappeared. Within a few seconds a figure appeared to move across in front of the window and pick someone up from the floor. Corporal 039 could then see a female figure being supported by another person, holding her hands to her face, having apparently been struck by the baton round.¹

78.10 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal 039 recorded that “on a balcony I saw two women who were shouting at us and throwing missiles”, whereas in his RMP statement he had said that a window opened and “two women appeared and started to throw missiles at us”. He recorded in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that a man was “taking photographs from the balcony”, whereas in his RMP statement he had said that the man “in the window ... was trying to take photographs”. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry he continued, “She and the others were in the room rather than out on the edge of the balcony”. He stated that he fired the baton round after having moved forward to an APC parked in Rossville Street “by the building fronting Columbcille Court”, that is Kells Walk. He also stated that when he raised his baton gun and took aim, one of the women began to close the window.

78.11 Corporal 039's recollection of the incident was less clear in his written evidence to this Inquiry. He stated:¹

"Something about the window caught my attention although it is difficult now to say what it was. Whatever it was I saw, I must have considered it to be a threat. Someone may have been throwing something out of this window."

78.12 He told us that he had no reason to doubt the accuracy of the statements that he had made at the time.¹ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal 039 said that he now had no recollection of seeing women throwing missiles or of anyone attempting to take photographs, but that he would stand by the statements that he made in 1972.²

² Day 362/60-61

78.13 Private M, who was providing cover for Corporal 039, did not mention this incident in either of his two RMP statements or in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ He was not asked about it in the course of his oral evidence to Lord Widgery, nor was any other military witness. In his written evidence to this Inquiry, he told us only that he recalled that a woman at one of the windows in Kells Walk screamed abuse at them.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private M said that he could not remember whether anything had been thrown or pointed out of the window, nor could he recall Corporal 039 firing his baton gun. He resisted the suggestion that he could not have failed to be aware of the incident at the time,³ and denied that he would have attempted to protect Corporal 039 by failing to mention the matter to the RMP or to the solicitor who took his statement on behalf of the Widgery Inquiry.⁴ We are not persuaded that Private M's failure to mention the incident in 1972 or his present apparently meagre memory about it was motivated by an effort to protect Corporal 039. It appears not to have been treated as a major issue in 1972 and, although Mary Smith's injuries were not minor, the incident was overshadowed by what happened when soldiers opened fire with live rounds.

³ Day 365/69

² B372.004

⁴ Day 365/75

78.14 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Colour Sergeant 002 of Composite Platoon told us that people "on the balconies of Kells Walk" were shouting abuse at the soldiers.¹ He did not mention that missiles had been thrown.

- 78.15 Despite some inconsistencies in the evidence, we are sure that Corporal 039 fired the baton round that caused Mary Smith to be injured by flying glass. A photographer, who has not been identified, was either taking photographs or trying to do so before the baton round was fired. There is no suggestion that his camera was mistaken for a weapon. Kathleen Kelly acknowledged that her sister shouted at the soldiers, although the reported remark was hardly abusive. The evidence of Kathleen Kelly, Brian Power and Corporal 039 himself indicates that the baton round was fired from somewhere on the western side of Rossville Street, not far from the window and thus at relatively close range. Damien Friel's evidence that it was fired from the waste ground is in our view mistaken. Brian Power and Damien Friel appear independently to have recalled that a more senior soldier had pointed out the window of the flat to the soldier who fired the baton round. Corporal 039 has, however, never suggested that he fired other than on his own initiative. If someone pointed out the window to him, his identity remains unknown.
- 78.16 Corporal 039's assertion in his RMP statement that two women had been throwing missiles from the window before he fired and that he fired towards the window to clear the people away from it is diminished by his later statement for the Widgery Inquiry, in which he said that before he fired one of them began to close the window. Additionally, in the latter statement he recorded both that they and the photographer were on the balcony and that they were in the room. It is also difficult to accept that two middle-aged mothers, one with her children present, the other being concerned about her marching son,¹ would take the lead in throwing missiles at soldiers when there were youths, one being a well-known rioter, in the room. At most, it seems to us that one of the women was shouting at the soldiers. General Ford's Internal Security Instruction 1/71² dated 15th October 1971 sanctioned the use of baton rounds, subject to the proviso that the minimum force must be used at all times to achieve the immediate aim. The annex to the 8th Infantry Brigade Operational Directive No 4/71 dated 10th November 1971 governing the use of internal security weapons³ indicates that baton rounds were primarily used for crowd control, that they were best fired in salvos, and that they were normally to be fired towards the ground since they could cause severe injury if fired directly at the crowd.

² G20.148

78.17 In our view Corporal 039 was not justified in firing this baton round nor could he have believed that he was. According to the account that he gave to the Widgery Inquiry, the act of raising his baton gun had had the desired effect, even if, which we are not persuaded was the case, the women had been throwing things. The fact that one of the women was shouting at the soldiers, even to the extent of screaming abuse, could not have justified firing a baton round at them.

Chapter 79: Joseph Lynn and the incident in the derelict building

79.1 Just after members of Composite Platoon debussed in Rossville Street, Lance Corporal 229 and Private L became involved in an incident in a derelict building on Rossville Street, where Joseph Lynn had sought refuge.

79.2 Joseph Lynn, who was then 18 years old and lived in Strabane, told us that he entered a building on the western side of Rossville Street immediately to the north of Kells Walk to take cover.¹ He identified it on the following photograph by the letter A, with an arrow pointing to the building.²

79.3 According to Joseph Lynn, after going into the derelict building, he climbed to the top of an interior wall, where a soldier later found him. According to his account, one soldier with black camouflage on his face came into the building, saw Joseph Lynn and told him to get down. Hoping to be left alone, Joseph Lynn said that he could not get down. The soldier said something to the effect of “Get down or I’ll effing shoot you down” and then fired a shot with his rifle. Joseph Lynn felt something pass through his hair. Although not certain, he told us that he now believes that this can only have been a bullet. The soldier shouted at him again and fired another shot, and again Joseph Lynn felt something pass through his hair. Joseph Lynn then jumped down and the soldier pulled him outside and stood him against a wall to the north of the building.¹ Joseph Lynn insisted that two shots were fired at him and that there was only one soldier in the building.

79.4 Joseph Lynn was arrested and taken to Fort George. He told us that there he and other prisoners were mistreated. We deal with allegations of mistreatment at Fort George later in this report.¹

79.5 Joseph Lynn stated that Lance Corporal 229 identified him at Fort George as a man whom he had arrested.¹ He told us that he learned the name of Lance Corporal 229 when they were photographed together. Joseph Lynn, however, thought that Lance Corporal 229 was not the arresting soldier, as that soldier had been the same height as he was, whereas Lance Corporal 229 only came up to his shoulder.² The photograph taken at Fort George shows that although Lance Corporal 229 was substantially shorter than Joseph Lynn, it was not accurate to say that he only came up to Joseph Lynn's shoulder.

79.6 In his RMP statement of 15th February 1972,¹ Lance Corporal 229 recorded that Composite Platoon (Guinness Force), of which he was a member, disembarked from its vehicles “near Barrier 14, in Little James Street”. He was in the first of the two lorries of this platoon. He stated that shortly before he disembarked, he saw a youth, who he later learned was Joseph Lynn, run “from one side of the road to the other, to the other side of the barricade”. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Lance Corporal 229 told us that he believed that the references to “Barrier 14” and “the barricade” in his RMP statement should both have been references to Barrier 12. In our view he was right about this.

79.7 According to his RMP statement, Lance Corporal 229 chased Joseph Lynn and found him in a deserted building with a burned-out car inside. Joseph Lynn had climbed into the rafters. Lance Corporal 229 ordered him to come down three times, by which time Private L had arrived in the building. Joseph Lynn jumped down and was arrested. Lance Corporal 229 took him from the building and he “was almost immediately handed over to members of Guinness Force”.¹

¹ B2208

79.8 Lance Corporal 229 recorded in his RMP statement that he identified Joseph Lynn at Fort George and was photographed with him.¹

79.9 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal 229 told us that after debussing “We were all very disorientated” and he was “frightened”. He told us that he followed Joseph Lynn into an old building that might have been a burned-out garage. He ordered Joseph Lynn to get down from the rafters at least twice and then noticed that Private L had come into the building. Private L shouted to Joseph Lynn to come down and at the same time fired an unaimed shot into the roof above Joseph Lynn; a shot that Lance Corporal 229 stated that he thought was intended as a warning. When it was fired Joseph Lynn immediately started to come down from the rafters.¹

79.10 Lance Corporal 229 told us that his only explanation for his omission to refer to Private L’s warning shot in his RMP statement was that the investigator did not ask him about it.¹ He said that he would not have withheld the information in order to protect Private L. In his oral evidence² he denied that he and Private L had made an agreement that neither would refer to the shot.

² Day 341/44

79.11 In his RMP statement,¹ Private L, a member of Composite Platoon who had travelled in the second of the two lorries of that platoon, recorded that he was in a derelict building at the side of Rossville Street and saw “a man climbing along the rooftops”. He arrested the man at gunpoint and took him back to the battalion arrest team. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Private L stated that after he debussed he saw two men on the roof of the Rossville Flats and that the crowd in Rossville Street was throwing stones and bottles sporadically. He and another soldier took cover in a derelict building, where they heard a noise in the rafters and some rubble fell from the apex of the roof. They shouted to a man in the rafters to come down. The man stood up and said that he could not come down. Private L cocked his weapon, which he stated he had not done until that stage, and the man jumped down. Private L’s oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry³ was to the same effect. He said that he and the other soldier took the man away.

¹ B312

² B320

79.12 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private L told us that he saw a number of rioters run into a derelict building, which, in his oral evidence,² he identified as being the same building that Joseph Lynn had indicated. He recalled that some of the rioters ran out of the back of the building but that one man stayed up in the rafters. When that man dropped to the ground, Private L grabbed him, took him from the building and handed him over to soldiers at an APC. In this statement, he told us that he had cocked his weapon before he reached Rossville Street, but that he did not take the safety catch off when he was with the man in the derelict building. Private L told us that he had only “the vaguest recollection” of another soldier being present, and could not remember who this might have been. Private L stated that there was “no way” that he fired a shot at the man when he pointed his gun at him, a position he reiterated in his oral evidence to us.³ In that evidence, he said that he, and not Lance Corporal 229, took the man from the building. When shown Joseph Lynn’s arrest photograph, Private L said he could not recognise Joseph Lynn as the man in the building, or Lance Corporal 229 as the soldier in the building with him.⁴

³ Day 381/17

² Day 381/16

⁴ Day 381/22-23

79.13 We are sure that Joseph Lynn was the man in the derelict building and was arrested there. The first question is whether a soldier fired at Joseph Lynn, as both he and (when he gave evidence to us but not in 1972) Lance Corporal 229 have said.

79.14 As will have been seen, Lance Corporal 229 identified that soldier as Private L.

79.15 In a statement made on 5th February 1972 in the form of an RMP statement,¹ Captain 200 (the Platoon Commander) recorded that when Composite Platoon returned to Clarence Avenue at the end of the operation, he immediately ordered an ammunition check and conducted preliminary questioning of those who had fired their weapons. In relation to Private L, he recorded the following as one of four shots fired by this soldier:

“1 x 7.62 in rafters of ruin 43281696 at possible sniper in roof – deliberate miss after two warnings to come down. Man jumped down from roof (15 feet) and was arrested. Roof not searched for weapons.”

¹ B1982-1983. Captain 200 told us that he had not made or signed a formal RMP statement but had written up his own account (B2022.040) which he had given to the Adjutant; and that this was later typed up on an RMP statement form. For convenience, we refer hereafter to this statement as Captain 200’s RMP statement.

79.16 The grid reference corresponds to the derelict building on Rossville Street immediately north of Kells Walk. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 confirmed that this information could only have come from Private L. Lance Corporal 229 said that he did not give this information to Captain 200.²

² Day 341/116-119

79.17 In our view the statement made by Captain 200 on 5th February 1972 supports the evidence of Lance Corporal 229 that Private L fired one shot in the derelict building before the arrest of Joseph Lynn. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private L maintained that he did not fire a shot into the rafters of the derelict building, and was unable to explain how Captain 200 came to record that he had done so. He denied that he had decided to pretend that he did not fire the shot after having realised that it was unjustifiable. In our view Private L was not telling us the truth. We are sure that he did tell Captain 200 that he had fired a shot as recorded in the latter's RMP statement. This and the evidence of Lance Corporal 229 and Joseph Lynn satisfy us that Private L fired in the derelict building.

79.18 The second question is whether Private L fired only one shot, or two as Joseph Lynn told us.

79.19 As we are of the view that Private L told Captain 200 that he had fired one shot in the derelict building, we think it unlikely that in fact he had fired two, as it would not have served Private L any useful purpose to conceal one shot while admitting the other. For that reason, we accept the evidence of Lance Corporal 229 that Private L fired one shot rather than the evidence of Joseph Lynn that the soldier who arrested him fired two shots.

79.20 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 229 told us that Private L came into the building carrying his rifle pointing upwards, and that Private L "shouted to Lynn to come down and shot at the same time. The shot was not an aimed shot and it was not aimed at Lynn ... the shot was a warning to Lynn..." That Lance Corporal 229 viewed it as a warning shot is consistent with the description of the shot in Captain 200's RMP statement as a "deliberate miss". Although Joseph Lynn said that he felt something pass through his hair when the soldier fired, we are not persuaded of this. Joseph Lynn did not suggest that the soldier had attempted to kill him. In our view an aimed shot at that short range could not have missed the target. When Joseph Lynn was asked whether the soldier could have missed if he had been shooting to kill, he said “At that range he would have probably took me off at the waist”.²

² Day 193/13

79.21 In these circumstances we are satisfied that Private L intended his shot as a warning to Joseph Lynn and to encourage him to climb down, and that he did not intend to hit Joseph Lynn. The Yellow Card (which we have discussed elsewhere in this report¹ and which set out the circumstances in which soldiers were entitled to open fire) required that a soldier should not fire more rounds than absolutely necessary.² Private L agreed that there had been no need to fire at the man in the rafters of the derelict building.³ Lance Corporal 229 said that he did not believe that Joseph Lynn presented any form of threat and that if Joseph Lynn had not come down from the rafters, he would have gone up himself and brought him down.⁴

¹ Paragraphs 8.121–123

³ Day 381/17

² ED71.1-2

⁴ Day 341/35

79.22 Private L’s shot in the derelict building was in our view unjustified and contrary to the Yellow Card.

79.23 There is nothing in Major Loden’s List of Engagements¹ that corresponds with the shot fired by Private L in the derelict building.

79.24 The third question relates to the identity of the soldier who arrested Joseph Lynn.

79.25 Lance Corporal 229 and Private L both claimed to have arrested him. Joseph Lynn’s evidence is that only one soldier was involved in his arrest and that this soldier was different from, and taller than, either Lance Corporal 229 or Private L. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Joseph Lynn said that he was as sure as he could be that this soldier was white, although his face was blackened. Joseph Lynn was about 5ft 11in tall and, on his evidence, the soldier who arrested him was about the same height.¹ If this evidence is accurate, it would exclude both Lance Corporal 229, who was 5ft 8in tall,² and Private L, who was not white, did not wear camouflage paint, and was only 5ft 7in tall.³ The implication of Joseph Lynn’s evidence, if accurate, is therefore that an unknown third soldier arrested him and that the incidents described by Lance Corporal 229 and Private L were either invented or related to the arrest of someone else.

³ B342; B346; Day 381/2

² Day 341/76

- 79.26 It seems to us that Joseph Lynn may have become confused about the height of the soldier because of a newspaper photograph he had seen after Bloody Sunday,¹ which showed him standing against a wall after being arrested, with a soldier of approximately the same height standing at his back. It is possible that the photograph in question was the first of the two shown below (taken by the Daily Mail photographer Jeffrey Morris) and that Joseph Lynn is the individual seen on the far left, who can also be seen beside a soldier in the second photograph (taken by Constable A Brown of the RUC).

79.27 If Joseph Lynn mistakenly believed that the soldier who stood behind him at the wall was the soldier who had arrested him, it is possible that the photograph that he saw caused him to reach an erroneous conclusion about the height of the soldier who arrested him. In any event, it is our view that Joseph Lynn was mistaken both in his belief that the soldier who arrested him was alone and about the height of that soldier. On the basis of the evidence we have considered above we are satisfied that Lance Corporal 229 and Private L arrested Joseph Lynn.

79.28 The last question is whether Joseph Lynn's arrest was justified.

79.29 The justification for the arrest given by Lance Corporal 229 in a statement made at Fort George that evening was that he had seen Joseph Lynn throwing stones. This statement is the only evidence that Joseph Lynn was seen engaging in such activity. There is nothing about Joseph Lynn throwing stones in Lance Corporal 229's RMP statement made on 15th February 1972.¹ In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Lance Corporal 229 told us that he went after a man who he had seen run into a derelict building and no longer recalled whether he had seen that man throwing stones or whether someone told him that this is what he had been doing. Nor could he recall whether he was ordered to go after Joseph Lynn or whether he did so of his own accord. Lance Corporal 229 stated that people had been throwing stones when the soldiers arrived in the area and that Joseph Lynn "may have been" one of them.

79.30 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 229 said that he would not have been able to make out the features of individuals because he was wearing a respirator. He said that he was sure that he had not seen Joseph Lynn doing anything wrong. When asked why he chased after Joseph Lynn, Lance Corporal 229 said that he had "probably been told to go and get him", although he did not remember being told this. He also said that it was possible that he had simply gone after anyone whom he could catch. In his RMP statement,² Lance Corporal 229 recorded that he chased Joseph Lynn and found him in the derelict building and that Private L joined him in the building at a later stage. In Lance Corporal 229's written statement to this Inquiry³ he told us the same, although there and in his oral evidence,⁴ he acknowledged that it was possible that he only entered the derelict building for cover and caught sight of Joseph Lynn once he was inside it.

³ B2211.004-005

² B2208

⁴ Day 341/32

79.31 That possibility would be consistent with Private L's written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and with his oral evidence to that Inquiry,² in which he said that he and another soldier entered the building to take cover, and then heard a noise and realised that there was someone in the rafters. This account by Private L, however, is inconsistent with his written statement to this Inquiry³ and with his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ in which he said that he followed rioters into the building. Because of the time lapse and certain personal difficulties that Private L has undergone in the interim, we prefer the accounts that he gave in 1972 to his more recent ones, though even the former give rise to problems.

¹ B320

⁴ Day 381/15

79.32 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Joseph Lynn told us that he thought that the soldier who arrested him had not followed him into the building, but was just checking the area. Joseph Lynn denied that he threw any stones.²

² AL39.8; Day 193/38-39

79.33 Lance Corporal D, a member of Composite Platoon, recorded in his RMP statement¹ that after disembarking from his vehicle, he was given an arrested youth to look after, who told him that his name was Finn and that he had "become mixed in the riot accidentally". The description given by Lance Corporal D suggests that this was Joseph Lynn.

¹ B69

79.34 At the time, Lance Corporal 229 justified the arrest of Joseph Lynn on the basis that he had seen Joseph Lynn throwing stones. There is a real doubt as to whether Lance Corporal 229 had seen Joseph Lynn at all before he entered the building, let alone seen him throwing stones. The evidence, particularly the evidence given in 1972, persuades us that Lance Corporal 229 could not have held a genuine belief that Joseph Lynn had been throwing stones. As will be seen in our consideration of events at Fort George, to which Joseph Lynn was taken, there are other instances in which arrest forms were completed with false details of activities justifying arrest. In our view Joseph Lynn, a stranger to the area, was probably caught by soldiers simply because he was in the wrong place at the wrong time, and not because he had been seen throwing stones; and there is no evidence to contradict his denial that he had engaged in this activity. For these reasons his arrest was in our view probably unjustified.

Mortar Platoon

80.1 Earlier in our consideration of the events of Sector 3¹ we examined the movement and initial action of three soldiers from Mortar Platoon, namely Corporal P and the baton gunners Private 017 and Private 112. Another soldier from Mortar Platoon, Private U, was also involved in the events of Sector 3.

80.2 As we described when considering the events of Sector 2,¹ soon after disembarking from Sergeant O’s Armoured Personnel Carrier (APC) in Rossville Street, Private U was involved in the arrest of Charles Canning, after which he made his way past Major Loden’s command vehicle to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. According to his accounts, he fired one shot from there at a man with a pistol who appeared some distance away to the south of the rubble barricade. We deal with the firing by Private U later in this report.² He told the Widgery Inquiry that he was not wearing his respirator when he disembarked from Sergeant O’s APC.³

Composite Platoon (Guinness Force) and Anti-Tank Platoon

80.3 As we have described earlier in this report,¹ the two lorries containing Composite Platoon (also known as Guinness Force) followed the two APCs of Machine Gun Platoon into the Bogside; and were followed by the two APCs of Anti-Tank Platoon. When the vehicles stopped in Rossville Street, the soldiers of Composite Platoon and Anti-Tank Platoon disembarked. There is film footage showing soldiers disembarking from the lorries in Rossville Street.²

Captain 200 – the Commander of Composite Platoon

80.4 In his Royal Military Police (RMP) statement dated 5th February 1972,¹ Captain 200, the Commander of Composite Platoon, recorded that when his platoon disembarked there was CS gas in the air: “This delayed our deployment slightly as we had to put on gas masks. I decided to split my Force, with 71 [the call sign for the soldiers in the first lorry] moving to the left to give support to the Mor Pl [Mortar Platoon] and 71A [the call sign for the soldiers in the second lorry] to move right flanking along the eastern side of Columbcille Court.” He stated that his orders to Colour Sergeant 002, in command of 71A, were to move up the right flank of Rossville Street and act on his own initiative if they got separated. “I went left with 71.” He then stated that on moving off, he noticed Anti-Tank Platoon overtaking the 71A soldiers² and moving quickly through Columbcille Court and the “long block east of the Court”, by which he must have meant Kells Walk. “I stopped and shouted quick orders to ‘L.1’ [Colour Sergeant 002, who was his Platoon Sergeant] to move up in support of the Anti Tank Pl.”

² In his RMP statement, Captain 200 stated that Anti-Tank Platoon overtook 71A in their APCs, but in his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that he clearly recalled, as we believe was the case, that the Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers overtook his men on foot (Day 367/85-89).

80.5 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 recorded that his vehicles had stopped “under cover” just past the junction with William Street. In this statement he recorded that it was his Company Commander (Major Loden) who told him to assist Mortar Platoon, but that he decided to split his force, “half to support the anti-tank platoon which were now in position near the long straight building between Rossville Street and Kells Walk and half to support the mortar platoon”. He continued:

“It was at this stage that I saw at least three men from the anti-tank platoon kneeling behind the wall on the right hand side of Rossville Street by the building firing their SLR. I looked to see what they were firing at and saw a barrier in Rossville Street near the Rossville flats. I could see people behind the barrier. Immediately behind the barrier I could see perhaps two heads beyond that near Glenfada Park there were about 30 scattered people on the right hand side of the road near the Glenfada Park building. There were others further down the road – scattered not in a crowd. This was all taken in in a matter of seconds. My feeling was that the crowd had dispersed rapidly and that gunmen would be likely to appear. I told my men in the vicinity of the long building to spread out – they were too bunched, an obvious target. It was about this time that I removed my gas-mask. I then went over to the half of my platoon which was supporting the mortar platoon and on my way over I saw two women sheltering behind a car who were obviously frightened and I told them to move out through Eden Place into Chamberlain Street.”

80.6 A little later in this statement, Captain 200 described moving between the two halves of his force “and in the end all those not employed in dealing with prisoners or guarding vehicles were in the vicinity of the long building and of Columbcille Court”.¹ Again, it seems that by “the long building” Captain 200 meant Kells Walk.

¹ B1987

80.7 Captain 200 gave a similar account in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. He told that Inquiry that after Anti-Tank Platoon had moved forward “round the corner towards the Glenfada Park area” he ordered Colour Sergeant 002 to move his soldiers up to the wall from where that platoon had been firing.¹ He also told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not see any of his soldiers firing.²

² WT15.48

² Day 367/25

80.9 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 said that the initial deployment of his soldiers was to send half to move up the “right flank”, ie the western side of Rossville Street, and that after the other half had stayed for a while at a wall at the north end of Rossville Street he sent them to the “left flank”, behind Mortar Platoon.

80.10 Captain 200 also told us that he moved to the left, ie to the east, and shepherded people away from the Eden Place waste ground, not after receiving orders from Major Loden, as he had said in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ but just before he went back to Major Loden, as he had recorded in his RMP statement and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.² This, therefore, would have been after he had seen soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon firing from a wall at Kells Walk.

² B1980; B1986; Day 367/90-91

Lieutenant 119 – the Commander of Anti-Tank Platoon

80.11 Lieutenant 119 was the Commander of Anti-Tank Platoon. Although in the accounts that he gave in 1972 he did not provide as much detail as Captain 200 of the movement of his soldiers, nothing he said on this subject was inconsistent with the accounts of Captain 200. In his second RMP statement,¹ Lieutenant 119 recorded:

“About 1615 hrs 30 Jan 72 I moved into the Rossville Street area of Londonderry with my Platoon. We moved along Rossville Street in a Southerly direction, towards Rossville Flats.

When we arrived at MR 43251688, we came under fire from at least two different directions. We were on foot and in open ground without adequate cover. Just prior to this we had been advancing rapidly towards the mob of rioters with the object of arresting as many as possible. As soon as we came under fire, I moved those soldiers with me to the cover of a wall just in front of us, at the Map Reference given.”

80.12 We deal elsewhere in this report¹ with accounts of incoming fire given by the soldiers involved in the events of Sector 3.

Summary of the initial movements of the soldiers in Sector 3

80.13 On the basis of the foregoing evidence, we have concluded that the sequence of events, so far as the soldiers were concerned, was that Corporal P and Private 017 from Mortar Platoon disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street and went to the western side of that street, where Corporal P fired two shots and Private 017 encountered a man with a handgun. These matters we have already considered in detail.¹ Meanwhile Composite Platoon and Anti-Tank Platoon disembarked from their vehicles. Soldiers from the latter platoon moved ahead (ie south) of the soldiers from Composite Platoon and reached the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp after Corporal P had fired two shots. In our view the fifth and sixth of the six photographs taken by Liam Mailey, which we have set out earlier in this report,² but which for the sake of clarity we set out again below, show soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon reaching those low walls, with Corporal P and Private 017, who had reached that area earlier, in front of them.

² Paragraphs 69.52–55

80.14 Very shortly after soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon arrived at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, there was firing from that position. As noted above,¹ Captain 200, the Commander of Composite Platoon, described seeing at least three soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon kneeling in that position and firing their rifles.

Summary of Anti-Tank Platoon evidence of shooting from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp	81.73

81.1 There is convincing evidence, which we discuss later in this report,¹ that the first of the identified casualties to be shot by Army gunfire at the rubble barricade was Michael Kelly, and that he was hit by a shot fired by Lance Corporal F, a member of Anti-Tank Platoon. Although it does not follow that this was the first firing by a soldier of Anti-Tank Platoon in Sector 3, it is convenient to consider first the accounts given by Lance Corporal F and then to deal with the accounts of the other soldiers who have stated that they fired from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp.

¹ Paragraphs 81.21–35 and 86.43–58

Lance Corporal F

81.2 As noted above,¹ Lance Corporal F had travelled into the Bogside in the second of the two Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) of Anti-Tank Platoon.

81.3 In his first RMP statement, timed at 0240 hours on 31st January 1972,¹ Lance Corporal F recorded:²

"I am a member of Sec, Commanded by 'F1'. About 1600 hrs we deployed from our vehicle at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. We deployed in pairs and I was working with 'G'. We advanced along Rossville St towards Rossville Flats where numerous rioters were. I was armed with a SLR loaded with a magazine of 20 rounds. When we deployed and started to advance I cocked my weapon with one round in the breech. The safety catch was on safe.

We advanced about 30 yards and came under sniper fire which sounded like rifle fire. These shots came from the direction of Rossville flats. We were too far from the flats to pinpoint the gunmen at this stage.

We continued to advance and as we got nearer to the flats I could see that there was a barricade across the street at the far end of the flats. I estimate there were about 200 rioters in this area at that time. They were throwing stones, bottles and other missiles at us and other troops as they advanced. I saw at least two nail bombs explode as we advanced.

We took up position behind a wall on the right hand side of Rossville St about 40 yards short of the Rossville Flats. We again came under sniper fire from the flats. I estimated that this gunfire was coming from the second floor of the flats and the third window along. I fired 3 aimed shots at this window and I saw all three shots strike the windows.

After these shots the sniper fire stopped and I saw about 30–40 rioters leave the barricade and go to the right behind a block of flats out of our sight."

81.4

The handwritten original version of this statement contains more text than the typed version. In the handwritten version the second paragraph of the passage set out above begins: "We advanced along Rossville Street taking cover in doorways. After we had covered about 30 yds we came under sniper fire which sounded like rifle fire."¹ In the handwritten version, the word "windows" (the last word of the penultimate sentence of the passage set out above) appears as "window".² These were probably errors made when the statement was typed up.

81.5 The first sentence of the extract quoted above has been redacted. The blank space before the abbreviation “Sec” has replaced “56A”, this being the call sign for a section within Anti-Tank Platoon. “F1” was the cipher given by the RMP to a soldier known in the present Inquiry as Sergeant INQ 1694.

81.6 This statement continued with a description by Lance Corporal F of moving into Glenfada Park North and there firing at a nail bomber, then arresting people and escorting them back to Rossville Street, and afterwards firing “approximately” four further shots at a window in the Rossville Flats followed by another four shots, also at a window in those flats.¹ We consider what Lance Corporal F did in Glenfada Park North in the context of Sector 4;² and return to the shots that he said that he fired at the flats in our consideration of the later events of Sector 3.³

81.8 As in the first RMP statement itself, it will be seen that there is nothing on this map to suggest that Lance Corporal F fired at the rubble barricade. The two lowest arrows indicate the positions of the alleged gunmen in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

81.9 Lance Corporal F made three later RMP statements. One was timed at 1410 hours on 31st January 1972.¹ Another was timed at 2030 hours on 4th February 1972. The typed copy of the latter has no date or time,² but the original handwritten copy seen by the Tribunal bears this date and time. A further RMP statement was dated 15th February 1972.³ These statements dealt respectively with the identification of a man shot in Glenfada Park North, with events in Rossville Street and Glenfada Park North, and with events at Fort George, to which people arrested on Bloody Sunday had been taken. In none of these statements did Lance Corporal F mention anything about firing across the rubble barricade.

³ B132-133

² B129-130

81.10 On 19th February 1972 Lance Corporal F made a further statement,¹ this time to Colonel Overbury. This officer was, as we explained in the part of this report dealing with Sector 2,² a solicitor and Assistant Director of the Army Legal Services at the Ministry of Defence, who had arrived in Northern Ireland at the beginning of February 1972 to join the Army Tribunal Team preparing for the Widgery Inquiry.

¹ B135

² Paragraph 51.124

81.11 We set out this statement in full,¹ since, as will be seen, it was in this statement that for the first time Lance Corporal F gave an account not only of firing at a man behind the rubble barricade in Rossville Street before moving into Glenfada Park North, but also of firing from there at a man on the south side of the Rossville Flats. The firing to the south of the Rossville Flats is a matter to which we return when considering the events of Sector 5.²

“Further to my previous statements.

I have now read my previous statements and looked at maps and photographs of the area, and realise that I have mistaken the sequence of events.

After we first left our vehicles in the Rossville Flats area, I did not, as said earlier, fire at a window in the Rossville Flats. I fired these shots later. I did however fire; I aimed round at a man I saw behind the barricade about 40 yards from me who was about to throw a bomb. It was a large object and I saw sparks coming from it. As I said earlier, 2 nail bombs had earlier exploded near us as we moved towards the Rossville Flats.

When I moved with G into Glenfada Park I fired 2 rounds as I said earlier at another man who was about to throw a bomb. The object in his hand was definitely a bomb because it was fizzing. Immediately after this I ran along the Eastern wall of Glenfada Park to the corner. As I did so I heard pistol shots coming from the area of the wall at the far end of the Rossville Flats. I shouted 'there's a gunman' and I dropped to one knee and took an aim position. I saw a man near the wall facing in my direction who turned as if to run. I saw he had an object in his hand. He was the only person in the area from which the gunfire had come. The object in his hand was large and black like an automatic pistol. I fired 2 rounds at this man and he fell to the ground. I then saw 20 people, 19 men and one woman standing near me huddled together at the end of the flats in Glenfada Park. I arrested these people with others including G who came up.

After I had returned to my vehicle and came under fire again as I described earlier I fired 3 shots at the 2nd floor window of Rossville Flats. I also fired a further 5 rounds at men firing in my direction from the windows of Rossville Flats. I can work out the number of rounds I fired on the last two occasions from the ammunition check I made very shortly afterwards when I counted 7 rounds left in my magazine. I am certain that I fired 1 round at the nail bomber at the barricade, 2 rounds at the nail bomber in Glenfada Park, 2 rounds at the gunman at the end of Rossville Flats and 3 rounds at the window on the 2nd Floor of the Rossville Flats. The remaining 5 rounds I fired on 2 separate occasions at different windows of the Rossville Flats. On each occasion I saw a man with a rifle who had on each occasion fired in our direction. At no time did I fire except aimed shots at a person who was attacking us."

² Paragraphs 119.164–175

81.12 Lance Corporal F made a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ In this statement he again described seeing explosions in Rossville Street near the north end of the Rossville Flats as he advanced along Rossville Street after disembarking. He recorded that he had taken cover behind the wall at the south end of the low-rise flats on the west side of Rossville Street in front of Columbcille Court. We have no doubt that this was a description of one of the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp. He continued:

“4. I then observed a number of people behind the barricade. One of them was attempting to throw what looked like a bomb which was in his hand. It was fizzing. I have seen nail bombs before and I am in no doubt that this was one. I fired one aimed shot and he fell. The bomb did not explode. I did not see what happened to it. Then I saw three men leave the barricade. One was carrying a rifle, and they moved to the right in the direction of Glenfada Park.”

81.13 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal F described seeing two nail bombs explode about 40m in front of the rubble barricade, about halfway up to where he was positioned. He then said that there was nobody on his side of the rubble barricade when he saw “a person attempting to throw what looked like a nail bomb. It was fizzing in his hand. I took an aimed shot and then the man with the bomb fell to the ground.”²

² WT14.46

81.14 In the course of his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Lance Corporal F was asked why he had failed to tell the RMP of the shots he had fired on the south side of the Rossville Flats.¹ We return to this in our consideration of the events of Sector 5,² but it is to be noted here that he was not asked why he had failed to tell the RMP about the shot that he was now saying that he had fired at a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade. When he told the Widgery Inquiry, in reply to a question from counsel for the families and for the injured, who did not have access to the RMP statements, that he had told the RMP about both the nail bombers he had shot, no-one intervened to disclose that his RMP statements contained no reference to the nail bomber behind the rubble barricade.³ We do not know why Lance Corporal F was not questioned about this matter and Colonel Overbury said to us that he did not know either.⁴

³ WT14.61

² Paragraphs 119.169–170

⁴ Day 243/60-61

81.15 The trajectory photograph below apparently shows the shot that Lance Corporal F fired at the man he said was a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade. It is one of a number of trajectory photographs prepared for the purposes of the Widgery Inquiry to illustrate the shots that the soldiers of 1 PARA said that they had fired, but we have no evidence of the exact date on which this photograph was prepared. In his statement to Colonel Overbury,¹

Lance Corporal F recorded that he had been shown maps and photographs, but neither this nor any of the other accounts that he gave in 1972 refers to a photograph marked to illustrate the trajectory of his shot fired across the rubble barricade.

¹ B135

81.16 There is no entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements¹ that corresponds with the shot fired by Lance Corporal F that hit Michael Kelly at the rubble barricade. Nor is there an entry that corresponds with his firing in Sector 5. As we explain in our discussion of the events of Sector 4,² we are of the view that Lance Corporal F gave Major Loden an account of shooting in Glenfada Park North. If this is so, Lance Corporal F told Major Loden of some of his shooting, but failed to inform him of his shot across the rubble barricade, despite the fact that it had been fired only a short time before.

² Paragraph 97.62

81.17 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal F told us that he did not now “recall firing one shot at the barricade”. Early in his oral evidence to this Inquiry he gave the following answers:²

“Q. Have you ever killed anyone before Bloody Sunday?

A. No.

Q. Or after Bloody Sunday in Northern Ireland?

A. No.

Q. This must, therefore, must it not, have been a pretty dramatic day?

A. It was, yes.

Q. And are you being truthful when you say that you remember practically nothing whatever about it?

A. That is correct.”

² Day 375/59

81.18 Later, when his attention was drawn to the absence of any reference in his first RMP statement¹ either to the shot across the rubble barricade or to the two shots that he later said that he had fired to the south of the Rossville Flats, Lance Corporal F gave the following evidence:²

“Q. May we have that on one side and may we have the next page, 123, on the other. You described firing eight shots in two sets of four at windows in the Rossville Flats. You see there is a reference to firing ‘approximately four aimed shots at’ one window and then ‘four aimed shots’ at another window; do you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. We need not worry for the moment about the details of the eight shots fired at the windows of the Rossville Flats, but you will see from that account that you do refer to 13 shots, but you begin with three shots at a window in the flats before you go into Glenfada Park and you then describe two shots being fired in Glenfada Park before a further eight shots after you had come out of Glenfada Park; do you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. Why is it that there is no reference in this statement to firing, as your first shot, one shot from the Kells Walk wall towards the barricade, or to firing two shots from Glenfada Park towards a man with a pistol at the wall below the Rossville Flats?

A. All I can say is that there is errors in the judgement of making the statements and they got confused.

Q. Let us take that in stages: you were not confused on this occasion, were you, about the number of bullets that you fired?

A. Not at that particular time.

Q. And you gave a precise account of the number of shots, the sets of shots, the targets and the sequence?

A. That is correct.

Q. One of the shots that you omitted to refer to was your first shot of the day at a man with a nail bomb whom you in fact killed; that is right, is it not?

A. As my statement says, yes.

Q. And you must have been trying to kill him?

A. The person has got a nail bomb, he was trying to kill me, then, yes.

Q. And the other shots that you omitted to refer to were two shots at a man with a pistol whom you were also trying to kill?

A. That is correct.

Q. How can you possibly have forgotten those shots?

A. There was a lot going on that day, there was a lot of activity going on and when I made the statements, the statements got confused and there was errors made.

Q. What you have done is to omit all reference to firing in two very controversial areas, firstly towards the barricade and, secondly, towards the south of the Rossville Flats; do you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. Is the reason why there is no mention of either of those firings because the firing that took place from the Kells Walk wall to the barricade and from Glenfada Park to below the Rossville Flats, was known by you to be unjustifiable and you wished to hide the part that you had played in it?

² Day 375/138-140

81.19 Later in his oral evidence there was another exchange about Lance Corporal F’s professed lack of recollection:¹

“Q. You told the Inquiry yesterday that as far as your experiences in Northern Ireland were concerned, that was confined to a number of shooting incidents prior to Bloody Sunday; is that correct?

A. That is correct, yes.

Q. So as far as Northern Ireland is concerned, the only circumstances in which you admit to killing people was on Bloody Sunday itself?

A. That is correct.

Q. Notwithstanding that fact, you are asking this Tribunal and all of the people, who have travelled a very long way to find out what you have to say about this, the best that you can do is to say that you cannot remember anything at all about it, even though those are the only human beings that you killed in Northern Ireland?

A. I was speaking the truth, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. You have the benefit of anonymity; is that not right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you also have the benefit and assurance from the Attorney General – you and a number of other witnesses – that any evidence that you give before this Inquiry could not be used against you in a subsequent trial; you do understand that, do you not?

A. I do, yes.

Q. Notwithstanding – of course you have had the opportunity to come to London and give your evidence, rather than have to come to Derry and give it; is that not right?

A. That is correct.

Q. With all those combination of safeguards and given the fact we are now in 2003, some 30 years or so after Bloody Sunday, and all these people who have been waiting for so long to find out exactly what happened on Rossville Street and what happened in Glenfada Park and what happened in Abbey Park and what happened at the back of Block 2 of Rossville Flats, are you not now prepared to tell us something about what you saw and heard that day?

A. I can only tell you what I remember and that is it.

Q. Which is nothing?

A. That is correct.”

81.20 In our view Lance Corporal F did not tell the truth when he told us that he had practically no recollection of what he did on Bloody Sunday.

The bullet recovered from Michael Kelly’s body

81.21 We have referred earlier in this report¹ to some of the evidence given by Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science (DIFS) in Belfast.

81.22 In the period from 7th to 15th February 1972, a total of 29 rifles used by the Army on Bloody Sunday were submitted to DIFS for examination, and the receipt of each weapon was recorded on a submission form in which it was identified by a number.¹ The numbers entered on the submission forms were not the complete serial numbers of the weapons but only the last part of the serial numbers.² They were, however, sufficient to distinguish each weapon from the others in the set of 29. The number of rifles submitted for examination is one more than the number of soldiers who had at the time admitted deliberately firing their rifles on Bloody Sunday. We do not know why this is so, though it is possible that the additional weapon was the rifle used by Gunner INQ 1255, a member of 22 Lt AD Regt, who at about 1700 hours on Bloody Sunday accidentally shot himself in the foot when on duty in a building at the eastern end of Prince Arthur Street. We consider this incident elsewhere in this report.³

³ Chapter 168

² OPA1.63

81.23 DIFS had already received, on 2nd February 1972, bullets recovered from the bodies of two of those who died, Michael Kelly¹ and Gerald Donaghey,² and, on 3rd February 1972, one bullet and three metal fragments recovered from the bodies of three of the surviving casualties.³

³ D802-D803; D825-D825.1; D903-D904

² D329-D330. In the evidence, Gerald Donaghey's first name is often given as Gerard and his second name as Donaghy. We have ascertained from his family that the correct name is Gerald Donaghey.

81.24 Herbert Donnelly, an Assistant Scientific Officer at DIFS, carried out test firings of the rifles¹ and Dr Martin conducted a microscopic examination of bullets from the test firings and of the bullets recovered from the casualties. In the case of Michael Kelly, Dr Martin found agreement between the rifling marks on the bullet recovered from the deceased and the test bullets fired in rifle number A32515, which satisfied him that the bullet that hit Michael Kelly had been fired from that rifle.²

² D47; WT9.14

¹ D610.6-8; Day 226/95-96; Day 226/152-156; Day 226/159

81.26 Dr Martin initially told us that on making a "match" for the rifles that fired the bullets recovered from Michael Kelly and Gerald Donaghey, he would have ceased his examination.¹ This meant that he might not have compared the recovered bullets to those fired from all of the remaining weapons in the pool of 29 submitted to DIFS. However, later in his oral evidence he said that he “probably looked at all the rest anyway, on the way through”.²

² Day 230/52

81.28 Mr O’Callaghan could not give an idea of the level of probability that the marks on the bullet recovered from Michael Kelly’s body might have corresponded to the marks on the bullets test-fired from more than one of the rifles in the pool of 29 submitted to DIFS.¹

81.29 Mr O’Callaghan also told this Inquiry that he would not describe the process carried out by Dr Martin as matching a bullet to a weapon. He preferred to talk of a “corresponding agreement between marks on the test bullets and the fired bullet ... recovered from the victims”.¹

81.30 Although perhaps Dr Martin could have used a more thorough method, we are satisfied that the bullet recovered from Michael Kelly’s body was fired from Lance Corporal F’s rifle. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal F confirmed that the number of his rifle was A32515 and that there was no possibility that anyone else could have used it on Bloody Sunday.

81.31 Mr O’Callaghan and Dr Richard Shepherd, the latter being the expert pathologist retained by this Inquiry, concluded from the features of the entry wound that the bullet that killed Michael Kelly was unstable when it hit him¹ and that the most likely cause of this instability was contact with some other object or person before the bullet hit Michael Kelly.² The experts could not be precise about the nature of any such contact and could not say, for example, whether the bullet might have ricocheted from a hard surface or whether it had travelled through the body of another person.³ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Dr Shepherd said that he thought that the bullet would not have travelled through any hard object.⁴ Mr O’Callaghan said that the lack of any evidence of damage to the bullet made it impossible to determine the nature of any contact that the bullet may have had before it hit Michael Kelly.⁵

Lance Corporal F and Michael Kelly

81.32 In view of the matters considered above, we have no doubt that Lance Corporal F fired the bullet that killed Michael Kelly at the rubble barricade. Later in this report,¹ we give reasons for our view that Lance Corporal F did not believe at any stage that there was a man with a nail bomb behind the rubble barricade.

81.33 We also return later in this report¹ to the evidence of civilians and others relating to the shooting of Michael Kelly, but note at this point that there are two photographs taken by Robert White (an amateur photographer) that show a body lying on the ground behind the rubble barricade. We have no doubt that this is the body of Michael Kelly (he was identified by his brother John Kelly)² and equally no doubt that he is lying at or very close to the position in which he fell when shot, as a number of witnesses told us, namely Hugh O’Boyle;³ Jack Nash;⁴ Charles Lamberton;⁵ Ronald Wood;⁶ and Fr Terence O’Keeffe.⁷

81.35 We observe at this point that it was submitted by the representatives of the majority of the represented soldiers that Michael Kelly was “the unfortunate victim of a ‘shoot through’ round” that first hit a nail bomber standing in front of him.¹ In support of this submission these representatives suggest, among other things, that the photographs displayed above² “clearly show” part of an additional body lying at the rubble barricade at the same time as Michael Kelly.³ We consider this submission later in this report⁴ and for reasons we give there reach the conclusion that no-one else was shot at the rubble barricade at the same time as Michael Kelly.

⁴ Chapter 87

Lance Corporal J

81.36 Lance Corporal J had travelled into the Bogside in the same vehicle as Lance Corporal F, namely in the second of the APCs of Anti-Tank Platoon.

81.37 In his first RMP statement, timed at 1515 hours on 1st February 1972,¹ Lance Corporal J gave the following account:

“At Londonderry on 30 Jan 72 about 1610 hrs my Coy was deployed at the junction of William St and Rossville Street.

We were tasked to advance along the Rossville Street towards the Lecky Road and disperse a crowd of about 1500 rioters.

The rioters were congregated at a barricade opposite the junction facing the Rossville St Flats.

As we advanced along Rossville St I heard shots coming from Rossville Flats. They sounded like automatic shots.

I was positioned on the right hand side of Rossville Street advancing near to Columbcill Court group of houses.

As we moved along we came under fire and heavy stoning from groups of young persons, mostly male youths, located in the Glenfada Court area. I was armed with a 7.62 SLR fitted with a magazine of 20 rounds of 7.62mm ammunition.

At that time we were near to the barricade about 100 metres distant. I could see a group of youths, throwing missiles at us. The barricade consisted of broken cars and other materials mostly paving stones obtained from the nearby scrap wasteland.

My location was about 100 metres from the entrance of Glenfada Park facing the Rossville Lecky Road junction. I could clearly see the barricade from my location.

Shots were being fired at us from gunmen located at the barricade.

I saw a youth, I cannot describe his dress, in his hand which was in the throwing position, I saw an object which I could clearly see smoke coming from. I levelled my rifle which was cocked on the start of the advance. I fired one aimed 7.62 round at the youth. He was about 100 metres from me. I observed the round hit the top of the barricade the youth then ducked behind the barricade. I did not think that I hit him. Other troops had opened fire on other snipers located around the Rossville and Glenfada Flats area.”

81.38 This statement continued with an account of moving further along Rossville Street and firing at another nail bomber. We return to this part of Lance Corporal J's account below.¹

81.39 According to this account, therefore, Lance Corporal J fired a shot, which he thought missed, at a youth behind the rubble barricade who was in the act of throwing a smoking object at a time when other troops had opened fire. At this stage he was about 100m from the rubble barricade.

81.40 The following RMP map accompanied this statement.¹

¹ B267

81.41 According to this map, Lance Corporal J fired at one stage from the area of the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp and at another from a position at the north-east corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. We return to the latter incident below.¹

81.42 Lance Corporal J made a second RMP statement, timed at 1510 hours on 4th February 1972.¹ Much of this statement was concerned with his account of what happened when he went into Glenfada Park North, which we consider when dealing with the events of

Sector 4;² and with what he saw when he returned to Rossville Street, to which we return later in our consideration of the later events of Sector 3.³ However, at the beginning of this statement he recorded:

“Furtherance to my statement which I made on the 1 Feb 72 about 1500 hrs I would like to add. That on the 30 Jan 72 about 1600 hrs I was positioned alongside a brick wall on the right hand side of Rossville Street, about opposite Eden Place. At this time the weather conditions were clear skies and sunny, visibility was very good. From this position I observed two male persons taking cover behind a barrier which was placed across the street at Rossville Flats. The distance between them and myself was about 100 metres. These male persons were wearing dark clothes but I would not be able to identify them again. From my position members of my Coy returned fire at the nail bombers but I cannot say who they were as at this point everyone was wearing gas masks.”

² Paragraphs 98.11–15 and 100.21

81.43

Lance Corporal J gave a further account in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.¹ So far as his own firing was concerned, he recorded:

“We moved off from the position where we had arrived after some delay and the convoy of armoured vehicles moved down Great James Street and crossed the barricade in Little James Street and then crossed William Street and parked just on the west side of Rossville Street by some derelict houses. Just as we got out of our vehicles I heard what I took to be automatic fire coming from the direction of Rossville Flats. I took up a position just by one of the derelict houses. By this time the rioters had crossed over the barricade in Rossville Street and I was in this position for approximately five minutes. I was with another soldier and we were covering each other.

We then moved along in front of the wall behind which are low rise flats and while we were moving along to the end of this wall I could see stones and bottles and also nail bombs being thrown in our direction, from the direction of the barricade. I saw one nail bomb explode. None of the missiles got as far as the position where we were standing.

Shooting then commenced from the barricade. I saw about three people behind the barricade and I could also see smoke coming from their rifles. We could hear the rounds going overhead. I then took cover behind the wall with at least two members of the platoon. The other two soldiers then engaged the two gunmen at the barricade. I then saw a third person come up from behind the barricade and he was holding an object, which was fizzing, in a throwing position. From my experience I was sure this was a nail bomb. He was a young person although I cannot describe him clearly. I had cocked my rifle when I had disembarked from the armoured vehicle and I took aim at this youth and fired one aimed shot at him. I saw a puff of dust from the top of the barricade and since this young man ducked down behind the barricade I do not think I hit him.”

81.44 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Lance Corporal J said that he heard one burst of automatic fire as he disembarked from the APC, and that “it seemed to me there was some nail bombs thrown, and I heard one explode”. He then said that as he moved along a kind of low wall that jugged out into the street (by which it seems he was referring to one of the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp), two gunmen opened up from the rubble barricade. He said that “it seemed as if they had rifles from the position they were holding them”, and that “You could see puffs of smoke as they were firing”.¹

81.45 Lance Corporal J told the Widgery Inquiry that it was because of this firing that he and at least two other soldiers from his platoon took cover behind the low wall; and that they returned fire. He said that it was at this stage that he saw “a third person who kind of came up from behind the barricade in a throwing position. He had a metallic object, a cylindrical object, in his hand, which was fizzing, so I realized this was a nail bomb and I took one aimed shot at him.” He said that he did not think that he had hit this person, but that he saw a puff of smoke as his bullet hit the top of the barricade.¹

81.46 Lance Corporal J gave accounts of moving forward towards the rubble barricade and firing at another man with a nail bomb, which we consider below,¹ of then going into Glenfada Park North, which we consider when dealing with the events of Sector 4,² and of then witnessing firing after he had returned to Rossville Street, to which we return when considering the later events of Sector 3.³

³ Paragraphs 123.161–166

² Paragraphs 98.11–15 and 100.21

81.47 We set out below Lance Corporal J's trajectory photograph.¹

¹ B289

81.48 There is no entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements that corresponds with either of the shots that Lance Corporal J said that he had fired in Rossville Street. It appears therefore that he did not report this firing to Major Loden, but we do not know why this was so.

81.49 Lance Corporal J gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written evidence¹ he said that his recollection was poor, but that he recalled firing at a man at the rubble barricade who was holding something that had smoke coming from it, which Lance Corporal J identified as a nail bomb. He stated that he fired at the man but was certain that he had missed. He also described firing at another nail bomber after having moved further south down Rossville Street and said that he was sure that he had not hit this person, but had hit the wall above him.

81.50 Lance Corporal J was interviewed for the purposes of taking this statement on 26th April 1999. He was sent a draft on 22nd June 1999, which he signed on 1st March 2000.

81.51 On 20th May 1999 an article written by Toby Harnden appeared in the Daily Telegraph under the headline: “We want the truth of Bloody Sunday to come out. Toby Harnden talks to two ex-Paras who were there on the day 13 people died. They want to set the record straight ...”¹

81.52 According to this article a soldier, called “Soldier X” by Toby Harnden, had been present on Bloody Sunday and had given the Daily Telegraph an account of the events of that day. In an accompanying article, also by Toby Harnden,¹ the following passage appeared in quotation marks, and was attributed to “Soldier X”:

“I was grilled for several hours this year by lawyers acting for the Saville Inquiry. ... I told them the bare minimum and said I could not really enlarge on anything said to Widgery or contained in my original statement the day after Bloody Sunday. When I heard there was to be another inquiry I was shattered. It was pure politics.”

81.53 The Inquiry wished to discover the identity of “Soldier X” in order to question him about the account that he had given to Toby Harnden. We suspected that Lance Corporal J might have been “Soldier X”, but through his solicitors he denied that this was so. Toby Harnden refused to divulge the identity of “Soldier X” on grounds of journalistic confidentiality. It was not until 12th September 2003 that Lance Corporal J finally admitted, in a supplemental written statement, that he was indeed “Soldier X”. He admitted that he had on several occasions denied this when asked by his own solicitors. He stated that he had done this because he was concerned about his anonymity.¹

81.54 However, Lance Corporal J asserted in this statement that he had not made the comments about his interview by solicitors acting on behalf of the present Inquiry that we have quoted above.¹

81.55 After Lance Corporal J had admitted that he was “Soldier X”, the Inquiry obtained a statement from Toby Harnden, which was dated 4th December 2003.¹ This statement contains the following passage:

“I telephoned Soldier X from a hotel in County Cork, where I was covering another story. I found Soldier X to be nervous to the point of paranoia about his identity. As a ‘shooter’, he was aware he would be very much under the microscope. He seemed to have a clear recollection of what happened on Bloody Sunday though I believed it was possible he might have added or omitted some details in order to prevent his being identified; he seemed to weigh every word he said. He was very emotional and made me promise again and again that I would protect his anonymity. Again, the interview was noted and taped and a full transcript made afterwards. I would say the conversation lasted 10 or 15 minutes but again I cannot be precise about this.

Following the interviews, I telephoned my news desk to discuss what the soldiers had said to me. I was asked to write two separate articles. After a normal editing process, including discussions with Richard Spencer, then news editor, Neil Darbyshire, then home editor, and Arthur Wynn Davies, the Telegraph’s in-house lawyer, they were published. Because the tribunal had already been established, I knew the articles could generate controversy and would be examined very closely. I was therefore especially careful to check and double-check my notes and the tapes. I am certain that every quotation was accurate. At this juncture, I cannot recall anything about the detailed content of the interviews beyond what was published.”

81.56 Toby Harnden is a reputable journalist. We have no reason to doubt what he said in this statement, whereas Lance Corporal J, on his own admission, lied to his own solicitors about the interview on more than one occasion. In these circumstances we have no doubt that he did make the comments about the interview that we have quoted above.

81.57 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Lance Corporal J repeatedly told us that he could not remember events that were put to him, including giving statements to the RMP and to the Widgery Inquiry.¹ In effect Lance Corporal J professed to remember little or nothing of the events of the day, though he said that the accounts that he gave in 1972 must have been true. In the light of what Lance Corporal J said to Toby Harnden and our assessment of this soldier when he gave evidence to us, we do not believe that Lance Corporal J genuinely had no recollection of events.

Corporal E

81.58 In his first RMP statement, timed at 0140 hours on 31st January 1972,¹ Corporal E described deploying with his section at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, and then gave this account:

“We advanced along Rossville Street towards Rossville Flats. As we advanced I could see numerous rioters in the vicinity of the flats and that there was a barricade across Rossville Street.

I heard what I thought was automatic gunfire and also other gunshots coming from the vicinity of Rossville Flats. The rioters in the street were throwing stones and bottles. I also saw a petrol bomb explode but I did not see who threw it or from where.

I was armed with a SLR loaded with a magazine of 20 rounds. My weapon was cocked with one round in the breech. The safety catch was at safe.

We took up position on the right hand side of the road behind a small wall, about 20 metres from Rossville Flats, but on the opposite side of the road. Once in position we came under sniper fire from Rossville Flats.

I saw a man in a window in the next to the top floor of the flats. He had what appeared to be a pistol of some sort in his hands. I saw this man fire one shot at our position from this weapon. I fired off one aimed shot at this man. I saw the shot go through the window that he was in and strike the ceiling.

Just after this I saw one man behind the barricade with what appeared to be a machine gun. I saw him take up a firing position and then fall to the ground as if he had been shot. I saw that he wore glasses and had cloth tied around the lower part of his face and he was dressed in dark clothing.

I also saw a man next to the one with what appeared to be a machine gun. He had what seemed to be the butt of a gun. I could not see anymore of the instrument.

At this time rioters from the area of the barricade started to move off to our right and go behind a block of flats there.”

81.59 This account continued with a description of moving into Glenfada Park North, encountering nail and petrol bombers, and shooting a man who threw a petrol bomb and then a nail bomb. We deal with this part of Corporal E’s account when we consider the events of Sector 4.¹

81.60 The RMP map that accompanied Corporal E’s first RMP statement shows both his positions and those of the two people at whom he had recorded that he fired.¹

¹ B89

81.61 In his second RMP statement, timed at 1400 hours on 31st January 1972,¹ Corporal E recorded that he was reasonably sure that two photographs of “Kelly” (ie Michael Kelly) showed the man he shot “in an incident at the Glenfada flats”.

¹ B91

81.62 Corporal E gave written and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

- 81.63 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal E described disembarking from his vehicle “on the corner of the piece of vacant ground in William Street, opposite the entrance to Rossville Street”. He stated that his whole section, “which is eight or nine of us, took up position in the area of the first building on the west side of Rossville Street”. This statement continued:

“Since shooting had broken out from the direction of Rossville Car Park we were told to move forward to make arrests. I could see about one hundred people scuttling off in different directions across the open ground and towards the barricade and behind the barricade I saw what seemed to me to be a very large crowd. I had an SLR with twenty rounds in a magazine together with a further magazine of twenty rounds and ten rounds wrapped in a bandolier. As soon as the firing which was mixed had broken out I cocked my rifle which is the normal procedure.

We moved forward in single file in front of the low rise flats on the west side on Rossville Street and when we reached the end of the flats sniper fire broke out from the area of the Rossville Flats and I heard machine gun fire. As soon as this happened we deployed and I took cover behind a wall at the end of the flats. I saw a sniper in the second storey from the top of Rossville Flats at a window and he fired one shot with what looked like a machine pistol. I fired one round in the direction of this sniper. The round went in through the window and I have no idea whether I hit the sniper. Shortly after I shot at the sniper I saw a petrol bomb land about thirty yards in front of the barricade. The petrol bomb smashed and burned. Almost instantaneously I saw two gunmen behind the centre of the barricade. One of the gunmen was kneeling and taking up a firing position. He was wearing dark clothes and goggles and a handkerchief over the lower part of his face. There was a lot of mixed calibre firing going on at this stage and I saw this gunman falling to the ground but I cannot be sure where the shot came from.”

- 81.64 Corporal E continued with his account of moving into Glenfada Park North,¹ to which we return when considering the events of Sector 4.² He also stated that he was now not sure that Michael Kelly was the man he had shot in Glenfada Park, as he had claimed in his second RMP statement. As we have already observed,³ there is no doubt that Michael Kelly was shot at the rubble barricade by Lance Corporal F, who was firing from the low walls at the south end of Kells Walk.

³ Paragraph 81.32

² Paragraph 97.53

81.65 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal E described hearing “mixed calibre” shots as he and his men moved forward after disembarking. He then said that he heard an explosion like that of a nail bomb and that when he came under fire from what he said was a “small machine pistol”, he took cover behind what must, in our view, have been one of the walls of the low ramp at the south end of Kells Walk. He told the Widgery Inquiry that he was just to the left of the wall when he fired at a sniper located in the centre of the Rossville Flats, one floor down from the top floor. The sniper, he said, had fired roughly three shots, one at him, with “a Luger-type pistol, sir, a machine gun”.²

² WT14.29-30; WT14.42

81.66 Corporal E then described seeing a petrol bomb, which according to him was thrown from the crowd round the rubble barricade and smashed and burned about 20m from his position. He also described seeing two gunmen in the centre of the barricade at about the same time as the petrol bomb was thrown:¹

“Q. Were they on the other side of it from you?”

A. Yes sir.

Q. Which way were they facing?

A. Towards us.

Q. You say two gunmen. Did you see what sort of weapons either of them had?

A. The one in the kneeling position had a Thompson, sir, in the shoulder and the other one had what appeared to be a rifle, sir.

Q. One was in a kneeling position with the Thompson?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What position was the other one in?

A. He was sort of crawling, sir, behind it, in a crawling position.

Q. When you first saw them, was either of them in a firing position with the weapon?

A. Only the Thompson machine gun.

Q. The kneeling man?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Can you describe him at all, Corporal? What sort of clothes was he wearing?

A. He had dark clothes, sir.

Q. Anything about his face?

A. He had a cloth over the bottom part of his face.

Q. A cloth over the bottom part of his face?

A. And he was wearing goggles.

Q. What sort of goggles?

A. They seemed to be motor bike goggles, sir.

Q. When you saw those two gunmen at that point just tell my Lord was there any firing going on from anywhere?

A. Yes sir.

Q. There was?

A. Yes, all around the area.

Q. High or low velocity?

A. Again mixed calibre.

Q. Did you see that man who had been in the kneeling position do anything?

A. He seemed to have been hit, sir. He fell back.

Q. Could you tell at all where the shot came from if he was hit?

A. No sir."

81.67 Corporal E told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not at any stage hear the man at the rubble barricade fire the Thompson sub-machine gun.¹

81.68 It was pointed out to Corporal E that neither in his first RMP statement nor in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry had he mentioned hearing a nail bomb explode when he was in Rossville Street. He told the Widgery Inquiry that when he made his RMP statement, everybody was tired; and that so far as his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry was concerned, "obviously it has been missed out from somewhere. I did hear the explosion in that area."¹

81.69 We return later in this report¹ to what Corporal E told the Widgery Inquiry about moving into Glenfada Park North, when we deal with the events of Sector 4.

81.70 There are no entries in Major Loden's List of Engagements that appear to relate to the shots that Corporal E stated he had fired, and so it seems that he did not report his firing to Major Loden. The explanation for this may be that Corporal E was at the time in question occupied with arrestees taken to Fort George.

81.71 There is, however, a trajectory photograph that shows the two shots that Corporal E said that he fired, the first from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp into the western side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and the second in Glenfada Park North.

81.72 Corporal E is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry. Later in this report¹ we consider what reliance we can place on his account of firing a shot at a man who had fired one shot at him with what looked like a machine pistol from a window in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

Summary of Anti-Tank Platoon evidence of shooting from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp

81.73 At this point we summarise the evidence given by soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon of their firing from the low walls at the Kells Walk ramp. We return below¹ to consider the evidence they gave of incoming fire and of nail and petrol bombs; and what reliance we can place on their accounts.

81.74 Lance Corporal F originally stated that he had fired three shots from this position at windows of the Rossville Flats, but later said that this was wrong and that at this stage he had fired only one shot, at a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade, who fell to the ground.

81.75 Lance Corporal J stated that he had fired one shot at a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade but did not think that he had hit him.

81.76 Corporal E stated that he had fired one shot at a sniper located at a window in the centre of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, one storey down from the top of the flats, but had no idea whether he had hit him.

81.77 In total therefore, according to the accounts discussed above, and on the assumption that Lance Corporal F's later accounts are to be preferred to his earliest, soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon fired three shots from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, two of which were at targets at the rubble barricade; and claimed one certain hit. As we have already stated,¹ there is no doubt that Lance Corporal F, positioned at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, shot and killed Michael Kelly, who was behind the rubble barricade.

Conclusions on gunmen and firing from the rubble barricade	82.84

82.1 All the identified casualties in Sector 3 were sustained in the area of the rubble barricade. Michael Kelly, Michael McDaid, John Young, William Nash and Alexander Nash were all shot at or immediately behind the rubble barricade. Hugh Gilmour and Kevin McElhinney were shot close by. It is thus important to consider in detail the evidence of soldiers about gunmen in the area of the rubble barricade. We have found no evidence that suggests to us, nor has it been suggested by those acting for soldiers in this Inquiry, that any of the identified casualties was carrying a gun.

The soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon who admitted firing from the southern end of Kells Walk

82.2 In his third RMP statement,¹ Lance Corporal F recorded that he saw three men move from the rubble barricade “north west into the area of Glenfada Park flats” and that one of them was carrying what looked like a rifle. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² he recorded that the man was carrying a rifle. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,³ he said that the man was carrying what appeared to be a rifle. In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ he said that he no longer recalled seeing a man carrying something that looked like a rifle. He made no mention at any stage of incoming fire from the rubble barricade.

¹ B129

³ WT14.46

² B137

⁴ B167.007

82.3 In his first RMP statement, Lance Corporal J described shots being fired from the rubble barricade, but said that he fired at a nail bomber.¹ In his second RMP statement, he said that members of his company “returned fire at the nail bombers”.² In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry³ he recorded that he saw smoke coming from the rifles of about three people at the rubble barricade and could hear the rounds going overhead; and in his oral evidence that two soldiers engaged two gunmen at the barricade.⁴ No other soldier gave specific evidence about Lance Corporal J firing from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp.

³ B272-273

² B269

⁴ WT15.28-30

82.4 Corporal E said that he saw a man behind the rubble barricade with a machine gun who took up a firing position and then fell as if shot. He said that the man next to the man with the machine gun seemed to have what looked like the butt of a rifle.¹ He did not say that either of these men had fired. On his account he did not fire himself at targets at the rubble barricade. No other soldier gave specific evidence about Corporal E firing from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp.

82.5 Accordingly, of the three soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon who admitted firing from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, one (Lance Corporal F) said nothing about incoming fire from the rubble barricade, one (Lance Corporal J) described two or three men with rifles firing from there, and one (Corporal E) described seeing a man with a machine gun and another man with what appeared to be a butt of a rifle, but did not suggest he saw either of these men firing or that he fired at them.

Consideration of the evidence of Lance Corporal F, Lance Corporal J and Corporal E

82.6 In the remainder of this chapter we consider whether the evidence of other soldiers lends any support to the accounts of these soldiers that there were men with rifles or a machine gun at the rubble barricade while they were at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp. We have found nothing that to our minds lends any such support. As will be seen, there is no evidence from civilians, journalists or photographers that there were men deploying firearms at the rubble barricade either when soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon were at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp or indeed at any other time.

82.7 The three soldiers under consideration did not suggest that they fired at gunmen there, nor did any other soldier of Anti-Tank Platoon claim to have done so. We consider below¹ and for reasons that we give there reject the claim by Corporal P of Mortar Platoon to have shot a man with a pistol at the rubble barricade. Had there been gunmen at the rubble barricade while these soldiers were at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, they would have posed an instant danger to soldiers and would have been an obvious and indeed justifiable target. Yet no soldier of Anti-Tank Platoon claimed to have fired at a gunman at the rubble barricade.

¹ Paragraphs 85.2–28

Other soldiers

Mortar Platoon

Corporal P

82.8 Corporal P of Mortar Platoon said that he had heard two shots that came “roughly” from the direction of the rubble barricade.¹ Private 017 also said he heard two shots, but was not sure of the direction of fire.² We have already expressed the view³ that these shots were two of those fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway.

¹ B592

³ Paragraph 72.2

² B1482

82.9 Corporal P initially said that after shooting a nail bomber whose body was removed by the crowd, he saw a man behind the rubble barricade get up with a pistol and point it in his direction. He said he fired four shots at this man.¹ He recorded in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry² that he had seen this gunman fire a number of shots, something that he had not previously mentioned. He also told the Widgery Inquiry that there were about five or six people at the barricade, on either side of this gunman, who were throwing stones.

¹ B578

82.10 We consider in detail later in this report¹ the accounts of this incident given by Corporal P and there give reasons for rejecting his evidence. In short, in view of the unreliability of Corporal P's evidence as a whole, we do not accept that he saw and fired at a pistol man at the rubble barricade. It is noteworthy that none of the three Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers who admitted firing from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp said anything about seeing a pistol man there, let alone that this pistol man fired a number of shots. Had a man with a pistol stood up at the rubble barricade he would have been in full view of the soldiers in Rossville Street, yet apart from Corporal P none reported seeing this. We cannot believe that anyone would have been so foolish as to stand holding a gun in such a conspicuous position.

Anti-Tank Platoon

Lieutenant 119

82.11 Lieutenant 119 was the Commander of Anti-Tank Platoon.

82.12 In his first RMP statement,¹ Lieutenant 119 recorded that as he and his men advanced along the western side of Rossville Street they came under fire from “snipers concealed in the Glenfadda Flats” at GR 43201683 (immediately within the south-east entrance to Glenfada Park North). He did not state that any of the soldiers of his platoon returned fire.

82.13 In his second RMP statement,¹ Lieutenant 119 recorded that he and his men took cover behind a wall at GR 43251688 (the western side of Rossville Street immediately north of the entrance to the alley between Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park North) after they had come under fire from at least two directions. According to this account he then heard a number of shots from what sounded like a pistol and an M1 rifle; and these shots passed very close over the heads of the soldiers. He estimated that seven to ten rounds were fired. The weapon that sounded like a pistol was located about 30m ahead of him at ground level, at the southern corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. Lieutenant 119 stated that he saw muzzle flashes but did not see the weapon or the person holding it, who was clearly aiming quickly around the corner of the building without showing himself. The weapon that sounded like an M1 rifle was located at a window towards the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, probably on the top floor. Lieutenant 119 did not state that any of the soldiers of his platoon returned fire.

82.14 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant 119 recorded that as he and his men disembarked from their vehicles they came under fire from an M1 carbine in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and from single shots fired from a low velocity weapon at the south-east entrance to Glenfada Park North. He saw muzzle flashes as the low velocity weapon was fired. He moved forward to the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, which gave protection against the low velocity fire. Again Lieutenant 119 did not state that any of the soldiers of his platoon returned fire.

82.15 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant 119 said that he and his men took cover at the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk after they had come under fire from an M1 carbine and from a pistol or other hand-held weapon. He thought that about eight or nine rounds had been fired with the M1 carbine from the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats on about the middle floor, and that three or four rounds had been fired with the pistol around the southern corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. He saw muzzle flashes from the pistol. Asked whether his men had returned fire, Lieutenant 119 initially said that he had heard but not seen fire being returned in the direction of the pistol man, but then said that he had seen one of his men fire one aimed shot. He said that he could not say which soldier this had been.

82.16 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant 119 told us that he was aware that he and his men had been under fire at this stage, but he no longer recalled the details, nor did he now recall his men firing their rifles from the low walls.

82.17 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lieutenant 119 again said that he lacked recollection of these matters. He was asked how it had come about that even when he gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, he had apparently recalled the firing of no more than one shot from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk.² He replied that he did not know, but assumed that the reason was that “a lot of other things were going on at the same time” and that his attention had been distracted by “the general situation”. He said that he had no recollection of any of his men reporting at this stage that he had hit a target.³ He rejected Private 027’s account of concerted firing by a number of soldiers towards the rubble barricade.⁴ We consider Private 027’s evidence below.⁵

² Day 363/135-137

³ Day 363/137-138

⁴ Day 363/141-144

⁵ Paragraphs 82.46–61

- 82.18 Lieutenant 119 did not suggest at any stage that he had observed gunmen at or firing from the rubble barricade, as opposed to the south-east entrance into Glenfada Park North.
- 82.19 Had there been a pistol man where Lieutenant 119 claimed to have seen flashes, it seems to us that other soldiers would also have seen him. Yet no other soldier suggested that he had seen a pistol man at the south-east corner of Glenfada Park North, or flashes from that position, or that he had fired at a gunman in that position.
- 82.20 As we describe elsewhere in this report,¹ we have found much of Lieutenant 119's evidence to be unsatisfactory. We do not accept his unsupported account of seeing flashes from a gunman firing from the south-east corner of Glenfada Park North. Nor do we accept his equally unsupported account of witnessing someone firing about eight or nine rounds with an M1 carbine from near the southern end of the top or middle floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. It will have been noted that the reason Lance Corporal J gave for taking cover was that there were riflemen firing from the rubble barricade. It will also have been noted that the gunman in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats whom Corporal E claimed to have engaged fired, according to Corporal E, three shots with what appeared to be a machine pistol. Corporal E could hardly have missed seeing a man firing eight or nine shots from an M1 carbine, had such an event in fact occurred. Private G did give accounts of fire coming from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and we consider his evidence next.
- ¹ Paragraphs 24.51, 93.34, 93.43–44, 93.51, 93.54, 96.4–7, 100.15–17 and 113.58–60
- 82.21 Later in this chapter¹ we consider the evidence of soldiers who must have been close to Lieutenant 119 but did not observe incoming fire.

Private G

- 82.22 In his first RMP statement,¹ Private G recorded that a gunman in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats fired about three shots at members of his platoon soon after they had disembarked from their vehicles. About 30 seconds later, the soldiers again came under fire from Block 1. About six of the soldiers took cover behind a low wall. Some of the men returned fire when the gunman was located.

¹ B168

82.23 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private G recorded that after disembarking from his vehicle, he ran to take cover against the wall of an old building at the northern end of Rossville Street. According to this account, shots were fired at him and the soldiers who were with him in that position. Although he was not sure, Private G thought that these shots might have been fired from the Rossville Flats. The sound came from that direction. He heard the bullets pass overhead. He and the other soldiers moved “down the new building of Columbcille Court to the low wall at its far end”. He heard quite a bit of firing at this stage from the Rossville Flats and the area of the rubble barricade. This included automatic fire that he thought came from a Thompson sub-machine gun. Members of his platoon were returning fire from the same position as Private G, who was looking in a different direction and did not himself identify any targets.

¹ B185

82.24 Private G gave a similar account in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.¹ He said that the automatic fire was coming from above ground level, but from a “pretty low” level and definitely not from the top of the Rossville Flats. Private G heard fire being returned by the soldiers with him at the low wall, but could not say which of them had fired.

82.25 Again, none of the Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers claimed to have fired at anyone armed with a sub-machine gun. Elsewhere in this report¹ we give reasons for our view that Private G lied about his actions on Bloody Sunday, which has led us to conclude that it would be unwise to rely upon his evidence save where otherwise supported. In our view his accounts do not support those of Lieutenant 119, who said nothing about automatic fire or his soldiers returning fire at the rifleman he claimed to have seen firing from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

¹ Paragraphs 94.34, 100.11, 108.17, 112.13 and 123.98

Private H

82.26 Elsewhere in this report,¹ we have discussed the order in which Private H made his three RMP statements. In his RMP statement taken by Corporal Smith,² which in our view was the third of those statements that he gave, Private H recorded that, after hearing gunfire from the rubble barricade, he took cover behind “a four foot brick wall which runs from the South wall of number 1 Columbcille Court, East to Rossville Street”. According to this account, he thought that two gunmen were firing from the rubble barricade. Two soldiers in his location engaged the gunmen, who ceased firing. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ he confirmed that the description of his location given in this statement was likely to have been intended to refer to the southern end of Kells Walk.

² B229

82.27 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private H recorded that he and other soldiers moved forward to two low walls at the end of “Columbcille Court on Rossville Street” and there came under fire from at least two gunmen at the rubble barricade. Other members of his platoon returned the fire and the gunmen ceased firing.

¹ B233

82.28 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private H said that he had definitely seen two gunmen at the rubble barricade. He could not be certain whether there had been more. The gunmen were armed with what he took to be small rifles or machine guns. Some soldiers fired at them from his location.

82.29 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private H told us that he no longer remembered seeing any other soldiers open fire from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, nor did he remember seeing any gunmen at the rubble barricade.

¹ B264

82.30 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private H repeated that he lacked present recollection, but said that the evidence that he gave to the Widgery Inquiry must have been right. He said that he did not see Lance Corporal F firing from the low walls towards the rubble barricade.²

¹ Day 377/28-30

² Day 377/33

82.31 We consider the accounts given by Private H elsewhere in this report.¹ It will be seen that he made a number of muddled and inconsistent RMP statements; and also gave an account of his own firing that we have found unbelievable. In our view it would be unwise to rely upon any of his accounts of what he saw or did on Bloody Sunday. It will be noted that his account of soldiers firing at gunmen armed with small rifles or machine guns at the rubble barricade is not supported by either of the members of Anti-Tank Platoon who admitted firing at targets at the rubble barricade, or by Corporal P of Mortar Platoon who claimed to have seen and shot a pistol man at that location.

¹ Paragraphs 97.27–49, 99.7–10, 100.12–14, 105.9–31 and 123.155–160

Private INQ 635

82.32 Private INQ 635 was a member of Anti-Tank Platoon. He made no statement in 1972.

82.33 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 635 told us that he had moved only a few paces down Rossville Street after disembarking from his vehicle when he saw three or possibly four men move out from the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North towards the rubble barricade. Two or possibly three of these men were carrying weapons. According to this account he had a clear view of the wooden stocks of the weapons. He did not think that he had shouted a warning about the gunmen, but believed that the other soldiers of his section had also seen them, because their actions were so blatant, and because the soldiers all immediately took cover. Private INQ 635 told us that he moved with most of his section to a small wall at the southern end of Kells Walk and took cover behind another soldier at the eastern end of the wall. Six or seven soldiers of his platoon were on his right, including one who had his rifle to his shoulder and was pointing it over the wall.

82.34 Private INQ 635 told us that the men who had come out from Glenfada Park North walked at a fast pace towards the middle of the barricade from west to east, holding their weapons down. They were not hidden by the barricade, either because it was not high enough or because they were not crouching. He assumed that they were moving to a firing position. He did not remember seeing anyone else at the barricade, although there was a crowd of people some distance away to the south and slightly to his right. He did not remember any incoming fire from the area of the barricade, but he heard one or more of the soldiers on his right fire shots towards the barricade. He did not know how many rounds were fired and did not remember seeing which soldiers fired them. He could not remember whether the shots were fired separately or together. He assumed that the shots were being fired at the gunmen at the barricade, but he was not looking at the barricade because he was taking cover, and so he did not see anyone fall. He then heard an order to cease firing. He could not recall by whom or from where this order was given. He could not distinctly recall whether Colonel Wilford was present, but believed that senior officers must have been in the immediate vicinity because of the order that he heard. During this incident he heard other gunfire as well as the shots fired by the soldiers at Kells Walk. He could not remember whether he heard only high velocity rounds or whether he also heard pistol fire.

82.35 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 635 rejected a suggestion that one or more of the men at the barricade might have been carrying a piece of wood rather than a firearm. He was sure that he had seen at least two men with weapons. Although his current recollection was only of seeing the wooden stocks, he thought that he had seen more of the weapons. He agreed that the gunmen were taking an enormous risk of being seen and shot. They were only in his view for a matter of seconds. The firing started as he reached the wall and once he had taken cover behind the wall he did not see the men again. He did not see them take up firing positions. Private INQ 635 said that he believed that one of the soldiers behind the wall with him had been Private Longstaff. He had a picture in his mind of the soldier at the wall with his rifle to his shoulder but he did not know which soldier this was. He said that the number of shots fired from the southern end of Kells Walk was “more than two or three”, but he could not say how many shots were fired, nor could he say whether more than one soldier fired them.

82.36 Private INQ 635 told us that he had no recollection of seeing anyone with a pistol behind the barricade, or anyone with a weapon at the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North other than the men who came out to the barricade. He did not recall hearing any incoming fire from the Rossville Flats or from the area of the barricade. He said that when he saw the gunmen at the barricade¹ they were in an area that he indicated by marking a photograph² (near the centre of the western part of the barricade). He also said that he thought that he had become confused about the order to cease firing by watching television coverage over the years, and that his recollection of hearing such an order might relate to another occasion.³ He told us that he did not know why no statement was taken from him at the time about this incident.⁴

³ Day 352/1-2

² C635.12

⁴ Day 352/64-67

82.37 We do not accept the evidence of Private INQ 635, given many years after Bloody Sunday, of seeing two or three men carrying weapons come from the south-east corner of Glenfada Park North and move in the open towards the rubble barricade. Apart from the fact that no other soldier has given an account of seeing this, or anything like it, we cannot believe that anyone would have been so foolish as to come carrying weapons into the view of a substantial number of soldiers only some 80 yards away.

Private INQ 1237

82.38 Private INQ 1237 was also a member of Anti-Tank Platoon. He too made no statement in 1972.

82.39 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ he told us that when he disembarked from his vehicle there were some high flats to his right and a huge crowd in the corner of a big open space ahead of him and to his left. He did not remember seeing a rubble barricade. There may have been between 600 and 1,500 people in the crowd. A hail of missiles, including more than one petrol bomb, was being thrown towards the soldiers but most of them were falling short because the crowd was, on Private INQ 1237's estimate, about 150 yards away.

82.40 Private INQ 1237 told us¹ that within seconds he saw six to eight soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon, including Lance Corporal F, Private G and Lance Corporal J, in a "rough line facing the crowd" about ten to 15 yards beyond and to the east of the parked Army vehicles. Some of them were lying prone and others were kneeling. Private INQ 1237 stated that he seemed to recall that there was an incline in the ground or a wall that provided cover for the soldiers from any threat from the southern part of Rossville Street, but he had been shown a photograph of the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk² and said that this was not where he saw the soldiers. According to this account the soldiers opened fire at the crowd with their rifles.

82.41 Private INQ 1237 told us¹ that he imagined that they fired a minimum of about 30 to 40 shots intermittently over a period of a few seconds, although it "seemed to last an eternity". These were aimed shots. According to this account, he saw the soldiers tracking their rifles from side to side and then firing. He did not see any civilian gunmen or anyone falling wounded or killed. He did not see the strikes of any incoming bullets or hear any incoming fire, but it was difficult to "pick anything out" because of other noises such as the sound of breaking glass or landing bricks and stones. He then heard Warrant Officer Class II Lewis behind him shouting "Cease-fire, stop your firing". Private INQ 1237 had the impression that the soldiers were already ceasing their fire as Warrant Officer Class II Lewis came forward. Private INQ 1237 was not aware of any other officer in the area. The whole episode took no more than one to one and a half minutes. When it was over, the crowd was still there but had been subdued. Private INQ 1237 recalled seeing 500 to 600 people waving white handkerchiefs over their heads. Then people started screaming “Get help” or “You shot them”. Private INQ 1237 could not see any injured civilians because of the density of the crowd.

82.42 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 1237 said that he did not remember seeing three blocks of flats in front of him and to his left. He did not think that he had overestimated the size of the crowd in his written statement. He recalled that the place where the soldiers took up position was a “low rubble wall that was broken down in the open space”.² He was asked whether Lance Corporal F, Private G and Lance Corporal J were the only three soldiers of whom he could say with certainty that he had seen them firing, and said that they were. It was possible that other soldiers in the group had not fired their weapons.

82.43 Private INQ 1237 said that his estimate of 30 to 40 shots being fired was just his best recollection. There did not seem to be a lot of firing but it happened quickly. When the soldiers opened fire the crowd was still about the same size as it had been when they disembarked, and missiles were still being thrown. He did not recall any warnings being shouted by other soldiers of his platoon about gunmen. He did not see anyone in the crowd with a firearm.

82.44 Private INQ 1237 was asked whether he could be mistaken in his recollection that Warrant Officer Class II Lewis had shouted a ceasefire order soon after soldiers of his platoon had begun firing in Rossville Street. He said that this was what he recalled, but he could not be sure.¹ Private INQ 1237 was told that Private G had not admitted firing any shots towards the barricade. He replied that, whether or not Private G fired a shot, he was “on the front row”. Private INQ 1237 was surprised that he was never asked to make a statement for the Widgery Inquiry.² He said that when Lance Corporal F was firing towards the crowd he was perhaps about 20 or 30 feet away from him. Private INQ 1237 said that it was not possible that the ceasefire order had been given by Lieutenant 119 rather than by Warrant Officer Class II Lewis.³

³ Day 366/71-72

² Day 366/67-71

82.45 We formed the view that Private INQ 1237 had such a confused memory of events that it would be unwise to rely upon his account, given long after the event. Nothing in it lent any support to the accounts given by the Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers who admitted firing at targets at the rubble barricade, or to those given by Corporal P.

Private 027

82.46 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 027, a member of Anti-Tank Platoon, recorded that he and four or five other members of his platoon, including Lance Corporal F, reached a 2ft 6in high garden wall with Rossville Street on their left and Block 1 of the Rossville Flats further down the street. According to this account, as they took shelter behind the wall, someone shouted “Sniper”. Almost immediately, members of the platoon fired at the rubble barricade. Private 027 saw the strikes of several rounds on the barricade, but could not say which soldiers had fired. Their target appeared to be a male civilian. Private 027 stated that he believed that this man was carrying a firearm, possibly a rifle. The man fell almost immediately. At the same time, Private 027 saw “two men of the machine platoon” at the “North east corner of Rossville Flats”, who also appeared to be firing at targets located behind the central section of the barricade, which consisted of white masonry. Private 027 did not observe the effect of their shots. An order to cease fire was then shouted from the rear and repeated by the soldiers near to Private 027. He could not say who gave the original order.

82.47 In his supplementary written statement taken by John Heritage on 8th March 1972,¹ and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,² Private 027 recorded that Lance Corporal F was one of the soldiers who fired in the direction of the barricade. When the soldiers opened fire, Private 027 looked over the wall and saw a man who had something in his hands that appeared to be a weapon. Private 027 aimed his rifle at the man in preparation for shooting, but the man fell before Private 027 could fire. This happened within ten seconds of the other soldiers opening fire. At this stage Private 027 could see an Armoured Personnel Carrier drawn up at the “near corner” of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. A group of “our men” was standing around the vehicle, aiming rifles and baton guns in the direction of the barricade. Private 027 saw the rifles being fired. By this time the crowd on the other side of the barricade was running away. Some people were crawling down the side of Block 1 from the barricade to its far corner. He saw shots from “our troops” striking the centre of the barricade. He was scanning the flats, and his attention was directed away on a number of occasions, and so he did not see any other civilians hit, or any other civilians with weapons. An order to cease fire was then shouted from the rear and repeated by the soldiers near to Private 027. He could not say who gave the original order.

² B1551-B1552

82.48 It will be noted that in these statements Private 027 gave an account of men from his platoon firing at a man with a firearm at the rubble barricade, whereas both Lance Corporal F and Lance Corporal J said that they had fired at a nail bomber.

82.49 Later in this report¹ we describe the various accounts later given by Private 027. In his account written in or about 1975,² Private 027 stated that he was with the leading group of soldiers as they reached a “small garden at the corner of Kells Walk”. They were approximately 100 yards from the crowd. Lance Corporal F fired at the centre of the crowd from behind the low wall that ran around the garden. Private G immediately jumped down beside Lance Corporal F and also opened fire. On the pavement just beyond the wall, Private INQ 635 also began firing. Looking at the centre of the barricade, Private 027 saw two bodies fall. He brought his rifle to the aim and tracked across the people in front of him, who were mostly men but included some women and children. He could see no-one with a weapon and so lowered his rifle. He could best describe his feelings as “amazed, although this is very inadequate”. There were now half a dozen other soldiers positioned side by side. Private 027 asked himself whether they knew something that he did not. Opposite the soldiers of his platoon, “members of the machine guns” were also firing at quite a rapid rate. He estimated that 100 rounds were fired at the crowd in the first 30 seconds of firing.

² B1565.005-B1565.006

82.50 This account continued with a description of people falling, bodies being dragged away, and men lying on their faces, crawling along the pavement in front of Block 1 in an attempt to escape.¹ After “an eternity of timeless moments and sights”, Major Loden’s voice came over the radio, ordering a ceasefire. Soldiers were “getting in while the going was good” by running up from the rear and elbowing their way into the line of firers. Private 027 shouted the order to cease fire and ran along the line, tapping the soldiers on their shoulders. The firing slackened and died as the crowd dispersed. Private 027 stated² that in the course of the operation Private INQ 635 fired ten rounds into the crowd from a private supply of dum-dum (ie modified) bullets. Because Private INQ 635 still had his quota of issued ammunition, he got away with saying in the subsequent investigations that he had fired no shots. Other soldiers in Private 027’s vehicle did the same.

82.51 In his draft for a proposed book written in or about 1999,¹ Private 027 said that he was in the first group of a few soldiers to arrive at a low garden wall, perhaps 2ft or 3ft high, projecting from a block of flats on the right. As they reached the wall, a soldier on the pavement just ahead of him knelt and fired in the direction of the centre of the crowd behind the barricade. This was the first shot fired by a member of his platoon of which Private 027 was aware. Almost immediately other soldiers arrived on the scene, took up positions around the wall and opened fire. White chips and dust flew off the barricade as rounds struck it. Private 027 saw two men fall among the rubble. He scanned the crowd through the sights of his rifle, trying to identify a target, but failed to locate one. He did not understand at what the other soldiers were firing. As the crowd pulled back, he saw a prostrate body by the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats with someone kneeling beside it. Others were crawling or bent double as they tried to move away. He saw “soldiers from the machine gun platoon” around a stationary vehicle near the northern end of Block 1. One of them was firing along the front of the block. The muzzle flash and smoke discharge were clearly visible. Other soldiers were arriving at the garden wall. One member of Composite Platoon was smiling broadly and said something like “... isn't this great” before eagerly joining in with those who were firing from the wall. The firing had become intermittent by the time Private 027 received a ceasefire order from Major Loden over the radio. Private 027 shouted the order out several times and clapped some of those around him on the shoulder as he did so.

82.52 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 027 told us that the crowd was south of the rubble barricade, “slightly to the east towards the Rossville Flats”. A soldier of his section, identified subsequently by Private 027 in his supplementary written statement to this Inquiry² as Lance Corporal F, started firing towards the centre of the crowd as soon as he had reached the pavement by the end of the garden wall. Private 027 was standing behind Lance Corporal F. Within seconds, other soldiers came on the scene and joined in the firing. Private 027 saw the strikes of bullets on the barricade. He recalled that the barricade was white, but may simply have seen white dust rising from it when it was hit. Two people towards the centre of the barricade fell within a few seconds of each other during the opening burst of fire.

82.53 Private 027 told us¹ that he moved to his right and stood “at the junction between the wall and Kells Walk”. The other soldiers were to his left. A member of Composite Platoon ran up and pushed himself in between two other soldiers who were firing, so that he could open fire himself. He indicated to Private 027 that he thought that what was happening was great. Private 027 thought that this soldier was a Corporal but could not recall his name. Private 027 scanned the crowd through the sights of his rifle, trying to identify a target, but did not see anyone with a weapon, nor did he see or hear any explosive device. He lowered his rifle, looked at the firing soldiers and tried to see their targets. He was unable to do so, and recalled feeling some inadequacy as a result. He could not recall which other soldiers had been there, although those present included “all the characters” in his section. He had the impression that some soldiers had not wanted to miss the chance to fire their weapons, and that an absence of officers at the scene had contributed to what happened.

82.54 Private 027 stated¹ that he could not say how many rounds any individual soldier had fired. Initially, when only two or three soldiers were firing, he would say that shots were being fired steadily at intervals of a second or two. As more soldiers arrived, the shooting intensified, and continued for a number of minutes. Private 027 thought that he could remember Private G firing from the southern end of Kells Walk, and said that it was likely that he had done so because he always acted as a pair with Lance Corporal F. Private 027 also had a mental image of Private INQ 635 firing from this location, but was not now sure whether this was correct.

82.55 According to this account,¹ after a period of immobility, the crowd broke up and people tried to flee. Some could be seen crouching or crawling on the pavement in front of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. One man was apparently prostrate with someone kneeling beside him. Private 027 thought that by the time he saw these people he had moved further south down Rossville Street, because he recalled looking almost immediately to his left and seeing a Mortar Platoon vehicle at the northern end of Block 1. A soldier standing in the open near the corner of Block 1 was aiming his rifle to the south, along the length of the block. Private 027 saw a muzzle flash and discharge of smoke as the soldier fired. Private 027 could not say how many times the soldier fired.

82.56 Private 027 then told us¹ that as the crowd dispersed, the volume of firing subsided. He stated that he received a ceasefire order over the radio from Major Loden, and relayed it to the members of his section by shouting it several times and tapping some of the men on the shoulder. The firing came to an end. Private 027 stated that it was not true, as he had claimed in his RMP statement, that someone had shouted “sniper” when the soldiers were at the southern end of Kells Walk, and that the references in that statement and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry to a civilian with a firearm falling in Rossville Street had been pure fabrication.² Private 027 told us that it may have been an overstatement to say in his account written in or about 1975 that 100 rounds were fired at the crowd in the first 30 seconds of firing. On the other hand, he thought that an estimate of 50 rounds in the first two or three minutes would be too low. He recalled continuous and sustained firing over a period of several minutes.³

³ B1565.056

² B1565.050-B1565.054

82.57

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 027 said that it was his impression that when Lance Corporal F began firing the crowd stretched from one side of Rossville Street to the other and was of “some depth”. His recollection was that Lance Corporal F was kneeling in approximately the same position as the soldier shown standing on the left in Jeffrey Morris’s photograph of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp,² or perhaps a little further back.

82.58

Private 027 thought that after a short period of time soldiers of both Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon had arrived at the scene and opened fire. The situation was fluid but he said that he recalled that at some stages there were soldiers both behind the more northerly of the two low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk and on the ramp between those walls. Private 027 marked an aerial photograph¹ (reproduced below) to show where he saw two people fall in the initial burst of firing.

82.59 Private 027 told us that he could not now recall with any certainty which individuals other than Lance Corporal F had opened fire from the southern end of Kells Walk, although he believed that Private G and Private INQ 635 had been present, and believed that his account written in or about 1975 accurately recorded what at that time he believed had happened. Private 027 could not say whether the Corporal of Composite Platoon described in his written statement to this Inquiry had been one of the soldiers who opened fire. When he said in that statement¹ that “all the characters” in his section had been present, his comment had contained “an element of assumption”.² He was unwilling to estimate the total number of shots fired from the southern end of Kells Walk, saying that any figure that he gave would be a guess. Private 027 said that he saw nothing that appeared to justify the shooting that took place, and did not recall any of the soldiers saying why or at what he was firing, or warning of the presence of any gunman or bomber. He said that he did not know the identity of the soldier who fired from the northern end of Block 1, and that he did not see at what that soldier was firing. Private 027 told us³ that he could not have had direct knowledge that Private INQ 635 had fired rounds from a private supply of dum-dum bullets into the crowd, and could not recall why he had said in his account written in or about 1975 that this had happened. Private 027 said⁴ that it had not been true to say in his RMP statement that he could not say which soldiers had fired from the southern end of Kells Walk, since he had seen Lance Corporal F fire. On the other hand, he said that he had no reason to think that the account that he gave in that statement of firing by soldiers from the northern end of Block 1 had been fabricated. He could not explain why in that statement he had said that the ceasefire order was shouted from the rear, when his current recollection was that the order was given over the radio.

82.60 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 635 said that he did not fire any shots from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private INQ 635 said that he was certain that he fired no shots and that Private 027 had been wrong when he said that he had done so. Private INQ 635 denied that he had ever had dum-dum bullets in his possession, had ever tampered with bullets to create dum-dums, or had ever had a private supply of ammunition.

82.61 We have commented elsewhere in this report¹ on the accounts and evidence given by Private 027. Much of it was exaggerated and some of it clearly wrong or at best second-hand. However, we have no reason to doubt that he witnessed firing by soldiers from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp; and we accept that despite what he had put in his RMP statement and said to the Widgery Inquiry, he did not see any legitimate target for this firing. We do not accept that Private INQ 635 was one of those firing, an allegation for which there is no other support. We deal with evidence relating to dum-dum bullets elsewhere in this report.²

Composite Platoon

Captain 200

82.62 Captain 200 was the Commander of Composite Platoon.

82.63 In his RMP statement,¹ Captain 200 did not refer to firing by soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. He did record that as he was deciding to direct some of his soldiers along the right-hand side of Rossville Street, he “heard the burst of automatic fire and one or two single shots fired in our general direction”. The reference to one or two single shots fired in his general direction did not appear in the manuscript draft of the statement.²

² B2022.043

82.64 In the transcript of an interview conducted on 2nd February 1972 for the purposes of the Thames Television This Week programme Northern Ireland – Two Sides of the Story,¹ but not used in the programme itself, Captain 200 is recorded as having said that he saw at least one person with a weapon behind the rubble barricade, at least four or five minutes after the first shots had been fired at the soldiers.

82.65 Captain 200’s undated manuscript note of the sequence of events¹ suggests that after he had heard automatic fire and deployed his platoon, and while he was still wearing his respirator, he saw what he described as “3 men Anti-Tk pl – barrier 2 hds [ie heads]² fire posns crowd dispersed – scattered too bunched – (my men)”.

² Day 367/119

82.66 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 recorded that after he had disembarked from his vehicle he went up to Major Loden, whose vehicles had stopped at the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street, and asked what Major Loden wanted Composite Platoon to do. According to this account, Major Loden told Captain 200 to assist Mortar Platoon. At about this time, Captain 200 heard automatic fire. He decided to deploy half of Composite Platoon in support of Mortar Platoon and half in support of Anti-Tank Platoon. At this stage he saw at least three soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon firing their rifles from behind a wall by “the long straight building between Rossville Street and Kells Walk”. Captain 200 looked to see at what they were firing. He saw the barricade and perhaps two heads immediately behind it. Beyond them, he could see about 30 people scattered on the western side of Rossville Street near Glenfada Park. There were more people scattered further down Rossville Street. Captain 200 took in all this in a matter of seconds. He thought that the crowd had dispersed rapidly and that gunmen were likely to appear. He told his men on the western side of Rossville Street to spread out. It was at about this time that he removed his respirator.

82.67 Captain 200 recorded in the same statement¹ that when he spoke in the Thames Television interview about the first shots fired at the soldiers, he had been referring to the burst of automatic fire that he said that he had heard. When he said in that interview that at least four or five minutes after those shots were fired, he saw at least one person with a weapon behind the barricade, he had been speaking on the spur of the moment and without thinking hard about what he had seen. He had seen people behind the barricade when Anti-Tank Platoon opened fire, but he could not say positively that these people had been armed.

¹ B1988

82.68 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 said that he saw the heads of at least two people behind the barricade at whom the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon were firing from behind the wall. One head was popping up and down, while the other was crouching much lower. Captain 200, who was still wearing his respirator, assumed from their behaviour that the people behind the barricade were gunmen. He said² that at the time when he saw soldiers firing towards the barricade, there was a lot of firing but none that he could identify as fire coming from the barricade. He saw no weapons at the barricade but assumed that they were there because he could not believe that the soldiers would have been firing if they were not, because of the way in which the men behind the barricade were moving, and because he thought that any unarmed civilians would have left the barricade.

² WT15.59-WT15.61

82.69 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 told us that when he made the first of two visits to the position at Kells Walk to which soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon had deployed, he would still have been wearing his respirator. He thought it was at this stage that one of the soldiers taking cover behind the wall at the southern end of Kells Walk had pointed out a man holding a pistol in his hand, with his arm extended out of an open window about three floors up in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Captain 200 thought that he had been told afterwards that this soldier was Lance Corporal F, but was not sure whether this was correct. Captain 200 thought that he had seen the pistol. He had no recollection of the pistol being fired. The soldier fired one aimed shot at the pistol man. Captain 200 had the impression that the pistol man had ducked back in and that the shot had missed, but he was not sure about this. Captain 200 also saw heads bobbing up and down behind the barricade and formed the firm impression that gunmen there were taking sightings of the soldiers.

82.70 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 said that it was his impression that there had been a time when soldiers of both Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon had been together at the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. He recalled² that at some stage he had seen soldiers firing from behind the low walls, and heads bobbing up and down behind the barricade, but he could not now remember when or from where he had seen this. He could not recall the basis of his impression that those behind the barricade were gunmen, and said that this was “a very small point of my vision at that time”. He said³ that he did not see a weapon at the barricade, and that all that he could remember⁴ was that there had appeared to be two people behind the barricade and that he had glimpsed some soldiers, presumed by him to be members of Anti-Tank Platoon, firing from Kells Walk towards the barricade. Captain 200 said⁵ that the incident involving the pistol man in the Rossville Flats had been described out of sequence in his written statement to this Inquiry and had in fact occurred at a later stage of events.

³ Day 368/54

82.71 It will be noted that Captain 200 did not see firing from the rubble barricade, or anyone he could identify as a gunman at the rubble barricade.

82.72 We should add that it seems to us that Captain 200's account of being told that there was a man with a pistol, with his arm extended out of an open window about three floors up in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, is likely to relate to the shooting at Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at a late stage, after the events of Sectors 4 and 5. We consider this shooting later in this report.¹

Sergeant K

82.73 In his RMP statement,¹ Sergeant K recorded that when he had reached a point "level with the north west corner of a block of maisonettes of Columbcille Court" he saw members of Support Company at "the north east corner" fire one to two shots towards "the flats area". The soldiers of Support Company then moved away and Sergeant K and those with him took up the positions that they had vacated. Sergeant K moved behind a small brick wall at GR 43261692 (the southern end of Kells Walk).

¹ B290

82.74 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K recorded that soldiers of Support Company were taking cover and firing from the wall at the southern end of "the low-rise flats in front of Columbcille Court".

¹ B298

82.75 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K said that the soldiers of Support Company were firing "into the area of Rossville Flats".

82.76 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K told us that he saw soldiers of Support Company standing behind a low wall at the point marked B on the plan attached to his statement² (the southern end of Kells Walk), but that he could not recall what these soldiers were doing. He stated that he did not "specifically recall" that they were shooting.

82.77 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K confirmed that he remembered soldiers being at the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk before he reached that point, but said that he no longer remembered seeing any of those soldiers fire their weapons.

He could not say more precisely what he had meant when he said in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that these soldiers were firing “into the area of Rossville Flats”. He said that he had not seen at what these soldiers were firing.²

² Day 364/184

82.78 As will be seen when we discuss the firing by soldiers of Composite Platoon from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp,¹ Sergeant K did not suggest that his men, moving up behind the Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers, had come under fire, which in our view casts further doubt on the evidence that there had been firing from the rubble barricade.

Other members of Composite Platoon

82.79 Later in this report¹ we discuss the evidence of other members of Composite Platoon about incoming fire. For reasons we give there, we are of the view that their evidence does not provide support for the suggestion that there were gunmen at or firing from the rubble barricade.

Warrant Officer Class II Lewis

82.80 In his interview with Peter Taylor,¹ Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that at a certain stage Major Loden made him aware “that there was slight confusion”, and he said that he would try to find out what was going on. He ran forward to the platoon deployed “on the flats on the right, behind the low wall”. He saw that the soldiers of this platoon were aiming their weapons, and was concerned to know at what they were aiming or firing. The Platoon Sergeant told him: “we have identified gunmen on the barricades there are people who are armed on the barricades”. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that he then saw the strikes of two or three high velocity rounds on the ground “about 150 yards forward of the barricades”. These rounds struck the ground between the rubble barricade and a crowd “right at the far side of what appeared to me to be a very large square”. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that he ran back to the command vehicle to give a report to Major Loden. He also said that he could not recall seeing any gunmen on the barricade but his vision was impaired because he was wearing a respirator.

82.81 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Warrant Officer Class II Lewis told us that as he approached the low wall, he saw that Sergeant INQ 1694 (the Platoon Sergeant of Anti-Tank Platoon)² was there with about three or four other members of his platoon. Sergeant INQ 1694 was still wearing his respirator, as was Warrant Officer Class II Lewis. Sergeant INQ 1694 was looking south down Rossville Street with his rifle up. On each side of him, there was another soldier half-crouching behind the wall in a firing position. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis told us that he then heard two high velocity shots. He formed the impression that these shots had been fired by the two soldiers on either side of Sergeant INQ 1694. He went onto the ramp alongside Sergeant INQ 1694 and asked him at whom his men were firing. Sergeant INQ 1694 replied that they had identified gunmen on the barricade. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis looked down Rossville Street. There was no-one on the barricade, but there was “quite a lot of activity to the left of it as I looked at it, i.e. in front of the Rossville Flats, to the east side of the barricade”. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis then saw the strikes of two rounds on the pavement about 25m in front of the low wall, between the soldiers and the barricade. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis could not identify the source of these shots, but stated that he knew from their sound that they were high velocity rounds. Although he could not see anyone at the barricade, Warrant Officer Class II Lewis trusted Sergeant INQ 1694's judgement and was satisfied with his explanation of his soldiers' actions. He ran back to the command vehicle, and recalled that as he ran back, Colonel Wilford was running forward.

² Sergeant INQ 1694 died before this Inquiry was established and we have no evidence from him.

82.82 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that Sergeant INQ 1694 and the two soldiers on either side of him were behind the more southerly of the two low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. There were about three or four more soldiers behind the more northerly wall. He believed that these soldiers were all members of Anti-Tank Platoon. Each of the soldiers beside Sergeant INQ 1694 fired one shot while Warrant Officer Class II Lewis was present. Sergeant INQ 1694 told Warrant Officer Class II Lewis that they had identified gunmen on the barricade. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis scanned the whole area, looking to see whether there was anyone crouching or lying at the barricade. He was standing on the path between the low walls, wearing his respirator. He saw nobody on the barricade, but there were people to the left and right and in the far distance, running or milling around. He did not spend long looking at those people to see whether he could pick out anyone with a firearm. Then he saw the strikes of two rounds on cobblestones in front of the barricade. He had no means of knowing whether these rounds were fired by civilians or by soldiers. It was possible that soldiers standing very close to him fired them. He said² that these shots struck cobblestones about 25 to 30m in front of him, and that they were high velocity shots. Although he did not see any gunman at the barricade, he did not doubt that Sergeant INQ 1694 had told him the truth about what he and his men had seen. Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said³ that later that evening he ascertained from Sergeant INQ 1694 the identity of the two soldiers who had fired in his presence, but he could not now remember who they were.

³ Day 373/92-94

² Day 373/117-122; Day 373/250-251

82.83 It will be noted that Warrant Officer Class II Lewis said that he did not himself see any gunman at the rubble barricade, and that he had not been able to identify the source of the rounds that he said that he saw hitting the ground.

Conclusions on gunmen and firing from the rubble barricade

82.84 We are not persuaded by the evidence of Lance Corporal F, Lance Corporal J or Corporal E that there were gunmen at the rubble barricade or firing from there. We take the same view of the evidence of Corporal P concerning a man with a pistol, which we consider in detail below.¹ We have found nothing in the evidence of other soldiers that to our minds supports the suggestion that gunmen were at the rubble barricade or that there was firing from there. On the contrary, the evidence of the soldiers as a whole leads us to the opposite conclusion.

82.85 What must be borne in mind is that by the time soldiers opened fire towards the rubble barricade from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, there had been other gunfire, in the form of the shots fired by Lieutenant N up the Eden Place alleyway (discussed in the course of our consideration of the events of Sector 2¹), the initial shots fired by Corporal P (discussed above²) and shots fired by the pistol man described by Private 017 and others. In our view by this stage other firing had broken out in Sector 2. As we observe elsewhere in this report,³ and as Colonel James Ferguson told us, it is extremely difficult to know where fire is coming from in a built-up area.⁴ Although we do not believe that Corporal P considered himself to be under fire from the rubble barricade, it is possible that shots fired elsewhere led other soldiers in Sector 3 mistakenly to believe that they were under fire from that direction. However, even if this happened, it does not justify the firing at people at the rubble barricade by members of Anti-Tank Platoon, who did not claim to have fired at gunmen, or the firing by Corporal P, since we reject his account of firing at a pistol man at the rubble barricade.

Chapter 83: Nail and petrol bombs

Evidence of the explosion of nail bombs and the ignition of petrol bombs

83.1 As we have previously noted,¹ Lance Corporal F gave accounts of witnessing two nail bombs exploding about 40m from the rubble barricade, before the incident in which he claimed to have fired at a nail bomber behind the barricade. Corporal E told the Widgery Inquiry in his oral evidence that he heard an explosion like that of a nail bomb, which he had not mentioned in his previous accounts. Lance Corporal J said that he saw one nail bomb explode before the incident in which he claimed to have fired at a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade. As we explain in more detail later in this report,² he also said that he saw about two more explode after that incident, at a time when he had moved forward from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. As will be seen below,³ Private M of Composite Platoon said that he heard the sound of nail bombs exploding from the direction of the rubble barricade.

² Paragraphs 85.83–94

83.2 We have also previously noted¹ that Corporal E gave an account of seeing a petrol bomb smash and burn about 30 yards in front of the rubble barricade. As we explain later,² Private M said that he saw a petrol bomb thrown from the side of Glenfada Park and “exploding”³ in front of the rubble barricade.

83.4 Gunner 023, who was in the Peter England shirt factory in Little James Street, recorded in his Royal Military Police statement¹ that he heard an explosion coming from the area of Rossville Street, and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry² that he heard small explosions from the general area beyond the rubble barricade, one of which sounded like a small gelignite bomb. In his written statement to this Inquiry³ he told us that he no longer recalled hearing this.

83.5 These are the only soldiers who gave evidence of the explosion or ignition of nail or petrol bombs in Sector 3.

83.6 Neither Lieutenant 119 nor Captain 200, the respective Commanders of Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon, nor Major Loden, said at any stage that he saw or heard nail or petrol bombs being thrown or exploding or igniting. The same is the case with Warrant Officer Class II Lewis. Sergeant K, as will be seen below,¹ told the Widgery Inquiry that he had neither seen a nail bomb explode nor seen anyone with a nail bomb. Private INQ 635 told us that he recalled no nail bombs being thrown or exploding.² Private U told the Widgery Inquiry that he had heard no nail bombs at any time.³

² Day 352/13

83.7 Had nail or petrol bombs been thrown and exploded or ignited in Sector 3, we have no doubt that all or virtually all the soldiers in that area would have seen or heard them and reported what they had witnessed. There is no evidence from journalists or civilians of bombs of any kind exploding or igniting in this sector.

83.8 In these circumstances we have no doubt that the accounts of nail or petrol bombs exploding or igniting were false. Those giving evidence of actually seeing nail or petrol bombs exploding or igniting could hardly have come to believe, albeit mistakenly, that such bombs had been deployed; and in our view therefore must knowingly have given false accounts in this regard. This raises doubts in our minds about the reliability of their evidence on other matters.

Evidence of nail bombers at the rubble barricade

83.9 The accounts that Lance Corporal F and Lance Corporal J gave of a number of other matters were in our view false and knowingly so, as we explain elsewhere in this report.¹ For this reason we are of the view that we should not accept the claim of either that he fired at a nail bomber behind the rubble barricade unless other evidence supports it. We have found no evidence from any source that to our minds provides such support. As appears hereafter,² we are sure that none of the casualties at the rubble barricade was in possession of nail bombs. For reasons given elsewhere in this report,³ we reject the suggestion that there was an additional unidentified casualty at the rubble barricade who could have been a nail bomber.

² Paragraphs 86.55, 86.155, 86.364, 86.461 and 86.500

83.10 We are sure that there were no nail bombers at the rubble barricade. Whether Lance Corporal F or Lance Corporal J fired in the genuine but mistaken belief that he had seen a nail bomber is a matter that we consider later in this report.¹

Captain 200's list of soldiers who fired

84.1 As we have explained above¹ when dealing with the shot fired by Private L in a derelict building, Captain 200, the Commander of Composite Platoon, recorded in his Royal Military Police (RMP) statement dated 5th February 1972 that on his return to Clarence Avenue he "immediately ordered an ammunition check and preliminary questioned all those who had fired their weapons".² This suggests to us that he interviewed Private C, Lance Corporal D, Sergeant K, Private L and Private M at an early stage and before Major Loden compiled his List of Engagements. In this regard, it is notable that the order of the entries in Major Loden's List of Engagements suggests that he saw members of Mortar Platoon first, and then members of Machine Gun Platoon and Anti-Tank Platoon, with soldiers from Composite Platoon coming at the end. A further ground on which we think it likely that Captain 200 interviewed the Composite Platoon soldiers before Major Loden is that the latter would have been reliant on his Platoon Commanders to identify those who had fired, and then to send them to him to be interviewed. This sequence is supported by Captain 200's written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, in which he said:³

"13. ... At Clarence Avenue I asked my two Colour Sergeants in charge of the half platoons what rounds had been fired. Having been given a list of the soldiers who'd fired I then spoke to each soldier individually so that I was clear as to why they had fired and what targets they had engaged.

14. I reported the result to the company commander. I told him the names of the men that had fired ... I told him that we had fired 14 SLR rounds..."

³ B1987-1988

² B1982

84.2 A list of the soldiers of Composite Platoon who fired their rifles, with details of their firing, appears in the manuscript draft and in the final version of Captain 200's RMP statement.¹ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Captain 200 said that this list was based on notes that he had made when he interviewed the soldiers, although those notes have not survived. For the reasons that we have given, we consider that the list compiled by Captain 200 represents the first account given by those soldiers of Composite Platoon who said at the time that they had fired their weapons. With two exceptions we have found no evidence to suggest that any soldiers of Composite Platoon other than those listed by Captain 200 fired their rifles in Sector 3 or at all. The two exceptions are Private INQ 449, who gave no evidence in 1972 of firing and whose account we consider later in this report;³ and Private L, who told us (but again said nothing about it at the time) that he saw Corporal

INQ 1671 shoot and kill a gunman who was near the junction of Rossville Street and Pilot Row. For reasons given when we consider the evidence of Private L,⁴ we are of the view that this account is fantasy.

³ Paragraphs 123.69–96

² Day 367/146-149

⁴ Paragraph 84.71

84.3 Captain 200 said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that he prepared the manuscript draft of his RMP statement, which contained the list of soldiers who had fired their rifles, when he returned to Palace Barracks in Belfast two days after Bloody Sunday.¹ However, later in his evidence he said that he wrote the statement on about 5th February.²

² Day 368/36-37

84.4 It is convenient at this point to set out the list of firing soldiers compiled by Captain 200:¹

“Guinness Force fired 14 x 7.62 rounds and 2 rubber bullets. The 7.62 rounds were fired as follows:-

Soldier ‘K’: 1 x 7.62 from GR 43271691 to gunman at barricade 43231683 – missed.

Soldier ‘D’: 2 x 7.62 from GR 43261691 to gunman at window of Rossville Flats 43261684 – possible hit.

Soldier ‘C’: 3 x 7.62 from 43261691 to gunman at window of Rossville Flats 43261684 and 2 x 7.62 from same position at gunman at corner of Rossville Flats 43231680 – both possible hits.

Soldier ‘M’: 2 x 7.62 from GR 43271691 to gunman behind barricade 43231683 – possible hit.

Soldier ‘L’: 1 x 7.62 in rafters of ruin 43281696 at possible sniper in roof – deliberate miss after two warnings to come down. Man jumped down from roof (15 feet) and was arrested. Roof not searched for weapons. 2 x 7.62 from wall 43251688 at barricade 43231683 and 1 x 7.62 at same gunman as ‘C’ and ‘D’.”

84.5 In the entry relating to Private L in the manuscript draft of this list,¹ Captain 200 originally wrote “3 x 7.62 from wall” and then amended this to “2 x 7.62”.

84.6 We have already discussed¹ the entry relating to Private L's shot in the derelict building. We return to consider each of the other entries in our discussion of the accounts of the individual soldiers concerned.

Major Loden's List of Engagements

84.7 The 12th to 15th entries in Major Loden's List of Engagements¹ appear to relate to shooting incidents in Sector 3. For reasons given later in this report² it seems to us likely that the 12th entry relates to firing reported by Private C or Lance Corporal D or both from the top of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk, while in our view the 13th entry relates to other firing reported by Private C.

² Paragraphs 123.16–18

84.8 The 14th and 15th entries¹ are in identical terms, save that the second and third digits of the second grid reference in the 15th entry have been transposed. In our view this was an error, since the grid reference as written would put the firer some distance away in the Creggan:

“14. 1 gunman with rifle at GR 43231682 (barricade) shot from GR 43261682. Killed
Body recovered.

15. 1 gunman with rifle at GR 43231682 (barricade) shot from GR 42361682. Killed.

84.9 The grid references for the 14th entry were marked on the following map, prepared for the purposes of this Inquiry by the legal representatives of one of the families, with the red mark indicating the target and the blue mark indicating the position of the firer.¹ However, the position of the blue mark is inaccurate. It should be one small square further to the right.

84.10 The position of the firer does not correspond with any of the evidence. It seems to us that the most likely explanation is that a mistake was made in recording or transcribing the references and that the grid reference 43261682 should in fact have been 43261692. This would make the reference the same as appears in the 12th and 13th entries, and though it would put the firer just southern of the centre of Kells Walk, we consider that it was intended to put the firer at the southern end of Kells Walk. The mistake may have arisen from the accidental repeating of the last four digits of the grid reference for the gunman in the 14th and 15th entries (also 1682) when noting the position of the firer.

84.11 As will be seen,¹ Sergeant K never said that he had killed the man at whom he fired and indeed denied to the Widgery Inquiry that he had done so.² Thus the 14th and 15th entries are not consistent with his evidence at the time, as each refers to the gunman being killed and the body recovered. The evidence of Private L and Private M, which we consider below,³ is to the effect that they fired from the walls of the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk at two men crawling along the pavement beneath Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, a little distance from the area indicated in the 14th and 15th entries, and both said of each man, in the accounts that they gave in 1972, either that he had crawled or that he had been dragged into Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and neither claimed to know that both men had been killed. However, it seems to us possible that the references to the gunmen being killed and their bodies recovered were introduced by Major Loden. As we discuss later in this report,⁴ soldiers recovered three bodies from behind the rubble barricade and he may have assumed wrongly that two of these were the casualties described in the 14th and 15th entries. None of the other targets described in the List of Engagements appears to have been in the same area. We have considered the possibility that the fourth entry in the list might refer to firing in Rossville Street, in view of its reference to a barricade, but for reasons given in our discussion of the events of Sector 2,⁵ we are of the view that it is much more likely to refer to firing by Private R of Mortar Platoon.

⁴ Paragraphs 122.1–128

² WT15.87

⁵ Paragraphs 51.181–184

³ Paragraphs 84.41–101

84.12 We consider it likely that the 14th and 15th entries were the result of information provided by Private L and Private M and possibly also by Sergeant K, though none of them told us that he remembered reporting his shot or shots to Major Loden. The fact that the grid reference given for the targets of all three soldiers in Captain 200's list differs slightly from that given for the two gunmen in the 14th and 15th entries in Major Loden's list seems to us to be of no real significance, since, as we have observed elsewhere in this report,¹ such references should be regarded as approximations rather than precise positions. We think that the similarity between the grid references lends significant support to the view that the 14th and 15th entries in the List of Engagements refer to the firing of some or all of these three soldiers.

¹ Paragraphs 51.20 and 165.8

Colour Sergeant 002

84.13 As we have noted earlier in this report,¹ Captain 200 told the Widgery Inquiry that after Anti-Tank Platoon had moved forward "round the corner towards the Glenfada Park area" he ordered Colour Sergeant 002 to move his soldiers up to the wall from where that platoon had been firing.²

84.14 In his RMP statement timed at 1730 hours on 2nd February 1972,¹ Colour Sergeant 002 gave this account:

“About 1610 hrs Force with Support Company were ordered up to Barricade 12 which was situated across Rossville Street at the junction with William Street. Support Company mounted in APCs moved into Rossville Street. The Force because it was in soft skin vehicles debussed along side Nos 1 2 3 Rossville Street. When we debussed there was CS gas in that area and I heard shots from the area of Rossville Flats well to the front of Support Company. I saw members of Support Company take cover behind a wall adjacent to a block of two storey flats between Kells Walk and Rossville Street. I do not remember how many shots were fired. I then saw members of Support Company start to arrest people in the area between my position and the car park in front of Rossville Flats. My platoon then deployed themselves around the two storey block of flats where members of Support Company had previously taken cover. ‘K’ with ‘M’ and ‘L’ moved along side of the flats on the Rossville side and took up a position behind a wall about four feet high at the Southern end of the block of Flats. While I was moving up to join ‘K’, he fired one round of 7.62 at two males who were behind a pile of rubble about half way along Block 1 of Rossville Flats. When I joined ‘K’ I saw a male person dressed in dark jacket and trousers doing a leopard crawl towards the South end of No 1 Block. I saw that he had a rifle in the crook² of his elbow. I pointed him out to ‘M’ and ‘L’ and told them to fire at him. Both soldiers fired two rounds of 7.62 and the man was hit. A second man then crawled from behind the rubble. I could not see any weapon with him and as a group of people were standing inside the door to where he was crawling I ordered ‘M’ and ‘L’ to cease fire. This they did. The second person to leave the rubble then started to drag the man who had been hit towards the door. Then about four men came out of the flats and dragged both men inside.”

² This word appears as “crouch” in the typed version of the statement. The correct reading has been taken from the original manuscript version.

84.15 We return later in this chapter¹ to Colour Sergeant 002’s evidence of what he saw, when we consider the evidence given by the soldiers of what they saw at and near the rubble barricade, but we accept his evidence that Sergeant K, Private L and Private M of Composite Platoon moved to the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp. It follows in our view that these three soldiers arrived at the low walls after the firing by, according to their accounts, Lance Corporal F, Lance Corporal J and Corporal E.

Sergeant K

84.16 As we have indicated earlier,¹ it appears that Sergeant K reported to Captain 200 that he had missed his target. The grid reference in Captain 200's list puts Sergeant K's target on the western side of Rossville Street behind the rubble barricade, but in our view, as in the case of Major Loden's List of Engagements, it would be wrong to treat these references as necessarily recording accurately the information given by soldiers.

84.17 In his RMP statement dated 1st February 1972,¹ Sergeant K gave this account:

"When we were called to advance to a barricade at the junction William St/Rossville St, Londonderry. There I saw rioting taking place in and around the Rossville St area. They numbered between 4–700 persons of all ages and of both sexes.

As the Coy advanced the rioters fell back towards the Rossville Flats area. I moved with the Section 71A along the north east side of Rossville St, Londonderry.

I was armed with a SLR which had a magazine of 20 rounds affixed to it. It also had a telescopic sight affixed to it.

We advanced until we came level with the north west corner of a block of maisonettes of Columbcille Court. There I saw members of [...] Coy at the north east corner fire 1–2 shots towards the flats area. That element of [...] Coy then moved towards St Columbs Wells. We took over the positions they had vacated. I located myself behind a small brick wall at GR 43261692 together with other members of the Section and observed the flats area.

I saw two men crawling from behind a pile of rubble that forms part of a barricade across Rossville St, Londonderry. I saw the rear man who was crawling, appear to have a weapon in his hands. I cocked my weapon and fired 1 x 7.62 round aimed shot at him. I didn't observe a strike. 'L' and 'M' of my unit also fired at this gunman. I didn't observe the rounds they fired strike. The gunman disappeared into the flats. I fired no further rounds during the shooting incident. I think that I may have hit the gunman when I fired at him."

84.18 In the fourth paragraph of the above quotation the word "Support" has been blanked out before the word "Coy" in both places where that word appears. Although in his RMP statement¹ and in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry² Sergeant K referred to having had a self-loading rifle (SLR) with a telescopic sight, in his written statement to this Inquiry³ he described his weapon as a sniper rifle. We consider his original account the more likely to be accurate.

84.19

The following RMP map which accompanied this statement shows the position of Sergeant K at the southern end of Kells Walk and locates his target on the eastern side of Rossville Street in a position that would have been a little way behind the rubble barricade.¹

¹ B292

84.20 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K recorded that on disembarkation the soldiers put respirators on as there was still gas floating around. He described how soldiers of his call sign (71 Alpha) went along the front of the low-rise flats in front of Columbcille Court and took up position at the wall at the southern end of these flats, where soldiers from Support Company had been taking cover and firing, after those soldiers had moved off down Rossville Street and then to the right. His statement then continued:²

“From this position we were able to observe the area of the Rossville Flats and from behind the rubble barricade in Rossville Street we saw two men doing a leopard crawl and I could see the rear man was carrying what I could clearly see was a rifle. I then cocked my rifle and fired one round at this man. I could not see this man too clearly except to say that he was wearing a dark suit. It is difficult to say whether in fact I hit the man. Two other members of my platoon had fired at the man almost simultaneously. These were soldiers L and M. By this time the first man had reached the doors of the flats and had been pulled in by people and the second man eventually got level with the door and several people came to the doorway and I saw them pull him in.”

² B298

84.21 Sergeant K then stated that, after this, “firing from our position had stopped completely” and he moved into a car park facing Columbcille Court.¹

¹ B298

84.22 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Sergeant K said that he had been in service with the Parachute Regiment for nearly 14 years, had a Marksman’s Badge and was equipped with a rifle with a telescopic sight.¹ When asked whether he had taken cover behind the wall he replied that “we stayed close to the wall because there was need to”; and, asked what that need was, he replied: “Because if we had gone too far ahead we would have got mixed up with another Call Sign in front of us.”² He told the Widgery Inquiry that firing was taking place as soon as the soldiers of Composite Platoon had deployed from their vehicles, but he could not say where it was coming from. He then gave the following answers:³

“Q. What sort of firing?

A. Rifle fire and in general a lot of screaming and shouting and bottles being thrown.

Q. Could you tell where the rifle fire was coming from or where it was occurring?

A. I could not, sir. I could not say offhand.

Q. What sort of rifle fire was it?

A. 7.62. In the general confusion one tends to get mixed up with different types of weapon.

Q. Some of it, at any rate, was 7.62 – your own fire?

A. Yes.

Q. Before that had there in your recollection been any rubber bullets fired?

A. In the area of the Presbyterian Church before we moved in there had been rubber rounds fired.

Q. What about the waste ground?

A. Some in the waste ground, but not by the Call Sign I was with.

Q. Not your platoon. Did you see where the 7.62 firing was going on?

A. There was some going from the previous half-platoon that had already moved up along the low-rise flats into that small wall there. They were firing into the area of Rossville Flats, and that was part of Support Company.”

84.23

Sergeant K then told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen two men crawling from behind the rubble barricade towards the doors of the Rossville Flats. “The rear man was carrying a rifle. On seeing this weapon in his hand I cocked my weapon and fired one aimed shot. I could not say whether I hit him or not.” He said that the man he shot at stopped momentarily but continued to crawl. He agreed that he had not killed the man, but said that he might have hit him and that the man had appeared to lurch and then to carry on crawling. He described the men as doing a “leopard crawl”, ie lying on their stomachs, using elbows, knees and toes to move along. He said that it was difficult to see what type of weapon the rear man was carrying “because the bulk of the weapon was hidden by the body of the man crawling along” and could not say whether it was long, short or bulky. Though he believed it to be a .303in rifle, he was unable to say on what evidence he had based that belief, save that he had seen part of the butt. He described the man at whom he fired as of medium height and wearing a dark suit.¹ He said that he and the other soldiers with him had removed their respirators before firing, as they crossed Rossville Street.²

² WT15.86

84.24 Sergeant K said that Private L and Private M were also firing, though whether at the same man or the one in front he could not say. He said that the man in front was wearing a light suit. He then gave the Widgery Inquiry an account similar to his written statement, of seeing the men reaching the door of the flats and being pulled in.¹

84.25 Sergeant K told the Widgery Inquiry that he had neither heard a nail bomb nor seen anyone with a nail bomb.¹ He also said that while he was in position behind the wall, he did not see any other soldiers in front of him.²

84.26 Sergeant K's trajectory photograph (which we reproduce below) shows very similar positions to those shown on his RMP map.

84.27 Sergeant K gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

84.28 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Sergeant K told us that he was carrying a sniper's rifle because he was normally the Platoon Commander's bodyguard, though he was not assigned to be his bodyguard on Bloody Sunday.¹ As noted above,² we prefer the evidence that he gave in 1972 to the effect that he had an SLR fitted with a telescopic sight. When he disembarked from his vehicle he could see some people throwing stones, but they were too far away for the stones to hit him. He stated that he could hear shooting. *"I cannot say whether the shots were outgoing or incoming fire but I could hear the noise of SLR weapons. I was not being shot at and I did not feel under any immediate threat."*³

³ B311.006

² Paragraph 84.18

84.29 Sergeant K continued by giving an account, similar to those that he had given in 1972, of moving south and then taking the place of Support Company soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp. He recalled standing just to the east of the gap between these walls.¹ His account of seeing two men "leopard crawling" south from the rubble barricade, and of firing at the second man, was also similar to his previous accounts, though to us he stated that he thought that he had hit this man with his shot; and that he had been able to identify the weapon the man was carrying as a .303in rifle, because when the man reached the doors of the flats someone picked it up and Sergeant K could see the whole length of it through his telescopic sight.²

² B311.007-008

84.30 In this statement Sergeant K told us that two soldiers to his right fired at the same time as he did, but that he did not see what they were aiming at, nor did he see their rounds strike.¹

84.31 Sergeant K also told us that he recognised the low walls in a photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris (shown again below) as those from which he fired. He stated that the soldier on the left might be him; the two on the right Private L and Private M; the soldier kneeling behind the nearest low wall Colonel Wilford, and the other soldier to the right also kneeling down a radio operator.¹ In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Jeffrey Morris had stated that after taking the third of his photographs of the arrest of William John Dillon, to which we have referred in our consideration of this arrest in Sector 2,² he ran over Rossville Street and took the following photograph. *"As I did so, I am certain the soldier on the left and the soldier fourth from the left were firing."*³

² Paragraph 33.13

84.32 Commenting on the fact that he had told the Widgery Inquiry that “we stayed close to the wall [at Kells Walk] because there was need to”,¹ Sergeant K stated: “We did not need to stay near the wall because we were under fire; it was because we didn’t want to get mixed up with the other call sign ahead of us, that is, further south down Rossville Street.”²

³ Day 364/163

² Day 364/161

84.34 Sergeant K also told us that he was supplied with a rifle with a telescopic sight because he was a battalion marksman and the only one trained in the use of the sight.¹

84.35 As to the firing that he heard when he disembarked from his vehicle, Sergeant K said that he could not hear or recognise the noise of anything other than SLRs.¹

84.36 Asked whether he had complied with the provisions of the Yellow Card in firing at someone who was not posing any immediate threat, Sergeant K said that as far as he was concerned “there was a possible intention to use” the weapon, and he relied upon Rule 13(b) of the Yellow Card, which permitted firing “against a person carrying a firearm if you have reason to think he is about to use it for offensive purposes”.¹

84.37 Sergeant K was shown the accounts of Colour Sergeant 002, to which we have already referred¹ and to which we refer again later,² and of Corporal 039, to which we refer later in this chapter.³ According to the former, he saw Sergeant K fire, then saw a man crawling with a rifle and ordered Private M and Private L to fire, which they did. He then saw a second man crawling from the rubble barricade, but could see no weapon, and so he ordered a ceasefire. The second man dragged the man who had been shot towards the door of the flats, where others dragged them both in. Sergeant K said that he could not remember whether this was the sequence, or whether Colour Sergeant 002 had given an order to fire, but said that he was still sure that he had seen two men, and that the one in front had been without a weapon.⁴

⁴ Day 364/166-167

84.38 According to Corporal 039, he and the other soldiers at the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk came under fire from the direction of the Rossville Flats area. Sergeant K said that he was not aware of coming under fire.¹ Corporal 039 stated that there were two crawling men, one wearing dark clothing and carrying what appeared to be a Thompson sub-machine gun and the other in light clothing with fair hair trailing a weapon; and that he told Private L, on his left, and Private M, on his right, to fire. Sergeant K told us that he did not see anything that looked like a Thompson sub-machine gun, that he saw only one weapon and that he had no recollection of Corporal 039 telling Private L and Private M to fire.²

² Day 364/168-169

84.39 Sergeant K was also shown the account given by Private L to the RMP, which we consider below,¹ in which this soldier had stated that a few seconds after the two men had been taken into a doorway a shot was fired from that doorway. Sergeant K said that he was never conscious of such a shot.²

² Day 364/170

84.40 Sergeant K told us that he had no recollection of telling Major Loden about his firing.¹

Private L

84.41 Earlier in this report¹ we described the shot fired by Private L in the derelict building on Rossville Street, where Joseph Lynn had taken refuge when the soldiers came into the Bogside. Apart from telling Captain 200 of this shot, Private L said nothing in his various other accounts about this firing except to deny in his evidence to this Inquiry that it had occurred. For the reasons we have given earlier² we are sure that Private L did fire in the derelict building.

² Paragraphs 79.13–17

84.42 As noted above,¹ Captain 200 also recorded three other shots as having been fired by Private L.² We set out again the full entry for Private L:

“Soldier ‘L’: 1 x 7.62 in rafters of ruin 43281696 at possible sniper in roof – deliberate miss after two warnings to come down. Man jumped down from roof (15 feet) and was arrested. Roof not searched for weapons. 2 x 7.62 from wall 43251688 at barricade 43231683 and 1 x 7.62 at same gunman as ‘C’ and ‘D’.”

² B1983

84.43 We are currently concerned with the part of this entry that appears to relate to the shots that Private L stated that he fired from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp at the two men to the south of the rubble barricade. We return below¹ to the part that records that Private L fired one shot at the same gunman as Private C and Lance Corporal D, but it should be noted, as will be seen, that this firing (like the firing in the derelict building) was mentioned neither in Private L’s RMP statement nor in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. In those accounts Private L gave a description of firing two shots towards a building in Abbey Street.

84.44 In his RMP statement,¹ after giving an account of being under fire from “the bottom end of the road” on disembarking in Rossville Street and then arresting a man in the derelict building in Rossville Street (but not having disclosed that he had fired his rifle in the derelict building), Private L continued:

“I then returned to Rossville St to rejoin my unit. When I had rejoined my force we continued to advance on a group of men who were manning a barricade which was across the road. As we did so we were met by sporadic fire from the direction of the barricade. At that time, I was armed with SLR 7.62 and magazine of 20 rounds. I had not fired my rifle up to that time. As we neared the barricade, several rounds of rubber bullets were fired at the men on the barricade and they started to withdraw along Rossville St. We followed the men up and next² subject to bottle and stone throwing. When we had got to a point about 150 yards from the barricade, we took cover behind a wall at the side of the road, and from there I could see two figures lying on the ground behind the barricade. As I watched, the two men started to leopard crawl away from the barricades and they appeared to be cradling rifles in their arms. At that point, ‘L1’ told us to fire at the two men and I aimed my rifle at one and fired. I am sure I hit the man that I aimed at, but after lurching, he continued crawling along with the other man. As the man was making for a doorway I again fired at him a single shot and again I think I hit him. However, in the meantime, the second man, who had been fired on by other members of my force, had gained the shelter of the doorway and he pulled the first man into the doorway with him. A few seconds later, a shot was fired from the doorway into which the two men had vanished.

About that time we were ordered to withdraw, which we did, and I did not see what bodies, if any, were recovered.

I consider it possible that the second shot which I fired may well have hit both men because they both appeared to jump and slow down at the same time and it is possible because of their relative positions that both men could have been hit by the same shot.

At the time of these incidents, it was bright daylight and visibility was perfect. The men were about two hundred yards away from me when I fired my first shot and the man at whom I fired had on a light grey suit and he had fair hair. I could not distinguish anything else because of the distance and also our relative positions. The second man was wearing a dark blue suit, but that was all I can remember of him.

During the action at the barricade I fired two rounds only, but as we were withdrawing along a side street of Rossville St, we were fired on from a derelict building and I returned two single shots from my SLR, but I do not think I hit anyone.”

² The word “next” was a typographical error for “were”, as can be seen from the manuscript original (B317).

84.45 The reference in the above RMP statement to “L1” is a reference to Colour Sergeant 002.

84.46 We return below¹ to the two shots that Private L stated that he had fired towards a derelict building as he was withdrawing.

84.47 The RMP map that accompanied this statement (reproduced below) showed two positions for Private L, one at the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North; and the other in the roadway marked Kells Walk to the west of Rossville Street.¹

84.48

According to his RMP statement, Private L fired his first shots when he was about 150 yards from the rubble barricade on its north side. The first of the two positions marked on the RMP map does not reflect this account, as it puts him close to and on the other side of the rubble barricade. The second position is clearly intended to mark the point from which Private L said that he had fired at a gunman in a derelict building in Abbey Street.

84.49 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private L described disembarking and seeing two men on the roof of the Rossville Flats; and then arresting a man in a derelict building on Rossville Street and taking the man back to the area in which the soldiers of Composite Platoon had disembarked from their vehicles. Again Private L did not disclose that he had fired a shot in the derelict building. This statement continued:

"I then re-joined my group in the same doorway of the derelict house where I had been before and we started advancing down the road until I came to the entrance to the alleyway which leads to Columbcille Court. The crowd was dispersing down Rossville Street, over to the barricade and also to the Rossville Flats. At this stage I saw a man lying down just behind the barricade. This man was isolated and I was suspicious of his movements. I was bunched together with my platoon and another soldier confirmed what I had seen behind the barricade. I brought the attention of L1 (my platoon sergeant) to the man who was then about ten feet from the barricade and creeping down. By this time I believed all the platoon had seen him and I myself could see that he was carrying a rifle cradled in his arms, although I could not say what type of rifle it was.

L1 gave me orders to shoot the man behind the barricade and I fired one round. I hit him and he lurched over. By this time there was another man with him who I could still not see very clearly since the barricade was covering him and he was behind the man I shot. He began pulling the man I had shot along but the man I had shot can only have been wounded as he was still apparently pulling himself along too. Another member of my platoon then shot him again but both men carried on moving. I then shot the first man again and I believe the bullet may have hit both men. It was at this stage that I saw the second man cradling the rifle which I had originally seen in the possession of the first man. The second man dragged the body of the first man, who I believe must now have been dead, on his back into a doorway. Soldier 'K' of my platoon went through into Glenfada Park since there appeared to be disturbances from that area and I went forward too to the wall beside the north entrance to Glenfada Park on the west side of Rossville Street."

84.50 As we have previously noted, "L1" was a cipher for Colour Sergeant 002.

84.51 This statement continued with an account of seeing a man behind the rubble barricade whom he ordered to come out; a man with a pistol at a window on the sixth floor of the Rossville Flats; and a man who had come out from the corner at the entrance to the Rossville Flats carrying a rifle which Private L stated he thought was a short carbine, though he could not be sure.¹ Private L then gave an account of what he said he afterwards saw when he withdrew and of the two further shots that he stated that he had fired towards a building on the corner of Kells Walk (ie the road on the northern side of Columbcille Court) and Abbey Street.

¹ B321

84.52 Private L gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. He told the Widgery Inquiry that the two people he had seen on the top of the Rossville Flats appeared to be snipers and that the firing he had heard when he disembarked from the lorry was not high velocity and consisted of several single shots.¹ After giving an account of arresting a young man in a derelict building,² Private L gave a description, similar to that in his written statement, of seeing a man with a rifle and being told by his Platoon Sergeant to fire at him. He then gave the following evidence:³

“Q. Why did you believe he had a rifle? What did you see?

A. He was like leopard crawling along the ground and a weapon was cradled in his arm. I could see it. It was sticking out. I could not see any more of the rifle; I could just see the butt, and he was crawling along the wall.

Q. Whatever kind of weapon it was, it was the butt of a weapon of some kind?

A. The butt of a rifle of some description.

LORD WIDGERY: You say you could see the rifle. It was not merely that the platoon sergeant said it was there; you saw it?

A. Yes, I saw it. I pointed it out to the platoon sergeant.

Mr. GIBBENS: At that time had the second man come on the scene?

A. I could not very well see him clearly then. It was the first man initially and the second man was behind him.

Q. The platoon sergeant told you to stop him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you fire at him?

A. Yes, I took one aimed shot at him, sir.

Q. From what position?

A. Stil[l] by the pram ramp there, sir, behind the wall.”

84.53

Private L told the Widgery Inquiry¹ that “it could well be” him standing on the left of the photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris which we have reproduced above² when considering the evidence of Sergeant K. He said that the figure shown behind the wall with a white flash on the back of his neck was Colonel Wilford, who was there when he fired the shot he had just described. He said he thought that the soldier with the visor was his Platoon Sergeant.³ For convenience we reproduce this photograph again.

² Paragraph 84.31

84.54

Private L then gave the following evidence:¹

“Q. You fired one shot. Did it strike?

A. Yes sir.

Q. It struck the man did it?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What happened to him then?

A. I saw the man kind of jump as though the round hit him. I didn't actually see the round hit him, but the time I fired my round corresponded to him jumping, sir.

Q. By that time had you seen the other man?

A. Yes sir, the other man was close behind his heels, sir.

Q. What was he doing?

A. He was crawling along with him, sir.

Q. What happened next?

A. I think several, or one of the other platoon, fired at the man as well, because this other man was helping pulling the first one I shot along.

Q. The second man helped to pull the first one along?

A. Yes, I think he was uninjured because he was crawling initially himself.

Q. Did you fire again?

A. After someone else, one of the other soldiers fired, sir, they got near to the doorway of Rossville Flats, I then fired again.

Q. Did the other soldier hit him?

A. I believe so, sir.

LORD WIDGERY: When you say 'him' you mean the second man, do you?

Mr. GIBBENS: I did not mean either of them, my Lord. (To the witness) Did the second shot, or the other soldier firing, did he hit either of them?

A. I believe he hit the first man, sir.

Q. So the first man would then have had two rounds?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you fire again?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Why did you fire again?

A. The other man was still in front of him coming more alongside him. He was dragging him along again and when the second man had hit him the fellow had lurched over and I could see the rifle clearly and then I fired another shot. I believe I shot both men, sir, and it was then I saw distinctly the second man had taken the rifle off the first man and the second man had lurched up against the wall about the same time as the other man fell away. That is why I believe the shot hit both of them. Then I saw the rifle across the other man's chest definitely, sir.

Q. You saw then it was a rifle?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What sort of a rifle, could you tell?

A. A carbine, or it could be an armalite. It wasn't an SLR."

84.55 Private L then told the Widgery Inquiry that (apparently after he had advanced from the low wall) a man came out of the doorway of the Rossville Flats with a gun and fired about two or three rounds.¹

84.56 Private L told the Widgery Inquiry that he later went back to Columbcille Court and, having been told by a soldier to take cover because shots were coming down the Kells Walk road, went to the eastern corner of that road, stuck his head round the corner, saw a man with a rifle in a burned-out building on the corner of the Kells Walk road and Abbey Street, and fired two shots at him but did not hit him.¹ We return to this account later in this report.²

84.57 Private L's trajectory photograph (reproduced below) illustrating the two shots that he said that he had fired from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk shows him in that position and his targets behind the rubble barricade and close to the western side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

84.58 As we have already explained,¹ we consider it likely that the 14th and 15th entries in Major Loden's List of Engagements were the result of information provided by Private L, Private M and possibly Sergeant K. However, there is nothing in this list which corresponds with the shot Private L fired in the derelict building in Rossville Street, or with the two shots that Private L told the RMP and the Widgery Inquiry that he had fired at a later stage towards a building in Abbey Street. Whether the shot that Captain 200 recorded Private L as having fired at “same gunman as ‘C’ and ‘D’”² is reflected in the 12th entry in Major Loden’s List of Engagements is a matter we consider below.³

84.59 Private L gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

84.60 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Private L told us that hearing the shot that hit the Presbyterian church (which we discussed when considering events in Sector 1¹) “changed our whole mood” and that the soldiers cocked their weapons, which he stated that they always did when they went out on patrol.² Private L stated that he ran behind the lorries going into the Bogside, and then went into a derelict building and arrested a man, adding “there is no way that I fired a shot at him”. He stated that after making this arrest, when he was “at the Pig” he decided to leave his respirator and other gear behind.³

³ B345-346

² B344-345

84.61 Private L then, for the first time, gave an account of seeing Corporal INQ 1671 shoot and kill a gunman who was near the junction of Rossville Street and Pilot Row. Corporal INQ 1671 is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry. His name does not appear on the Support Company nominal roll¹ or on Captain 200’s list of members of Composite Platoon,² and in our view he was not present on Bloody Sunday. There is no other evidence from any source that suggests that a gunman was shot in this area.³

² B2022.064

84.62 Private L followed this with a description of moving in the direction of Kells Walk to catch up with other soldiers; seeing bullet strikes on the ground near him “indicating incoming fire from a southerly direction” and then seeing Private H, at the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street, blasting off rounds into a body lying face up on the ground. Again there is no other evidence from any source that suggests that Private H, or any other soldier, did any such thing.¹

84.63 Private L then described what he saw and did when he reached the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp. His description was as follows:¹

"I could see the barricade across Rossville Street in front of me. As I was looking, I saw at once a couple of heads bob up over at the far side of the barricade where it joined the Rossville Flats at Block 1. The two men were lying face downwards and they were immediately adjacent to Block 1 with their elbows to the ground and their fists in the air. I could see them as they emerged from the barricade. One was behind the other. One looked around 30 or so and the other may have been in his 40s, but of course, I could not see them clearly as they were facing away from me. The furthest one from me was wearing, I think, dark clothing and a pullover and a white shirt and the one closest to me was wearing something that was like a 'fair isle' jumper. The one furthest away from me was the one in his 30s and the one nearest to me was the one in his 40s. The one closest to me had a $\frac{3}{4}$ length coat.

Both of these men were crawling in a way that I would describe as professional.

I knew this because this was the way we crawled when we were in action. I could see that each of them had a rifle which was positioned across their arms. I couldn't see any bolt and therefore, I couldn't say with precision what the rifles were, but I would say that they were either Carbines, Kalashnikoffs or 303's.

From my training as a soldier and my experience in active operations in Belfast, and given that these men were crawling professionally away from the barricade, I strongly suspected that they had planted explosives inside the barricade. From the way they were moving, I formed the view that these men were trained in the art of combat and were likely to be a serious threat. Someone from within our group (and it might have been me) shouted out, 'They've got rifles, what do you reckon, Sarge?' Colour Sergeant Soldier 002 said, 'Yes, one of them has got a Carbine.' I said, 'What shall I do, I've got them undercover?' At this point, I turned around. To my rear, behind the second of these walls, I quickly saw that Colonel Wilford had joined us with his radio operator, INQ 1247. I think there was another man with us who may have been a soldier, although I do not remember his name. I was a little surprised to see Colonel Wilford there, but our spirits certainly rose to see him. He was not like Colonel Gray, his predecessor. He was always with us on the front line and this boosted our confidence. My recollection now is that Colonel Wilford said, 'In your own time, commence firing, if you have a target' or 'take shots when you are ready', or words to such effect.

In the position that I appear in the photograph at Appendix 4, and from a standing position (all my shots on the day were taken standing), I aimed and fired at the man that was crawling that was nearest to us, and nearest to the barricade. I fired a round and I hit him and he slammed into the wall behind him and bounced back into position on the pavement where he had been crawling. He was still moving and it occurred to me that he might only be grazed, and possibly I had hit him under his arm in the middle of his body, this being the impression that I got from the way that he moved. He then continued to crawl. I fired a second shot at the same man and I hit him again. The position in which this first target was hit, I have marked at point A (grid reference J16) on the attached map at Appendix 5. The colleague who was with him in front of him was only a few feet away at point B (grid reference J16). The one who was furthest away from us turned around and tried pulling his colleague, but quickly gave up as the man who had been shot was clearly too heavy for him to budge. He then picked up the shot man's rifle and began moving towards the door of the Rossville Flats with the two rifles across his arms. I believe that the first man that I had hit twice was dead and he remained where he was left. He was not pulled into any building.

The guy who was left with two rifles across his arms then started moving and all of us at the wall could see that two rifle butts were in the cock of his elbow. I saw this quite clearly.

I took aim and fired at this man who was trying to get away, and I have the feeling someone else might have fired at around the same time too. Later in the day, when we were in Holywood Barracks, I can remember telling my mates that I had been shooting and had hit someone, but I can't remember anyone else talking about this so I cannot be sure who, if anyone else, fired at the same time. There was a cacophony of sounds going on at the time and that would have made it difficult to tell who was shooting. As far as I was concerned, in all of this cacophony of sound, there was no gunfire that had hit me so I carried on doing my job. When I fired at the second target, he was getting very close to the door that entered into the Rossville Flats, Block 1. The second target was hit and he lifted up and slammed through the door that was open. He smashed through the glass at the bottom of the door and fell through it. It is possible that my shot missed and went through the glass. There were clearly people who were in the door entrance to the Rossville Flats and they dragged him in through the glass bits and into the flats. Because there were so many people in that door, it was not possible to fire any further.

As this second target was being pulled in through the door, I became aware of a priest who moved across Rossville Street from the western side of the road in the position I have marked with an arrow on Appendix 6. He moved over towards the door entrance. He passed the two rifles that the second victim had been carrying which were in the area of the door and had not been dragged in, and I saw this priest walk across and pick up the two rifles and put them up his cassock or coat. I actually saw the rifles as he did this; what I saw was not a perception from the movement of the priest. This priest grabbed the barrels first and put them up his coat. I did not see the magazines or the length of the barrels which would have helped me identify the type of weapons. At around this time, I have a recollection of the priest assisting others take another body out of sight behind the corner of the Rossville Flats.”

84.65 Private L continued this statement by telling us that he moved forward and with Colour Sergeant 002 and Corporal INQ 1671 started to crawl towards the rubble barricade. He told us that when he reached it he found about three pounds of plastic explosives with a detonator cord leading away; and that he and Corporal INQ 1671 collected these materials. He stated that he remembered this incident very clearly, despite being told, as was the case, that no other witness had recalled or recounted it.¹

84.66 In this statement Private L also described later firing a shot from the area of Columbcille Court at a gunman in a window of a building in Abbey Street; and told us that the RMP had later told him that when they had gone into that building they had found blood in the vicinity of the place to which his shot had been directed.¹

84.67 Private L stated that he had told those who took his RMP statement and his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry about Private H's shooting at a body, and about his own discovery of explosives, as well as the other matters that appeared for the first time in his statement to this Inquiry, but that he was "encouraged" by them not to include these matters in his accounts.¹

84.68 Towards the end of this account, Private L told us that his current recollection was that he had fired three shots at the men near the rubble barricade and that he thought that his previous evidence "was wrong, although not deliberately so".¹

84.69 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private L told us that he had seen what he had assumed from the smoke to be lumps of plastic explosive thrown from the top of the Rossville Flats, but had left it to others to tell the Widgery Inquiry about this.¹ He also told us that he had not in fact seen anyone fire from the doorway to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, despite what he had said in his 1972 accounts.²

² Day 381/102-104

84.70 In the course of his oral evidence, Private L agreed that "possibly" he was suffering from some illness that would cause him difficulties with his recollection or memory.¹

"Q. In other words do you have a lot of recovered memories, things that did not seem to be so at the time, but when you have your nightmares, they fall into place for you?

A. Yes."

84.71 Private L was questioned at length during the course of his oral evidence to us. We came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to rely on what he told us, either in his written or in his oral evidence, unless other evidence supported it. Some of his accounts, for example of Corporal INQ 1671 shooting a gunman in the Eden Place waste ground, of seeing Private H repeatedly shooting into a body in the same area, and of retrieving explosives from the rubble barricade, can in our view only be described as fantasy. His accounts of seeing one of the crawling men retrieving the other's rifle, and of a priest eventually collecting the rifles, are unsupported by other evidence and to our minds are figments of his imagination. Other aspects of his accounts to us are inconsistent with the evidence that he gave in 1972, though as to the latter there are also serious difficulties. These include the fact that he failed to tell the RMP or the Widgery Inquiry what we are sure that he told Captain 200, that he had fired a shot in a derelict building in Rossville Street, which indeed he had; and that the account he gave the RMP and the Widgery Inquiry of firing two shots at a gunman in a building in Abbey Street is not one he appears to have given Captain 200.

- 84.72 At this point we should note that Captain 200, in the course of his oral evidence to us, was asked why in his list of the details of his soldiers' firing he had recorded only that Corporal L's second two shots were fired at the barricade, without identifying the target. Captain 200 told us that he had no explanation for this but there was then this exchange with the Chairman:¹

"LORD SAVILLE: Forgive me interrupting.

Officer 200, is it a possible explanation, looking at what you have written about Soldier L, that the two 7.62 shots he told you he had simply loosed off at the barricade and at no particular target at all?

A. Yes, I accept that, that he did loose two shots off at the barricade, I mean that, that must be the, the possibility. If he was more exact, he would have said, 'gunman at a certain point'."

- 84.73 Later in his oral evidence, Counsel to the Inquiry pointed out to Captain 200 that the previous entries in his list, covering firing by Sergeant K and Private M, both referred to them firing at a gunman behind the rubble barricade at the same grid reference (43231683) as was given for the two shots that Private L was recorded as having fired at the barricade:¹

"MR CLARKE: ... Could we look, please, at the preceding page, 1982, the second half, please. On this page you record, in relation to Soldier K, that he had fired from a grid reference: 'to gunman at barricade 43231683'.

In relation to Soldier M you record that he had fired from the same grid reference: ' ... to gunman behind barricade 43231683'.

Over the page, if we may go back to it, in relation to L, you record that he fired from a wall at a different grid reference: ' ... at barricade 43231683'.

Is it possible, or not, that what you were referring to, using the same grid reference as before, was the same gunman as had been referred to by K and M at the barricade which has the same grid reference?

A. I would say it was possible.

Q. It may be an impossible question, but can you tell which is more likely to be correct: that you were referring to Soldier L having fired at the same gunman at the same grid reference, or that in fact you were deliberately making a distinction in relation to Soldier L and recording that he had fired at the barricade itself?

A. Sir, that is a fair question, but I do not think I could answer that.”

84.74 In view of this evidence, it is uncertain whether Private L told Captain 200 that he had fired at an identified gunman, or gunmen, or merely at the rubble barricade. At the end of his RMP statement,¹ Captain 200 recorded that:

“I am absolutely satisfied that none of my soldiers fired 7.62 rounds before being subjected to enemy fire. All rounds fired, except for one by ‘L’ in the ruin, were controlled by Senior NCOs and directed at gunmen either in Rossville Flats or behind the barricade. I fully support the actions taken by my soldiers and I am satisfied that they reacted as required in the situation.”

84.75 On the face of it, this statement counts against the possibility that Private L had told Captain 200 that he had simply fired at the rubble barricade. It is possible that Private L had told Captain 200 that he had fired at a gunman or gunmen at the barricade, but (since there is no reference to his firing either missing or resulting in a possible hit or hits), said nothing to Captain 200 that allowed the latter to record whether these shots had hit or missed the target. It is also possible that Private L had told Captain 200 whether he had hit or missed his target, but that for some reason Captain 200 did not record this information.

84.76 In these circumstances, though the matter is far from clear, we consider on balance that Private L had told Captain 200 that he had fired at a gunman or gunmen at or near the rubble barricade, but gave no further information to enable Captain 200 to record whether Private L had fired at the same gunman or gunmen as Sergeant K or Private M, or whether Private L had missed or hit with his shots. We should note that Captain 200’s statement that all rounds fired, except for one fired by Private L in the derelict building, “were controlled by Senior NCOs”,¹ is not on any view wholly correct, since, as will be seen when we consider the accounts of Lance Corporal D and Private C,² there is nothing to suggest that the shots fired by these soldiers from the top of the high ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk were in any way controlled by a Senior NCO. Furthermore, in reaching his view as to the legitimacy of the firing by his soldiers, Captain 200 was relying on what the firing soldiers had told him and perhaps also on what he had been told by other soldiers, since according to his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, he did not himself see his soldiers firing.³

³ WT15.48

² Paragraphs 123.1–60

84.77 We return to Private L when considering the accounts of firing at the Rossville Flats.¹

Private M

84.78 As we have seen, in his list of the details of firing by members of his platoon,¹ Captain 200 made this entry in relation to Private M:

“Soldier ‘M’: 2 x 7.62 from GR 43271691 to gunman behind barricade 43231683 – possible hit.”

84.79 In his first RMP statement timed at 1235 hours on 31st January 1972,¹ Private M described the deployment of his “Co[mpan]y”, by which he must have meant Composite Platoon, at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street, and its advance along both sides of Rossville Street. He gave this account:

“My location was on the right hand side of the street, approximately 200 yards from the Rossville Flats. A crowd of about 1500 strong had built a barricade, consisting of old cars and bits of scrap and paving stones taken from the waste ground around the flats.

On our advance we came under fire from snipers located in the flats, and from the main crowd, contained behind the barricade.

We were wearing gas masks as troops had previously used gas in the area to disperse crowds of rioters.

As we neared the main crowds location behind the barricade, we came under attack from youths throwing nail bombs and petrol bombs.

The weather conditions were good and visibility was clear.

As I neared the barricade, about 130 yards, on the corner of a street at GR 43151675 I could see the barricade and the crowd behind it. We were being heavily stoned, bottled and shot at.

I saw 2 males crawling along the south west flats at GR 43161663 They were crawling towards the direction of the Lecky Rd, trying to get into the flats. Their side elevations were facing me. I could clearly see them. I saw they were both pushing long black stick shaped objects in front of them. As they were acting in a suspicious manner, and the door location they were heading for was a good sniper location where they could have shot a number of troops advancing towards the barricade.

I cocked my rifle and from the aiming position, fired two aimed shots of 7.62. Also other members of my Section fired. I cannot remember who.

I fired one shot at each man. On firing, both men jerked and rolled over. A crowd formed around them and they were dragged out of sight. They were dragged into the block of flats.

The crowd kept us from getting near the scene but much later the area was checked but nothing was found.

I am sure I hit both men.

One was dressed in a dark suit and the other a grey suit.”

84.80

The RMP map that accompanied this statement¹ (reproduced below) showed the position of Private M at the southern end of Kells Walk and showed his target on the eastern side of Rossville Street close to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, in a position that would have been a little way behind the rubble barricade.

¹ B349

84.81 It should be noted that the grid reference given in the RMP statement for the position of the two men at whom he said that he fired is clearly wrong, as it would put them in St Columb's Wells, south of Free Derry Corner.

84.82 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Private M recorded that he was covering Corporal 039 who had a baton gun. He told the Widgery Inquiry:

“As we reached the west side of Rossville Street soldier 039 and myself advanced up by the wall in front of the low-rise flats which are themselves in front of Columbcille Court and as we were doing so a few shots some high velocity, some pistol, were fired from the barricade in Rossville Street although I could not say where the shots went.

The crowd behind the barricade appeared to be scattering in all directions away from the direction in which we were advancing and it was at this time that I am sure I heard the sound of nail bombs exploding from the direction of the barricade. I was not looking in this direction at the time I heard these explosions but I know the sound of nail bombs very well from previous experience. As we were moving further up along the side of the wall I was looking in the direction of the barricade and saw what I am sure was a petrol bomb thrown from the far end of Glenfada Park and land just in front of the barricade. When we reached the end of the wall we turned right and took cover just at the entrance to an alleyway which leads into the flats and from there we had a view across Rossville Street to Rossville Flats. It was then that soldier 039 pointed out to me two men who were behind the barricade crawling along the base of the wall of the block of Rossville Flats nearest to us. I observed that both men were crawling along in what I assumed to be a leopard crawl position. To me both men appeared to be each cradling something in their arms and from the[ir] shape and length and from the[ir] black colour my opinion was that they were rifles. There is no real doubt in my mind that these objects were anything but rifles. I then had a shouted conversation with soldier 039 a[mid]st all the noise which was going on. He had pointed out the men to me previously and now shouted to me ‘They’re carrying something’. He added ‘They look like rifles’ and I shouted ‘They are rifles’. I had by that time cocked my weapon and I then took an aimed shot at the first man who was by that time almost at the door of the flats. The man appeared to jerk and fall forward. Both of his hands were forward with the rifle cradled in his arms just at the door of the flats and he was dragged inside. By this time another soldier nearby had already taken an aimed shot at the second man crawling behind who was still crawling. I then took an aimed shot at this man. He gave a jerk and fell to his side and rolled slightly but he carried on crawling cradling the rifle in his arms. Another soldier took another aimed shot at the man but he still kept crawling. The shooting then stopped and a small crowd of about 10 to 15 people had come out of the doorway of the flats and when the crowd dispersed into the doorway again the man’s body had disappeared and I assumed he had been carried inside.

I then went through the alleyway with a sergeant and then climbed up onto a ramp in front of these flats which overlooks the part of Rossville Flats where the in[c]ident I have described took place since there had been a few people firing from the flats. I watched the roof tops and windows of the flats for about 2 minutes.”

84.83 Private M gave this description of his targets:¹

“I can describe the dress of the two men who were shot in general terms. The first man I shot was wearing a dark coloured jacket, dark trousers, had longish hair and was wearing a very light coloured shirt or jumper. I believe his hair was dark.

The second man was wearing a light brownish jacket and a black or dark sweater or shirt. He had fairly long brownish hair and he was wearing light coloured trousers or jeans. Both men looked young and I would say were aged about 20.”

84.84 At the end of this statement Private M made these observations:¹

“In this present statement I have set down the events of that afternoon as I best remember them but I would like to emphasis[e] that there are two points in my statement of 31 January that I would like to correct. In the fourth paragraph on the second page I said that that when I had shot two men both men jerked and rolled over. In fact it was only the second man I shot who had rolled over. I also said in the same paragraph that a crowd had formed around the men and they were dragged out of sight. I should make clear that the crowd only appeared after the shooting had died down. Earlier the first man who had been shot was dragged inside the building and I assumed the second man was dragged inside since he had disappeared by the time the crowd had gone back inside the flats.”

¹ B362

84.85 Private M told the Widgery Inquiry that he was wearing his respirator and that after he had taken cover with Corporal 039 at Kells Walk he heard a few explosions from the direction of the rubble barricade which sounded like nail bombs, which he had heard before.¹ Then as he moved forward he saw a petrol bomb being thrown from the side of Glenfada Park, which exploded in front of the rubble barricade.²

² WT16.19

84.86 Private M then gave this account:¹

“Q. What happened when that landed?

A. By this time I was moving into cover at the ramp, the archway at Columbcille Court.

Q. Between Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that mean you did not see what happened to the nail bomb?

A. Petrol bomb.

Q. Petrol bomb.

A. No, I did not see it.

Q. When you went in there where did you go?

A. We took cover behind the small wall that was at the archway.

Q. Did you then look back or where did you look?

A. I was then concentrating on the barricade and the flats.

Q. What did you see or hear?

A. There were some shots coming from the area of the barricade.

Q. How many shots did you hear coming?

A. I could not say how many shots; there were some pistol shots and a few high velocity ones coming.

Q. Did you see who were firing them?

A. I did not see who was firing them.

Q. Did you see any people about in that area at all?

A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you see?

A. There were two men pointed out to me.

Q. By whom?

A. By Soldier 039.

Q. What were they doing when they pointed them out to you?

A. They were crawling along from the end of the flats towards the doorway in Rossville flats.

Q. What sort of crawl were they doing?

A. A leopard crawl.

Q. Did either of them appear to have anything with him?

A. They both appeared to be carrying weapons in the crook of their arms.

Q. What sort of weapons, did you see?

A. I would say it was a rifle.

Q. Why would you say?

A. Because of the length, the shape.

Q. You could see the length and shape?

A. You could see the length and you could see the shape of the butt at the end.

Q. Did you believe them to be in fact rifles?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What did you do?

A. I then held a shouted conversation with Soldier 039. He shouted that they appeared to be carrying something. Then he added they were rifles. I said they were and I had cocked my weapon by this time and I put an aimed shot down at the first man.

Q. From what position?

A. I was still behind this wall.

Q. But were you standing, kneeling or firing from the hip or what?

A. I was kneeling.

Q. And firing?

A. Firing from the shoulder in the aim position.

Q. Did you think that you hit the man?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Why did you think that?

A. Because he jerked and slumped forward.

Q. Did you know that Soldier L was firing at him at the same time?

A. No, I did not.

Q. What happened after he fell and jerked forward?

A. After he had been dragged forward I saw the man crawling behind. I heard somebody else take a shot at him. He kept crawling towards the doorway of the flats, so I took an aimed shot at this man as well.

Q. Did you hit him or did the other person hit him?

A. I think I hit him again.

Q. For the same reason?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened to those two men after you had hit them?

A. The first man was right at the door of the flats and he slumped forward; his hands were very near to the doorway and he was dragged inside straight away. After I had fired at the second man he was a few yards away from the doorway. After the firing had died down about 10 or 15 people came out of the doorway and they were round the area where the man was; I could not see the man there. When the crowd went back in the man had disappeared. I therefore took it the crowd had either carried or dragged him inside the door with them.

Q. Did you then leave that position?

A. I did."

84.87 Private M told the Widgery Inquiry that he was on one knee when he fired. He also said that he was the first to fire at the crawling men. *"I heard a shot after I fired, but I do not know who it was fired."*¹ He said that when this shot was fired "one of the men had been dragged inside the building and the other man was crawling to the doorway of the building" and could have been about ten yards from the doorway. Told that Private L had said that one of the crawling men took the weapon from the one that was shot, Private M said that this was not his recollection. He said that he saw that both men had weapons.²

² WT16.23

84.88 Private M told the Widgery Inquiry that he did not know that Colonel Wilford had been at the low wall at any time.¹

84.89 Private M's trajectory photograph (reproduced below) shows very similar positions to those shown on his RMP map.

84.90 For the reasons we have given above,¹ we consider it likely that Private M provided at least some of the information contained in the 14th and 15th entries in Major Loden's List of Engagements.²

² ED49.12

84.91 Private M gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

84.92 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private M told us that he had no clear memory of the day, but gave this account of what he saw and did when he reached the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, which he described as point E:²

"23. From the cover of the wall at point E, I could see past the Rubble Barricade. My next memory is of Soldier 039 pointing out two men to me. These men were south of the Rubble Barricade and were crawling along the western edge of Block 1 of Rossville Flats and were moving in a southerly direction. They were on their hands and knees, and both of them were carrying or dragging what looked very much like weapons of some kind. I thought they were rifles. At his point I was kneeling on one knee and was leaning against the wall with my SLR up on my shoulder so that I was ready to fire if necessary. Soldier 039 only had a baton gun. I do not know if he was to my left or my right. The[r]e were other people near the barricade but I do not know what they were doing.

24. I can remember speaking to Soldier 039 about these two men but I cannot remember what was said. I had a good side on view of both of them and it looked clear to me that they were both carrying rifles. The rifles were on their right hand side and so they were not shielded from my view by the men's bodies. The position where these two men were when I first saw them is marked with a G on the attached map (grid reference K15). I cannot be certain that this is the exact point where they were, but it is approximately right. At the southern end of Block 1 was a doorway. The position where this doorway was is marked with an H on the attached map (grid reference J16). As I was clear that we had already been under fire, I knew that if the two men could reach the sanctuary of this doorway, they would have then found a good sniping position from which they would fire at me or my colleagues. I made the instant decision that I was entitled, under the yellow card rules, to fire an aimed shot at each of these two men. We were always being reminded of the yellow card and told of any alterations. Everybody had a copy and carried it with them.

25. Therefore, I aimed my SLR at the centre of the southern most man, who by this time had almost reached the doorway at point H. I fired one shot at him and I believed that this shot hit him. His body seemed to jerk forward, but I do not know which part of him I hit. I cannot now recall any other movements, such as rolling.

26. As he fell forward he had very nearly reached the door marked H, and I can remember that he was then pulled through this doorway by people who were inside the door.

27. I did not think of shooting again and I changed target and point of aim to stop the other man who was crawling behind him and fired a shot at him as well. There was only a gap of perhaps two or three seconds between each shot. I had no idea whether or not I had hit this second man and there was no visible reaction from him to my shot. He scrambled forward towards the door at point H and was assisted into the doorway as well. I did not fire another shot as the target was no longer visible.

28. I am unable to describe the two men at all, save for the fact that I remember they were wearing dark clothing. I cannot say how old they were, what colour their hair was or how long it was. There were definitely no vehicles near the flats at the time.

29. I do not know if any other soldiers were firing at the time. I was concentrating on what I was doing. It was instantaneous and all over very quickly. My present recollection is that no one else was shooting but my memory may be affected by 27 years of discussion and different opinions being thrown about by the media.”

² B372.004-005

84.93 The map attached to Private M’s statement¹ shows point G, which he said marked the approximate position of the two crawling men when he first saw them, as close to the western side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and about halfway between the rubble barricade and the doorway of that block.

84.94 Private M told us that his memory was nothing like as clear as it would have been in 1972, and that where the statements he made at the time conflicted with what he now remembered, he was satisfied that the earlier statements were the more accurate.¹

84.95 On being shown the photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp which we have reproduced above,¹ Private M told us that he thought that neither he nor Corporal 039 (who had a baton gun) was shown in that photograph.²

² B372.009-010

84.96 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private M said that the estimate of a crowd at the rubble barricade being about 1,500 strong which appeared in his RMP statement was an estimate provided by the statement taker, despite being shown the evidence of Corporal Brobson, who took this statement and who told us (which we accept) that he would not have known this detail.¹

84.97 Private M also said that he was positive that the two men were carrying rifles.¹ When he was asked why in his first RMP statement he had described the two men as pushing “long, black stick shaped objects in front of them”, he answered as follows:²

“Q. ... On the right-hand side of the screen, in paragraph 42 of your statement to this Inquiry, you comment on the reference to ‘long, black stick shaped objects’, and you say: ‘I am sure that I would not have said this; I would have been quite firm in that interview, that the two men were carrying what I was sure to be weapons.’

How exactly are you suggesting that the words, ‘long, black stick shaped objects’ were included in your Military Police statement if that is not what you wanted to say?

A. I cannot say that, sir. I can only assume that that is the way that the RMP, who took the statement, described it.

Q. Would you have read the statement before you signed it?

A. Probably not, sir, because it would be getting done at the time with the explanations as to why they were writing that at the time.

Q. At the time when he wrote that particular part of the statement down in front of you, you would have known what he was writing; would you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. However exactly it came about, you would have known that what he was writing in the statement was that the men were pushing long, black stick-shaped objects?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything to stop you from saying to him: 'No, they were not – I do not want to describe them as long, black stick-shaped objects, because I know they were rifles and that is what I think the statement ought to say'?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether you did say something to that effect to the military policeman?

A. I do not, sir, no.

Q. Can you think of any reason why you would not have said that if you were certain in your own mind that these were rifles?

A. Only as I have said before, sir, he may have said that that is the description that you should give.

Q. Let us look at the evidence he has given about this. Could we have on the screen, please, the transcript of Day 275 at page 139. This is part of the evidence that was given to this Inquiry by former Corporal Brobson, the military policeman. The relevant part of your statement to this Inquiry was read to him and then at line 7, he was asked this: 'This has been put to you, this part of it. Again I want to ask you about this. What is being suggested here that M told you, in other words they looked like rifles or something like that kind, were being pushed along the ground and that you have watered it down in some way.'

His answer was: 'Answer: No, if he had been adamant I am sure that I would have included 'weapons' in his statement.'

In the light of that, are you prepared to accept that the reason why your Military Police statement refers to 'long, black stick shaped objects' is that that is the way you chose to describe them to the Military Police?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were the objects in fact long?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they black?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they stick-shaped?

A. No, sir, they were rifle-shaped.

Q. What is it that distinguished them from being a stick, in terms of their shape?

A. I cannot describe it now, sir. I have known all the time that it was weapons, rifles, those individuals had and I have always described them as rifles or weapons."

² Day 365/95-98

84.98 Although earlier in his oral evidence to this Inquiry Corporal Brobson had accepted the possibility that Private M might have used the expression "a weapon of some sort" and he might have put this down as "long stick-shaped black objects",¹ he then said (as can be seen from the passage quoted above) that had Private M told him that he was certain that the men had weapons, he would have recorded this in the statement. Warrant Officer Class I Wood, who in 1972 was the Regimental Sergeant Major of 178 Provost Company of the RMP Special Investigation Branch, told us in his oral evidence to this Inquiry² that if a soldier said that he had seen what he described as a rifle being carried in a non-hostile manner, from a distance that meant that he could be mistaken, the practice was to put this down in the statement as a long straight object. Thus we remain unsure whether Private M was certain that he had seen weapons, or whether Corporal Brobson thought that he might have been mistaken and so used the expression he did in the statement.

² Day 383/149-158

84.99 Private M told us that he did not remember being ordered to fire by any other soldier.¹ He also told us that he did not know why the description of the second man's clothing had changed from "grey suit" in his first RMP statement to "light brownish jacket" and "light coloured trousers" in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.²

² Day 365/104

84.100 It was pointed out to Private M that Sergeant K, Private L and he had all made their written statements for the Widgery Inquiry on the same day, 5th March 1972. Private M agreed that it was possible that the three of them had had some discussion about what they had previously said and what they were going to tell those taking statements for that Inquiry, and that if this had happened there was a possibility that they had influenced each other in relation to what they then told the Widgery Inquiry, though he denied that there had been any attempt to make their accounts fit.¹

84.101 We note at this point that in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private M said that he no longer recalled coming under fire “from snipers located in the flats, and from the main crowd, contained behind the barricade” as described in his first RMP statement.

² Day 365/82

Evidence of Corporal 039 and Colour Sergeant 002 of the firing by Private L and Private M

Corporal 039

84.102 Earlier in this report,¹ when considering the injury sustained by Mary Smith, we referred to the evidence given by Corporal 039 about the firing of a baton round at a window in Kells Walk. We now return to this soldier’s account of what he said he then saw and did.

84.103 In his RMP statement timed at 1630 hours on 2nd February 1972,¹ Corporal 039 recorded that after he had fired the baton round at the window “we removed our respirators as the area was clear of CS gas”. His account continued:

“I was positioned behind a wall at the end of the flats where I could see the barricade across Rossville Street almost opposite the centre of the Rossville flats block.

We came under fire from the direction of the Rossville Flats area and we all took defensive positions.

As I looked towards the flats I saw two male figures appear from behind the barricade crawling on their bellies towards the base of the flats and then crawl on towards a door at the south end of Rossville Flats. One of the men was carrying what appeared to me to be a Thompson machine gun and was wearing a dark suit, or a dark jacket and trousers. He also had dark hair.

The second man appeared to be trailing a weapon with him but I couldn’t say what type it was. He was wearing a light, possibly fawn coloured coat and light trousers, with long fair hair. I pointed out the gunman² to ‘L’ who was situated on my left and ‘M’ who was on my right and told them to fire at the gunmen.

They each fired two rounds x 7.62 from their SLRs.

The man dressed in the dark clothing flinched as if hit, but kept crawling towards the flats, the other man appeared to be hit about two or three times, and rolled off the pavement on to the road. By this time the first man was already inside the door of the flats and the second was about ten to twelve feet from the door. He was obviously badly hurt but managed to crawl to the door of the flats where he was assisted inside by unseen helpers. At this time I heard a voice behind me call to cease firing. I later discovered it was L1."

² As appears from the manuscript original, "gunman" was a typographical error for "gunmen" (B1651.17).

84.104 The reference to "L1" is a reference to Colour Sergeant 002.

84.105 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal 039 gave a similar account. He said that almost as soon as he and another soldier, who was armed with an SLR, had started to move forward after disembarking they came under fire. As we have noted earlier,² the soldier armed with an SLR who was protecting Corporal 039 was Private M. Corporal 039 said: "I identified low velocity weapons and I believe a couple of high velocity rounds. It came from the direction of the Rossville Flats." He stated that, after the incident in which he fired his baton gun, he had taken up a position between the two low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, from where he had seen the two men crawling down the side of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats towards the door at the end, with the leading man "doing a leopard crawl". He also stated that in addition to his baton gun he was carrying a Sterling sub-machine gun for his own protection.

² Paragraphs 78.13 and 84.82

84.106 Corporal 039 did not give oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry but did give written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

- 84.107 In his written evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Corporal 039 said that he recalled that he had heard firing when he was behind the wall (the position of which he could not clearly remember):

"I recall that shooting took place at this time. I cannot say if this was the first shooting that I had heard (apart from the shot which hit the drainpipe in the church courtyard) but I am certain that there was definitely some shooting going on at this time. I cannot say where the shooting was coming from, how much of it there was or what type of weapon was being fired. Although I did not see any bullets striking the ground near where we were I was certain that we were under threat. I cannot say what type of weapons were being used. There was a great deal of noise.

My attention was focused on the doorway to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The door was made from glass and I could see some movement within the doorway. I could see nothing more distinct than shadows of people moving about. However, I do recall seeing perhaps four or five muzzle flashes coming from this doorway. When a gun of any type is fired in low light conditions, the muzzle flash can clearly be seen. If I had previously been in any doubt that there was firing directed at us and that we were under threat, the muzzle flashes in the doorway confirmed it."

- 84.108 Corporal 039 then gave this account:¹

"The next memory I have is of seeing a man crawling from behind the rubble barricade towards the door into Block 1. He was crawling along the pavement, which ran alongside Block 1. I remember that he was wearing a dark coat or jacket and that he was carrying a weapon. From the shape and size of the weapon I believed that it was a short rifle such as an American carbine. Although I did not have binoculars, it was clearly visible as he was carrying it on his right side.

There was no doubt in my mind that he was a hostile gunman and that he would fire his weapon at me or another soldier if he was given the opportunity to do so. He was definitely a threat to us. There was and is no doubt in my mind that the Yellow Card rules governing fire orders authorised us to shoot this man. I have not seen a Yellow Card since 1972 and cannot now recall the precise instructions it gave about firing. We were all fully aware of them at the time, indeed it was a breach of regulations for us ever to go on an operation without carrying the Yellow Card. Had I been armed with an SLR, I would have fired but the man was out of range of the SMG [sub-machine gun].

As is entirely normal in these circumstances, I shouted out this man's position to my colleagues who were behind the wall with me. I cannot recall the words which I used, but I would have confirmed that I had seen an armed man and I would have stated his position. I would have described him as a target. The other soldier or soldiers behind the wall would have shouted back to confirm that they had seen him.

Having pointed him out and identified him as a target, it would not have been necessary for me to give a second order that he should be shot. I may have ordered that shots be fired at him, but it would not have been unusual for me to not to have said anything further having identified him to my colleagues as a target. Soldiers are expected to use their own initiative in circumstances like these, and we certainly would not be expected to wait for this man to start firing at us before we were justified in shooting him.

A shot or shots were fired at this man. I cannot recall who fired these shots although I presume it was my buddy. I cannot remember how many shots were fired at him, but I am certain that I saw that the man was hit. An SLR is a powerful weapon and bullets fired from it hit with considerable force. I can remember that the man on the ground jerked as if he had been hit by a round. He did this at least once, although he may have been hit with more than one bullet.

This man then got to the doorway into Block 1. I cannot recall if he carried on crawling into this doorway or whether he was dragged into the doorway by anyone else.

Some time after this incident everything in the area went fairly quiet. I cannot remember how much time elapsed before things did go quiet."

84.109 Corporal 039 told us that where there were any differences between the contents of his RMP statement and his current recollection, the former should be preferred, as he had no reason to believe that the RMP statement was other than an accurate record of his experiences of the day in question.¹

84.110 Corporal 039 was shown the photograph taken by Jeffrey Morris of soldiers behind the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp that we have reproduced above,¹ but was unable to identify himself or any of the other soldiers, though he did state that the figure in a beret kneeling down could have been Colonel Wilford and the soldier next to him a radio operator.²

² B1651.7-8

84.111 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Corporal 039 said that he had a clear recollection of muzzle flashes coming from the doorway of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Asked why this detail did not appear in his 1972 statements, Corporal 039 said "It would depend on what questions I was asked about the incident, sir, you know, that is all I can say on that".¹

84.112 Corporal 039 said that he had no recollections of hearing explosions when he was at the low wall, and when asked whether, if he had heard explosions, it was something he might have mentioned to the RMP, he gave the same answer that he had given in relation to his account of seeing muzzle flashes.¹

84.113 Corporal 039 was shown the following photograph of a Thompson sub-machine gun.

84.114 Corporal 039 agreed that this was a distinctive-looking weapon; but said that he had only had a fleeting glance when he saw it on the day.¹

- 84.115 In our view, had Corporal 039 seen muzzle flashes from the door of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, he would have mentioned this in the accounts that he gave in 1972.

Colour Sergeant 002

- 84.116 We have already referred¹ to the RMP statement of Colour Sergeant 002,² in which he described Sergeant K, Private M and Private L moving to the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp; Sergeant K firing one shot “at two males who were behind a pile of rubble”; and himself telling Private M and Private L to fire at “a male person dressed in dark jacket and trousers doing a leopard crawl towards the South end of No 1 Block” who had a rifle in “the crook of his elbow”. He recorded that each of these soldiers fired two rounds at this man, who was hit. He also stated that he saw a second man crawling from behind the rubble. “I could not see any weapon with him and as a group of people were standing inside the door to where he was crawling I ordered ‘M’ and ‘L’ to cease fire. This they did. The second person to leave the rubble then started to drag the man who had been hit towards the door. Then about four men came out of the flats and dragged both men inside.”

² B1348-1351

- 84.117 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Colour Sergeant 002 recorded that he was moving up behind Sergeant K when that soldier fired one round. He stated that Sergeant K then told him that there were two men crawling from the barricade towards the far corner of the flats. Colour Sergeant 002 then gave a similar account to that in his RMP statement of seeing a man with a rifle; ordering Private M and Private L to fire, which they did; and then ordering them to cease fire, as he could not see that the second man had a weapon and people had gathered at the doorway of the flats. He told the Widgery Inquiry that the people outside the door dragged the first man into the flats and that the second man went with them.¹

- 84.118 Colour Sergeant 002 did not give oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, but he did give written evidence to this Inquiry.

- 84.119 In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Colour Sergeant 002 told us that he had been a weapons training officer and on 30th January 1972 was the Commander of Composite Platoon.¹ In fact Captain 200 was the Commander of Composite Platoon, and Colour Sergeant 002 the Platoon Sergeant, who led the half of the platoon given the call sign 71A. He stated that he did not have any memory himself of incoming fire as he and his men moved further along Rossville Street after disembarking, “but I do remember soldiers in front of me taking cover and behaving as if they were under fire”.² He gave us this description of the man whom he said he saw “leopard crawling” towards the door of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats:³

“27. I can remember that he was wearing a long black Crombie style overcoat and that he was leopard crawling along with a rifle in the crook of his arm. I can remember thinking that it was a good leopard crawl and I that I would have given him a B grading if I had been assessing him as a soldier.

28. I cannot remember whether he had crawled from or over the Rubble Barricade but I can remember him being on the pavement below the windows of the Rossville Flats heading towards the entrance door. I could definitely see his weapon and could see the butt and stock. I had absolutely no doubt as to what it was. I think the rifle was a Lee Enfield .303 and I say this because this weapon has a very small magazine and I cannot remember seeing a large or distinctive magazine such as that on a Kalashnikov or SLR. It was quite a long rifle, which the .303 Lee Enfield is, as opposed to the Armalite which is shorter. At that time I was not familiar with the M1 Carbine and so cannot say if it may have been that weapon.

29. There were two members of Guin[n]ess Force just to the right of me. One of them was the one who had shouted something like ‘There’s a guy with a rifle’ or ‘That guy’s got a rifle’. I cannot remember who this was but I told them to engage and they opened fire with I think one round a piece. I saw dust come up around the man who was hit. I then shouted at them to stop firing.

30. The entrance door to the Rossville Flats was packed with people watching. Some came out came towards the man. They picked him up and half walked and half carried him back into the door. I think there were about six of them doing this. They took the rifle from him.”

³ B1363.004

² B1363.003

84.120 A little later in this statement Colour Sergeant 002 told us this:¹

“33. After this man had been shot we noticed a second one who had been crouching down behind a pile of rubble at the barricade. I can remember that he stood up and whether this is because I or someone else shouted at him to stand up I do not know. He walked towards the entrance door to the Rossville Flats but there were no shots fired at him because he was not carrying a weapon. I think that we intended to go in and try and pursue the gunman but we did not go further forward because of orders. I think that we were told to consolidate our position but whether this was by Captain SA8² or Colonel Derek Wilford I do not know. We did not go into the Glenfada Park area and remained in Rossville Street just outside Glenfada Park North.”

² This is an alternative cipher used to refer to Captain 200.

84.121 Colour Sergeant 002 recalled that he had given a weapons demonstration for members of the Widgery Inquiry (not including Lord Widgery). “We fired a variety of weapons including SLR’s, SMG’s, pistols and Rubber Bullet Guns but we (the soldiers present) could not differentiate between them and neither could the members of the Inquiry who were there.”¹

84.122 Colour Sergeant 002 did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry. He lived outside the jurisdiction and informed us that he was unable to attend for reasons of ill health.

Evidence of other soldiers

84.123 It is convenient at this point to refer to the evidence of some other soldiers that refers or appears to refer to the firing by soldiers of Composite Platoon from the walls of the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk.

Private 032

84.124 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 032 recorded that he took up a defensive position behind a 4ft high brick wall “about six metres North East of number two Columbcille Court”, facing south towards the Rossville Flats. According to this account, Private L was about 3ft to the east of his position, at the corner of the wall. Private 032 saw two men crawling south from a barricade along the wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The rear man was wearing a dark brown suit and was trailing what looked like a rifle behind him. The man crawling ahead of him was wearing a mid-grey suit or overcoat. The men had been crawling for about 30 seconds, and the man in front was nearing the entrance to Block 1, when Private L opened fire. Private 032 saw the body of the rear man jerk as if he had been struck by a bullet. The man in front had by this time reached the entrance and disappeared into the building.

84.125 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 032 told us that while he was at the wall someone shouted “Gunman at the barricade”. As he looked towards the barricade, he saw two men were moving in “a sort of leopard crawl” from the barricade to the entrance to Block 1. The rear crawling man was wearing a dark overcoat and trailing a long implement that Private 032 thought was a rifle. It was difficult to estimate the length of this object, but Private 032 believed that it was about half as long as the man was tall, or about 2ft to 3ft long. It was not straight and its shape was too intricate for it to have been a stick. Private 032 was clear in his own mind that it was a rifle. The man was holding it on his right side, partly concealing it under his body and using one hand to crawl. He might have been on his knees rather than his stomach, but Private 032 had the impression that he was very low to the ground.

84.126 Private 032 told us that the man in front was wearing a dark suit, but he did not see him carrying anything. This man was turning and calling to the rear man, as if encouraging him to move. Private 032 stated that he could not give an estimate of the age of either of the crawling men. Private 032 also told us that he heard shots fired; and that he recalled that these shots came from his left, implying that they might have come from the waste ground. The body of the rear crawling man jerked twice. He might have been shot by more than one soldier. The other crawling man then stood up and ran into the entrance to Block 1. Just before the shots were fired, the rear man “seemed to have half rolled towards us or as if he had been hit by a round and so he was lying on his left hand side”.¹

84.127 Private 032 told us that he no longer recalled that Private L had been present. Private 032 identified the soldier with the upturned visor shown in Jeffrey Morris’s photograph of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp¹ as himself. Private 032 stated, incorrectly, that he had recorded in his RMP statement that Sergeant K fired a round. He told us that he had a recollection of Sergeant K firing a round, but was confused about whether his recollection was correct. If Sergeant K fired, it was possible that he did so in the course of the incident in which the rear crawling man was shot. At some stage after the rear crawling man was shot, Colonel Wilford arrived at the wall where Private 032 was positioned, shouting “Stop shooting, fire only when told to do so”.² Colonel Wilford gave an instruction that if anyone was to fire it should be Sergeant K, because he was the regimental sniper. Private 032 did not see any wounds on the body of the rear crawling man and did not know what happened to him.

² B1616.008

84.129 According to Private 032, the other crawling man was wearing dark clothing, but not necessarily a suit. He did not think that the description of this man’s clothing in his RMP statement as “mid-grey in colour”¹ was in his own words, and thought that the RMP investigator might have suggested it to him. When he first saw the two men, they were already moving away from the barricade. The rear crawling man did not at any stage make any offensive move with his rifle, or put himself into a position from which he could have shot Private 032 or any of the soldiers near him. Private 032 did not feel under threat because enough soldiers were present for him to be confident that if the crawling man were to turn his weapon towards them one of the soldiers would take action. He did not, while he was watching, see anything to justify a soldier opening fire at the rear crawling man.

84.130 Private 032 said that the shots that he heard came from the other side of Rossville Street, not from the soldiers around him. He did not now have any impression that a soldier near him had fired. Private 032 said he recalled seeing the rear crawling man move as if he had been hit, but not that the man seemed to have rolled onto his left side before the shots were fired, as he had recorded in his written statement to this Inquiry. He told us that he had no recollection of Private L firing as described in his RMP statement, nor did he now have any recollection of hearing or receiving any order from Colonel Wilford, or hearing a ceasefire order shouted by Major Loden.

84.131 We note at this point that in his RMP statement¹ Private 032 gave an account of the soldiers coming under automatic fire “from a barricade South West in Rossville Street” as they disembarked from their vehicles. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Private 032 told us that he had no recollection of “anyone firing at us at the Rubble Barricade”,³ although he added that when his section was at the southern end of Kells Walk they could hear “one or two shots in front of us at the Rubble Barricade”.⁴ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ he said that he no longer recalled hearing automatic fire or hearing shots from the rubble barricade. We have found no other evidence that suggests to us that soldiers of Composite Platoon came under fire from an automatic weapon as they disembarked; and it is difficult to see how Private 032 could have been able to identify this fire as coming from the rubble barricade. We do not accept his evidence that there was such firing.

Sergeant 035

84.132 In his RMP statement,¹ Sergeant 035 recorded that he took up a position at the southern end of a block of flats approximately 30m west of the junction of Rossville Street and Pilot Row. According to this account, he had been in this position for about one minute when he saw Private M fire two shots at two men about 100m away who were crawling south along the wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats away from a pile of rubble. Both men were hit but they continued to crawl until they reached the entrance to the block. One of the men was wearing a brown suit and the other was wearing dark clothing. Both men appeared to be dragging long objects that looked like rifles.

84.133 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant 035 told us that he recalled being on a low roof, at least one and no more than three storeys high. He could not remember how he had reached it. The roof was flat and not very large. He believed that he was up against a waist-high balustrade or wall, looking towards Block 1. Sergeant K and some others were also there. In all, Sergeant 035 thought that there were four to six soldiers on the roof. Sergeant 035 told us that he did not recall seeing the rubble barricade, and hence believed that if there was such a barricade he was to the south of it. He believed that his position was either at the point marked A or at the point marked B on the plan attached to his statement² (the southern end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North or the eastern end of the northern block of Glenfada Park South). Sergeant 035 stated that he saw two men about 100 yards away crawling along the wall of Block 1, moving from north to south. They were crawling on their knees and elbows in military style, keeping as low as possible.

84.134 Sergeant 035 told us that each man was holding a long, thin, dark object in his left hand; and that he knew immediately that these objects were rifles. The men were holding the butts of their rifles under their armpits with the muzzles pointing forwards in accordance with standard military practice. The muzzles became visible when the men moved their left elbows forward. The wooden stocks of the weapons were also visible. As the Section Commander, Sergeant 035 was the proper person to give an order to fire. Such an order was given, although Sergeant 035 could no longer remember whether it was given by him or by someone else. The order would not have been given to any particular soldier but would have been a general order to fire. A standard wording would have been used to identify the target and prepare the men to fire. Sergeant 035 recalled that at least one soldier responded to the order but he could not now say which soldier it was. Nor could he remember actually hearing any shots fired. Sergeant 035 believed that both men were hit, but did not think that he had seen this happen. Instead he had assumed that they had been hit because he did not think that the soldiers would have missed from the range from which they were firing. The men continued to crawl and then disappeared, probably into the entrance of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, or perhaps around the corner at the southern end of that block.

84.135 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant 035 said that in reliance on his RMP statement he now believed that he had been at the southern end of Kells Walk and that he had been mistaken about his location when he made his written statement to this Inquiry. He no longer had any recollection of seeing rifles being carried by the two crawling men. The account that he gave in his written statement to this Inquiry of how the two men had carried the weapons had not been intended to be a description of what he remembered seeing, but to be an explanation of the manner in which a soldier would carry a rifle when crawling. However, he said that he believed that he had told the truth when he made his RMP statement.

84.136 Sergeant 035 accepted that he could not have known whether either of the men carrying a firearm was, in the words used in Rule 13 of the Yellow Card,¹ “about to use it for offensive purposes”. Nevertheless, he said that it had been his belief that they were going to fire at soldiers after reaching a position of cover and that it was impracticable to give a warning because of the distance between the soldiers and the crawling men and because of the amount of noise in the area. He said that in these circumstances he thought that it had been right to give an order to fire without warning; and that a general order to fire did not contravene the principle of minimum force or create unnecessary risk to bystanders, because although it authorised any of the soldiers in his section to open fire, it did not require all of them to do so.

84.137 Sergeant 035 said that he did not now remember an order to fire being given, and accepted that as no such order was mentioned in his RMP statement, it would be reasonable to conclude that he had not given one. It was possible that no order to fire was given by anyone, in which case a soldier should only have opened fire in order to deal with a threat of which he did not have time to inform his superior. Sergeant 035 said that he no longer had a recollection of seeing Private M fire, nor remembered seeing Sergeant K fire, or seeing more than one soldier fire. He had no idea of the ages of the two crawling men.

84.138 Sergeant 035 rejected the suggestion that in his written statement to this Inquiry he had lied about his location at the time of this incident, in order to suggest that his view of the crawling men had been better than in fact it was.¹ Sergeant 035 was shown a photograph taken by the Derry Journal photographer Larry Doherty (reproduced below) of the return halfway up the ramp leading to the upper storey of Kells Walk.

84.139 Sergeant 035 accepted, after lengthy questioning,¹ that he had been “on a pram ramp” when he saw the two crawling men. However, he then said² that he had been on the smaller ramp between the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, and that he believed that in his written statement to this Inquiry he had confused this ramp with a roof on which he had been positioned at some stage on that day. He said that the reason for his belief that he was on the ramp between the low walls when he saw the two crawling men was that in his RMP statement he had recorded that the men were about 100m away from his position.³ In our view Sergeant 035 was probably correct in describing himself as being on the smaller ramp.

³ Day 361/122

² Day 361/119-121

Lance Corporal 010

84.140 In his RMP statement,¹ Lance Corporal 010 recorded that he reached a low wall at the south-west end of a block of flats. Someone shouted that the western flank should be checked. Lance Corporal 010 moved to his right, checked that the flank was secure and then moved back behind the low wall. As he returned to this position, he saw Private L fire two aimed rounds towards a barricade in Rossville Street. He did not see Private L’s target, but when he looked towards the barricade he saw a male person apparently dragging the body of a second male towards the flats.

¹ B1393

84.141 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 010 told us that he was one of a group of perhaps five soldiers who took cover behind the wall. According to this account, Lance Corporal 010 had a picture in his mind of the head and upper chest of a man who was leaning against the rubble barricade after having been shot twice by a soldier on Lance Corporal 010’s right. Lance Corporal 010 was not sure whether this was based on his own memory or on something that he had been told. He thought that he had heard someone say that the man was still twitching, to which the firing soldier replied “Leave him, he’s been hit twice already”. Lance Corporal 010 could now see that the man on the barricade had a rifle. Lance Corporal 010 “would guess” that the man’s clothes were “probably lightish”. Lance Corporal 010 also had a picture in his mind of the flashes of two or three pistol shots in a dark area at the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Again he was not sure whether this was a true memory or something that he had been told. After he saw these flashes, a soldier on his left fired two shots.

84.142 Lance Corporal 010 told us that he assumed that either these shots had hit the gunman or the gunman had run away. Lance Corporal 010 said he did not see the gunman. He stated that he could not remember whether the soldier on his left or the soldier on his right fired first. The soldier on his left might have been Private INQ 748 but he “would be guessing”¹ about this. Neither of the soldiers was Sergeant K, who was somewhere behind Lance Corporal 010, and neither of the soldiers was using a telescopic sight. Lance Corporal 010 thought that these shooting incidents had lasted about two minutes. Lance Corporal 010 stated² that he did not now remember checking the western flank. He did not remember Private L as one of the soldiers who fired, but assumed that what he had said in his RMP statement was correct. He did not remember seeing a body being dragged anywhere.

84.143 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal 010 said that the other soldiers who took cover with him at the wall were definitely members of Composite Platoon. He said that it was quite possible that he had derived his mental pictures of a wounded gunman at the rubble barricade and of the flashes of pistol shots at the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats from what he had heard after the event. There had obviously been a lot of talk afterwards about what had taken place. He could not recall which soldiers had been at the wall with him, but thought that Private L had been there. Sergeant K was “there somewhere near”. He could not remember whether Private M had been at the wall. His current recollection was of two soldiers firing rather than one, but he thought that “part of this might have been ... from stories told afterwards, possibly”. He now had a mental picture of a body being dragged towards the Rossville Flats but did not know whether this was derived from what someone had told him or from what he had seen. He also said that he could not remember anyone trying to make his way to the doorway of Block 1. His suggestion that Private INQ 748 may have been one of the soldiers who fired was “more of a guess than anything else”. Lance Corporal 010 said, in reliance on his RMP statement, that Private L had fired but that he could not recall Sergeant K or Private M firing.² He confirmed that he did not see Private L’s target.³

³ Day 355/126

² Day 355/122-123

84.144 We note at this point that Lance Corporal 010 gave an account in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ of as many as 20 rounds being fired north up Rossville Street when he was within 50 yards of the rubble barricade. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Lance Corporal 010 said that he still had a recollection of incoming fire at this stage, but he accepted that it was not mentioned in his RMP statement and that “maybe it was something to do with another occasion”. In our view Lance Corporal 010 was indeed confusing Bloody Sunday with another occasion.

² Day 355/103-105

Sergeant 014

84.145 In his RMP statement,¹ Sergeant 014 recorded that he took up a position behind a 4ft high wall and faced south-east towards the Rossville Flats. According to this account, he saw two men crawling south beneath the wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats away from the rubble barricade. The rear man was wearing a dark brown suit and trailing what looked like a rifle behind him. The other man was wearing dark clothing. Private L was behind the wall, about 5 yards east of Sergeant 014. Private L fired two shots at the men. Sergeant 014 saw the rear man jerk as if hit. The other man reached the doorway and went inside. The rear man also continued to crawl and when he arrived at the doorway was dragged inside. Colonel Wilford arrived at the wall at this stage and ordered Private L to cease firing.

84.146 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant 014 told us that he saw two men leopard-crawling towards the entrance to Block 1. He thought that one of the soldiers to his right had pointed the men out and had said that they were armed. The rear man was dragging a weapon behind him on his right side. Sergeant 014 and the soldiers to his right thought that the weapon was a rifle. The soldiers to his right had a better view than Sergeant 014 because they were higher up. One of them fired two shots at the crawling men. Sergeant 014 stated that he could not recall the identity of the firing soldier. He thought that another two shots might have been fired at the crawling men from somewhere else to his right, but could not be sure about this. He could not say whether the men were hit. One of the men entered the doorway and the other was dragged in by the crowd. Sergeant 014 thought that it was soon after the shooting that Captain 200 arrived at the wall with a section of eight men, followed by Colonel Wilford, who told the soldiers to cease firing, even though they were not firing at the time. Sergeant 014 told us² that the soldier who fired was definitely to the west of his position, not to the east as indicated in his RMP statement. He did not now remember Private L and stated that he might not have known him at the time.

84.147 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Sergeant 014 said that the soldiers in a higher position to his right were on the sloping path between the two low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk. The soldier who drew his attention to the two crawling men was a member of his section. He did not recall that any of the other soldiers shouted a warning about the men. He agreed that he had only seen the rear man dragging a weapon and had not been able to tell whether the other crawling man was armed. He did not recall seeing one of the men dragging the other along. He could not remember whether Colour Sergeant 002, Sergeant K or Private M had been at the low walls when this incident occurred. He did not hear anyone give an order to the soldiers to fire. He could not say why he did not describe Sergeant K's or Private M's firing in his RMP statement.

84.148 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Captain 200 said that when he arrived at the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk he was not accompanied by eight men. He did not see Colonel Wilford there. He had no recollection of Colonel Wilford giving an order to cease firing, nor did he himself give such an order.

Private INQ 127

84.149 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 127 told us that he was delayed when disembarking from his vehicle because the straps on his radio backpack became caught on the tailboard of the lorry. When he had freed himself, he followed the rest of his platoon down the right side of a street and caught up with a group of soldiers who were standing near some steps, behind which he took cover. The flight of steps was "about chest height" and rose to the right. He attached to his statement² a copy of Jeffrey Morris's photograph of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, but stated that he was not shown in it, and that the steps at which he was positioned "protruded more than those on this photograph".

up, which meant that Private INQ 127 also had to rise to a half-crouching position because the wire connecting the handset to the radio was too short for him to remain as he was.

84.151 Private INQ 127 told us that from this position he looked towards the rubble barricade, behind which he could see something long and black, which he took to be the body of a person lying prone. He did not assume that the person was dead. He thought that the person was lying face down. The head was on the barricade and the feet to the south. The body was about 20ft from the side of a building. Private INQ 127 stated that he believed that this building was Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Just as he saw the body, someone next to him said "Thompson Machine Gun". Private INQ 127 thought that the soldier next to him had fired a shot. Private INQ 127 could also see "someone who was nothing more than a black shadow" at the southern end of Block 1, standing with his shoulder to the wall, looking round the corner and ducking in and out. Private INQ 127 could not see any weapon in this man's hands but he only observed the scene for 20 seconds. The officer dropped the handset and grabbed his rifle, whereupon Private INQ 127 dropped back down behind the steps and saw nothing more. Something made him think that the officer had fired his rifle, but Private INQ 127 did not know whether this was so. He thought that the officer had been using a sniper rifle with a telescopic sight. He assumed that if the officer had fired, his target would have been either the body at the barricade or the man at the southern end of Block 1. Private INQ 127 said he had not seen any smoke from the muzzle of a weapon at the barricade, but had seen some dust rising, which could have resulted from a weapon being fired at or from the barricade, or from some other cause.

84.152 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private INQ 127 said that when in his written statement to this Inquiry he had referred to his "Commanding Officer", he had meant to refer not to Colonel Wilford but to his Platoon or Section Commander, and that although he reached a flight of steps while he was trying to catch up with the rest of his platoon, he moved on from there to a position behind a wall. When it was drawn to his attention that Colour Sergeant 002 had said in the unredacted version of his RMP statement that Private INQ 127 had been his signaller, Private INQ 127 said that although he could not remember Colour Sergeant 002, he thought that this was possible.

84.153 Private INQ 127 said¹ that the wall shown in Jeffrey Morris's photograph of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp² now looked familiar to him, and that he believed that after stopping by the steps at the northern end of Kells Walk he had moved down the side of that building and taken cover behind the wall at the southern end. He said he could not remember which other soldiers had been at the wall when he reached it. He thought that the soldier to whom he passed the handset of his radio had been the Senior NCO for whom he had been acting as signaller.

² C127.9

84.154 Private INQ 127 said that he saw only one soldier open fire. That soldier was using a sniper rifle. Private INQ 127 identified him as Sergeant K. He was not the soldier who had given the warning about a Thompson sub-machine gun. Private INQ 127 said that he believed that Sergeant K had been standing next to the NCO for whom Private INQ 127 had been acting as signaller. Private INQ 127 said that he remembered Sergeant K bringing his rifle to the aim and looking through the sight to see “where everybody was shouting at”.¹ He did not see at whom or at what Sergeant K fired his rifle. Private INQ 127 said that he did not remember any soldier other than Sergeant K firing, or hearing any other shot close to him, although he still had “a feeling”² that the NCO whose signaller he was had fired his rifle.

² Day 360/151

84.155 Private INQ 127 also said that he did not remember seeing Private L or Private M at any stage; nor did he see any crawling man, or recall any order to fire or cease firing being given by an NCO. So far as Private INQ 127 knew, the person lying prone had not had any part of his body on the barricade. Private INQ 127 did not remember seeing anyone else in the area of the barricade when he looked over the wall, other than the person at the corner of Block 1, nor did he recall seeing anyone with a weapon at the barricade. The dust that he saw rising from the barricade had been near the body of the person lying prone. Private INQ 127 said¹ that he did not see anything in the moments before Sergeant K fired his rifle that warranted opening fire.

Private 006

84.156 In his RMP statement,¹ Private 006 of Mortar Platoon recorded that he took up a position at the rear of Sergeant O’s vehicle when it was located about 10m to the north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. According to this account, from this position he saw a member of his battalion firing at the rubble barricade. The firing soldier was behind a low wall, which “circled number two Columbcille Court, situated at the North East Corner”. He saw three strikes on the barricade as a result of the firing but did not see anyone hit. When the firing finished, Lieutenant N ordered Private 006 and others to collect three bodies from the barricade.

84.157 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Private 006 told us that his current recollection was that he had looked towards the barricade from the northern end of Block 1 and seen bullets hitting the barricade. He had not seen any civilians but had assumed that they were keeping low behind the barricade in firing positions. He only recalled hearing the sound of SLR fire. He thought that the bullets had been fired by soldiers who were standing behind a low wall near Kells Walk. He did not now remember seeing the soldiers fire, although he said that their firing was “very controlled”, that they appeared to be firing at identifiable targets and that they were acting in a disciplined manner and not firing wildly. The soldiers were gesturing towards the barricade, indicating to Private 006 and perhaps to others nearby that there were identifiable targets behind the barricade. When he and others later went to pick up the bodies from the barricade, Private 006 knew that these soldiers would give them cover. Although his current recollection was of seeing several bullet strikes on the barricade, Private 006 preferred to rely on his RMP statement, in which he stated that he had referred to “2 or 3”. In fact, he had referred in that statement to three strikes.

84.158 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private 006 said that although he had said in his RMP statement that he had been at the rear of Sergeant O’s vehicle at the material time, he thought that he could actually have been at the northern end of Block 1. He did not think that the vehicles had gathered at the northern end of the block when he arrived there. He could not remember whether he had seen only one soldier firing, as he had said in his RMP statement, or whether there had been two or three soldiers behind the low wall. Private 006 said² that he had seen the soldiers firing at the barricade but had not seen any gunmen, nail bombers or petrol bombers. He had not recognised any of the soldiers and did not know to which platoon they belonged. He did not remember seeing a group of soldiers move forward from the low wall at any stage to be replaced by a second group. Later in his evidence,³ Private 006 said at first that he had been at the north-west corner of Block 1, but then said that the description of his position that he gave in his RMP statement would have been accurate and that he would have been looking at the barricade around the side of Sergeant O’s vehicle. When the bullets hit the barricade, he saw “the muck fly up”. He could not remember which part of the barricade the bullets had hit. He did not see anyone crawling away from the barricade as a result of the shooting, pushing rifles or anything of that kind, nor did he see anyone bouncing up against a wall having been shot.

Evidence of Lieutenant Colonel Wilford on shooting from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp

84.159 Later in this report¹ we consider in detail Colonel Wilford's accounts of what he did and saw when he followed his soldiers into the Bogside. However, in view of the references made to his presence or possible presence at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, it is convenient at this point to refer to his evidence on this topic.

84.160 In his undated 1972 statement,¹ Colonel Wilford recorded that as he arrived at a low wall on the western side of Rossville Street, one of the soldiers fired "to his left front". Colonel Wilford asked the soldier what his target was, and he said that there was a gunman lying behind some rubble. "I warned them all to keep their heads down and to fire only at identifiable targets. I asked where the Company Commander was and he was pointed out as being across near the flats. I then ran over and had a quick word with the RMP arrest team which had arrived to pick up some arrested civilians."

¹ B951

84.161 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Colonel Wilford confirmed this account and said that the soldier who fired was the one shown standing on the left of the low walls in Jeffrey Morris's photograph of soldiers at the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, which we have reproduced above.² He said that the soldier was firing towards the rubble barricade. He was asked³ whether he could identify the soldier by letter, and said that he would be able to do so after the Widgery Inquiry had risen. However, there is no indication in the transcript that he ever did this. Colonel Wilford also identified the figure in a beret shown behind the wall in the photograph as himself. He said⁴ that he had seen one of his soldiers "firing shots", but it was then put to him that he had seen a soldier "fire one shot", and he agreed with that proposition.

² Paragraph 84.53

⁴ WT11.65

84.162 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Colonel Wilford told us that he did not now recall seeing the soldier firing. He stated that his current recollection was that the soldier had told him that he had fired, but that it was clear from his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that he had in fact seen the soldier fire. He could not now identify any of the soldiers at the low wall, nor could he say whether he had seen the soldier fire more than one shot, although he inclined to the view that he had not.

84.163 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ he confirmed that he thought that he had probably seen the soldier fire a single shot. Later in his evidence,² he was shown the account given by Private L in his statement to this Inquiry of his firing towards the rubble barricade, and it was put to Colonel Wilford that one of these shots must have been the one that he saw. He said that this would seem to be so.

Summary of the military evidence of shooting by Composite Platoon from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp

84.164 Sergeant K stated that he fired one shot from the walls of the low ramp at the southern end of Kells Walk at the second of two men crawling from the rubble barricade, who appeared to have a rifle. Sergeant K told Captain 200 that he had fired at a gunman at the barricade and missed. He told the RMP that he might have hit the gunman but that he did not observe a strike, and told the Widgery Inquiry that he could not say whether he had hit the gunman or not, but also said that he had not killed him. He told this Inquiry that he thought that he had hit the gunman. Sergeant K also stated that the first man had reached the door of the flats and had been pulled in and that the second man had also eventually been pulled in. There was nothing in the accounts that Sergeant K gave in 1972 to suggest that the first man was armed and Sergeant K told us that he had no weapon.

84.165 Private L stated that on the orders of Colour Sergeant 002 he had fired a shot at, and hit, one of two men crawling away from the rubble barricade and shortly afterwards had fired another shot at the other man which he thought had hit both men. He told the RMP and this Inquiry that both men appeared to be cradling rifles, but his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry was that the man at whom he fired his second shot was cradling the rifle he had originally seen in the possession of the first man. Captain 200 recorded that Private L had fired two shots at the rubble barricade, but not that he was claiming a hit or a possible hit. According to his evidence to this Inquiry, Private L fired two shots at the first man, both of which hit him, and one at the second, which might have missed.

- 84.166 Private M stated that he had fired one shot from a kneeling position at each of two men crawling from the rubble barricade who he thought were pushing weapons in front of them, and told the Widgery Inquiry in his oral evidence that he thought that he had hit both of them. Captain 200 recorded that Private M had fired two rounds at a gunman (not gunmen) behind the rubble barricade, with a possible hit.
- 84.167 Colour Sergeant 002 recorded in his RMP statement that he saw Sergeant K fire one shot at two males who were behind a pile of rubble, but in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry said that Sergeant K told him about the two men after the shot had been fired. Colour Sergeant 002 also stated that he himself told Private L and Private M to fire at a man with a rifle doing a leopard crawl towards the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, and saw these two soldiers each fire two shots at this man, who was hit. He saw a second man crawling from the rubble barricade but could see no weapon and as people were standing inside the door to which he was crawling he ordered Private L and Private M to cease fire, which they did.
- 84.168 Corporal 039 gave a different account. He stated that he ordered Private L and Private M to fire at two gunmen crawling from the rubble barricade to the door at the southern end of the Rossville Flats, one of whom appeared to have a Thompson sub-machine gun and the other a weapon of some sort. Private L and Private M each fired two shots. He thought both men had been hit, the former about two or three times.
- 84.169 Private 032 gave an account of seeing two men crawling from the rubble barricade along the wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, the rear one trailing what looked like a rifle. Private L opened fire and the rear man jerked as if struck by a bullet. The man in front had by this time gone into the entrance. Sergeant 014 gave a very similar account.
- 84.170 Sergeant 035 gave an account of seeing Private M fire two shots at, and hit, two men who were crawling south along the wall of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Both men, who appeared to be dragging long objects that looked like rifles, continued to crawl until they reached the entrance to the block. Sergeant 035 told us that he did not think that he had actually seen the men hit, but that he had assumed that they had been hit because he did not think that the soldiers would have missed from the range from which they were firing.

- 84.171 Lance Corporal 010 told the RMP that he had seen Private L fire two aimed rounds towards the rubble barricade, but did not see his target.
- 84.172 Private INQ 127 told us that he only saw Sergeant K fire and that he did not see anything in the moments before this soldier fired that warranted opening fire.
- 84.173 As to the evidence of Private 006, this in our view may relate to the firing by Sergeant K, Private L or Private M, but does not provide any assistance on the question why this firing occurred.
- 84.174 In total, therefore, according to the accounts discussed above, and on the assumption that Private L fired two shots at this stage as he said in 1972, and not three as he told this Inquiry, soldiers of Composite Platoon fired five shots from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, all of them at one or other of two men who were crawling from the rubble barricade to the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, though the descriptions soldiers gave of these men and their actions and movements differed significantly. These soldiers were ordered to fire by Colour Sergeant 002 and perhaps also by Corporal 039, though in our view Sergeant 035 probably gave no order.
- 84.175 The evidence of Sergeant K, Colour Sergeant 002, Private 032 and Sergeant 014 is that only one man was hit. As will be seen, this is consistent with the evidence of civilians, which we consider later in this report.¹ We have found no evidence, apart from that of Private L, Private M and Corporal 039, that two men were hit, and in our view these soldiers were mistaken in stating that this was the case. We consider later in this report² the question of what Colonel Wilford said when he reached the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp.
- ¹ Paragraphs 86.414–468
- ² Paragraph 171.30
- 84.176 Despite his later evidence that he might have hit his target, it is in our view likely that Sergeant K missed. This is what he initially told Captain 200, and that he missed his target is to our minds supported by the evidence of Colour Sergeant 002. It is possible that Sergeant K untruthfully told Captain 200 that he had missed in his initial accounts in order to avoid being held responsible for the casualty, but to our minds this is highly unlikely in view of his later accounts.
- 84.177 We are sure, on the basis of the soldiers' evidence and of the civilian, medical and scientific evidence that we consider later in this report,¹ that the man who was hit by firing from Private L or Private M was Kevin McElhinney, who was shot as he crawled from the rubble barricade and had got close to the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

We are also sure, for the reasons we also give later in this report,² that neither Kevin McElhinney nor anyone close to him was armed with a rifle. Later in this report³ we consider whether it is possible to determine which of these soldiers is the more likely to have shot Kevin McElhinney and whether or not they believed (albeit mistakenly) that he posed a threat of causing death or serious injury.

² Paragraphs 86.461 and 89.56

84.178 We should add that we do not accept the evidence of Private M to the Widgery Inquiry, that as he and Corporal 039 were advancing up the side of Kells Walk, there were some pistol shots and a few high velocity shots coming from the rubble barricade. He said that he did not see who was firing them, or where they went. Thus it is difficult to see how he could have known that these were shots from the rubble barricade. Private M also gave accounts of hearing nail bombs and seeing a petrol bomb land in front of the rubble barricade. We have already expressed our view that there were no nail or petrol bombs.

84.179 By the time Private M advanced up the side of Kells Walk, Lieutenant N had fired shots up the Eden Place alleyway, Corporal P had fired two shots a short distance further south on Rossville Street, and a man with a pistol had fired as described by Private 017 and others, also a short distance to the south or south-west. As Private M advanced up the side of Kells Walk, Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers fired from the low walls at the southern end of Kells Walk, and firing was taking place in the car park of the Rossville Flats. In our view Private M probably heard these shots, or some of them, wrongly assumed that they had come from the area of the rubble barricade and as a result believed that there were armed men at that barricade. We take the same view of what Private L described in his RMP statement¹ as sporadic fire coming from the direction of the rubble barricade as he advanced and of bullet strikes in Rossville Street.

85.1 In addition to the shots that soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon stated that they had fired from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, there is evidence of other shooting by soldiers in Sector 3.

Corporal P

85.2 Earlier in this report¹ we considered the evidence of Corporal P of Mortar Platoon, to the effect that he had fired two shots at a nail bomber soon after taking up position on the western side of Rossville Street, after disembarking from Sergeant O's APC. For the reasons we gave, we rejected his account of engaging a nail bomber, but we concluded that he did fire his rifle at about this time. On the basis of Liam Mailey's evidence and photographs, which we have considered earlier in this part of the report,² we are sure that these shots were fired before soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon reached the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp.

² Paragraphs 69.51–57

- 85.3 After giving the account that we have rejected of firing at a nail bomber, Corporal P recorded in his first RMP statement:¹

“The crowd then pulled back temporarily about 5–10 metres. The nailbomb did not explode. They then surged forward again and removed the body of the man I had shot.

In front of us about 70–75 metres was a block of flats. To the right of us were the Rossville Flats.

Between us and the flats in front was a low barricade towards which we advanced. As we advanced we came under gunfire. I think it was from a pistol but cannot be certain. Two bullets struck the wall just above our heads.

We went to ground. When lying I saw a man get up from behind the barricade he had what appeared to be a pistol in his hand. He held it like a pistol and he pointed it in our general direction. I fired four aimed shots at this man. I saw the first round strike the barricade and the following three rounds appeared to hit the body of the man with the pistol. He fell backwards behind the barricade.

A group of people ran towards where he had fallen and some of them bent down and picked something up. It was not the body and I assumed it was the gun.

We stayed in our positions until the rioters dispersed.

After I had shot the gunman I fired a further five rounds over the heads of the rioters to attempt to disperse them.

I cannot describe the gunman I shot, the incident occurred so quickly.”

- 85.4 We have earlier¹ reproduced the RMP map that accompanied this statement but for convenience we reproduce it again here.²

² B579

85.5 It is not possible to tell from this map which of the two positions marked for Corporal P was intended to show what he had said was his position when he fired four shots at a man with a pistol behind the rubble barricade.

85.6 In his second RMP statement timed at 1450 hours on 1st February 1972,¹ Corporal P stated that his first RMP statement was incorrect in recording that he had fired five shots over the heads of rioters: "I fired only 3 rounds 7.62 over their heads." He stated that during the afternoon he fired a total of nine rounds. We have no reason to doubt that this was an accurate correction as to the total number of shots he had fired.

- 85.7 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Corporal P gave a similar account of firing at a man with a pistol at the rubble barricade, but whereas in his first RMP statement he had said only that the gunman pointed in the general direction of the soldiers something that looked like a pistol, in this statement Corporal P added that the gunman fired a number of shots. As to the shots that he said that he had fired after shooting at the man with a pistol, he gave this account:

“The area qui[e]ttened down. I noticed the vehicle had moved back on to the waste ground in front of the North End of the Rossville Flats. I then told the soldier who was with me to move back across the road to cover the vehicle. I followed on behind him. When I was halfway across a group of people came out from the Glenfada Park area and started coming down the road towards the barricade. Most of them were again throwing missiles at myself, the soldier who had been with me and at the vehicle. I thought the crowd was coming too close for comfort so I knelt down in the street and fired three shots over the heads of the crowd in an attempt to disperse them. There would have been no-one in my line of fire. I then reached the cover of the vehicle. I got into the back of the vehicle and could still hear firing but inside the vehicle the sound is very indistinct so I could not tell what kind of firing it was. I was then ordered to act as escort in the Commander’s vehicle which held the bodies and accompanied them to the Altnagelvin Hospital.”

- 85.8 In this statement Corporal P recorded that (contrary to his first RMP statement) he did not cock his rifle until after leaving the vehicle. He also stated that there was only one soldier with him, not two as he had recorded in his first RMP statement.¹

¹ B593

- 85.9 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Corporal P said that when he saw the man with a pistol at the rubble barricade there were about five or six people there, on either side of the man with the pistol, who were throwing stones. His evidence continued:¹

“Q. Can you say how many shots he fired?

A. Not altogether, sir.

Q. What would have been the range?

A. About 100 metres – something like that.

Q. Did you then take action?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do?

LORD WIDGERY: Did you hear the shots? Did you hear the bullets from that range?

A. Yes, they passed overhead. I took aim at him and fired four shots. He stood up before this and pointed the pistol again and fired another couple of shots, not particularly in my direction, but I believe in the direction of Guinness Force.

Mr. GIBBENS: That is behind you?

A. Yes. I fired four shots, one of which hit the barricade and the other appeared to hit the man. He fell back.

Q. You say four shots you heard go over you. Were you in a position to judge what sort of pistol it was he had?

A. Not particularly, no, sir.

Q. I mean, normally 100 metres would be rather a good range for a pistol?

A. Yes, reasonably good.

Q. But these bullets went past you?

A. Yes.

Q. When you fired you say you knelt down. What position did you hold your rifle in?

A. At the shoulder, sir.

Q. Were there any other people in your line of fire at the time?

A. No, sir.

Q. That you were aware of?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. You fired, and you believe you hit him?

A. Yes."

¹ WT13.50

- 85.10 Corporal P continued his account by telling the Widgery Inquiry that a group of people had come out from the Glenfada Park area and run across towards the Rossville Flats, one or two coming in the direction of the rubble barricade: "They picked up something which I think was a pistol, but I could not be certain, and carried it over to the area of Rossville Flats." He said that the body of the man he had shot lay at the barricade and that he did not see it removed.¹

- 85.11 Corporal P then said that about a minute later people came back to the rubble barricade who he thought were attempting to cross it, but the immediate area then quietened down.¹ His evidence continued as follows:²

"Q. Did you see where the vehicle was that you had been with?

A. Yes, a vehicle which was at the car park, nearest to the car park at Rossville Flats, had moved back on to the open ground just by the corner of Block 1.

Q. Did you tell your companion soldier to move back under the cover of that vehicle?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And did you follow him?

A. Yes.

Q. So you were going towards Pilot Row, were you?

A. Not to Pilot Row – towards the corner.

Q. That way?

A. Yes.

Q. Your back then would be to Glenfada Park?

A. Yes.

Q. When you were going in that direction did you see some more people?

A. Yes, as I say, they came out of Glenfada Park. I was looking around as I was running. I saw some people coming out of Glenfada Park and attempt to cross the barricade. They were still throwing stones at this time.

Q. What part of Glenfada Park did they come out of – which end?

A. From this end here.

Q. And down that alleyway near the barricade?

A. That is correct.

Q. And they seemed to be attempting to cross the barricade?

A. One or two of them did, sir.

Q. You mean towards Rossville Flats or up the street?

A. Up the street towards where we were.

Q. Were they doing anything as regards –

A. They were throwing stones and bottles.

Q. At whom?

A. Towards me in general.

Q. At you?

A. At me and at the vehicle.

Q. How close to you did they come?

A. I could not say to be exact. They were fairly close. I would not like to pin it down.

Q. Where were the troops behind you at the alleyway to Kells Walk?

A. I believe a few had moved back, but I could not be certain. I believe one or two had left the alleyway and carried on.

Q. When the crowd approached throwing stones and bottles what did you do?

A. I dropped on one knee and fired a couple of shots over their heads in an attempt to disperse them, which I did. I thought it was endangering a lot of life.

Q. The crowd?

A. Me in particular and also the people with the vehicle.

Q. How many were in the crowd?

A. About 50 or 60.

Q. And then in which direction would you fire?

A. It would be more or less straight up the road, sir.

Q. Did you then reach the cover of your vehicle?

A. I did, yes.

Q. And get into it?

A. Yes.

Q. When you got in could you hear any firing still going on?

A. There was some firing still going on, but I could not make out as to what sort it was.

Q. Were you then ordered to act as escort of the Commander's vehicle, where there were three bodies?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you accompany them to Altnagelvin Hospital?

A. Yes, sir."

² WT13.51-52

85.12 Corporal P told the Widgery Inquiry that the reason he fired over the heads of the crowd was to frighten them off.¹

85.13 Corporal P also told the Widgery Inquiry that when he fired four shots at the man with a pistol behind the rubble barricade he was "Alongside the wall",¹ and he agreed, on being shown his trajectory photograph, that he had fired at this man from the same position as that from which he had previously fired at the man he said was holding a nail bomb. He said that he was firing at an angle, so that his shots did not go down to Free Derry Corner (which he said he could not see from where he was) but to what appears from the transcript to have been the left.²

² WT13.63; WT13.69

85.14 We have already exhibited Corporal P's trajectory photograph when discussing his shots at an alleged nail bomber,¹ but for convenience we reproduce this photograph again below.

85.15 Corporal P said that the pistol man was the only man with a weapon whom he saw at the rubble barricade and that he did not hear any explosions near the barricade. He then said that after he had fired at the pistol man the rioting died down and he went towards the car park of the Rossville Flats, at which stage he saw a hostile crowd of about 50 or 60 people who had come from the Glenfada Park area, a few of whom came across the barricade towards him. He said that he was within range of the stones that these people were throwing and that at this stage he fired three shots over their heads and the crowd retreated. He also said that he was crossing Rossville Street at this stage and that there were one or two soldiers at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats who were nearer to the crowd.¹

85.16 As we have already observed,¹ in his written statement to this Inquiry Corporal P told us (in our view falsely) that he recollected very little about 30th January 1972.² He also said that he had no recollection of firing his weapon or of seeing or hearing others firing weapons.³

³ B623.002

² B623.001

Summary of the accounts of firing by Corporal P

85.17 According to his accounts, Corporal P was close to the wall of the high ramp at the south end of Kells Walk when he fired two shots at, and hit, a nail bomber at or near the alleyway leading into Columbcille Court; he then fired four shots from the same position at a man with a pistol behind the rubble barricade whom he also hit; and finally he fired three shots over the heads of people advancing over the rubble barricade as he was making his way across Rossville Street towards his vehicle (Sergeant O's APC), which by this time had moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

85.18 We have already expressed our conclusion¹ that Corporal P was not telling the truth when he stated that he had first fired at a nail bomber. As we observed,² this makes it difficult to rely on the accounts he gave of his later shots, in the absence of supporting evidence. We return to consider Corporal P's evidence about those shots later in this report³ when we discuss the question which soldier or soldiers shot the casualties at the rubble barricade. At this stage, however, we should record that though it appears that Corporal P fired his first shots, which he claimed (falsely) to have fired at a nail bomber, before other soldiers arrived at and fired from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, it is difficult to relate his remaining shots in time to the other firing in Sector 3. The reasons for this are not only the unreliability of Corporal P's accounts but also the fact that there is no other evidence from soldiers of Corporal P's later firing.

³ Paragraphs 89.21–32

² Paragraph 73.28

85.19 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal F said that he did not see a soldier firing approximately nine shots from a position in front of Anti-Tank Platoon when they were at the south end of Kells Walk. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Private H said that he had no recollection of a soldier from another platoon firing approximately nine shots from a position not far in front of him at the south end of Kells Walk. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Lance Corporal J said that he had no recollection of a soldier from another platoon firing approximately nine shots from a position to the south of the south end of Kells Walk.

³ Day 370/25

² Day 377/25

85.20 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Private U said that he did not see any soldiers firing from the western side of Rossville Street. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Captain 200 said that he had no recollection of seeing a soldier firing any shots from a position in front of the eastern wall of the high ramp at the south end of Kells Walk. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Private David Longstaff said that he did not remember a soldier from another platoon firing approximately nine shots in the area of the low walls at the south end of Kells Walk.

³ Day 374/77-78

² Day 367/101-102

85.21

In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Sergeant K said that when he was at the low walls at the south end of Kells Walk he saw no other soldiers immediately in front of him, and did not see the two soldiers shown in Liam Mailey's third photograph, which we have reproduced above² and which we are satisfied shows Corporal P and Private 017. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Sergeant K confirmed that he did not remember seeing two soldiers on their own in the position shown in that photograph,³ and said that he had no recollection of seeing, while at the low walls at the south end of Kells Walk, a soldier of Support Company firing from a position further south.⁴

⁴ Day 364/151

85.22

As explained earlier in this report,¹ the baton gunner Private 017 disembarked from Sergeant O's APC when it stopped briefly in Rossville Street and, with Corporal P as his escort, crossed to the western side of that street. We have already drawn attention² to the fact that Private 017 mentioned nothing in his first RMP statement about Corporal P engaging a nail bomber.³ He mentioned nothing in that statement, nor in the other accounts that he gave in 1972,⁴ about any of the other shots that Corporal P said that he fired later. In his written evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 told us that he did not see Corporal P fire another shot after firing at the alleged nail bomber. He also told us that after he had seen the gunman at whom he fired his baton gun, an incident which we have considered earlier in this report,⁵ he went back to his APC to collect his rifle and stayed there looking for snipers in the Rossville Flats, but "there were none there".⁶

85.23

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private 017 said that he "vaguely" remembered Anti-Tank Platoon moving forward from his and Corporal P's position and going into Glenfada Park,¹ but he denied that he had seen four youths killed at the rubble barricade.² His attention was drawn to the fact that Corporal P had said that, after he had shot the man with a pistol at the rubble barricade, he and Private 017 had started to make their way across Rossville Street where a crowd attacked them and where Corporal P fired three shots over their heads. Private 017 told us that he neither saw nor heard the shots Corporal P said that he had fired at a pistol man, or the shots Corporal P said that he had fired over the heads of a crowd.³

³ Day 358/166-167

² Day 358/144

85.24 Private 017's evidence lends no support to the accounts given by Corporal P of his shooting at a pistol man or over the heads of the crowd. In view of his false assertion that he saw Corporal P shoot a nail bomber, it is difficult for us to rely on his assertion that he did not see what Corporal P then did. Whether Private 017 returned more or less immediately to his APC is in our view in doubt, given that Corporal P had said in the accounts that he gave in 1972 that he remained with or close to Private 017 until they returned to the APC. It thus remains possible that Private 017 saw at least some of what Corporal P did after his first firing, but has chosen not to tell us what he saw.

Assessment of the accounts of Corporal P

85.25 We have already rejected Corporal P's account of firing two shots at a nail bomber.¹ We also reject his account of firing over the heads of a crowd that was advancing over the rubble barricade as he was making his way to his vehicle (Sergeant O's APC), which had moved in front of the north end of the Rossville Flats. There is no other evidence to suggest that at this stage there was any hostile movement of the crowd as Corporal P asserted. On the contrary, as we describe later in this report,² people had been killed at the rubble barricade, and all others had fled, leaving it deserted save for Alexander Nash, who had gone to his son William, whose body was lying there with those of Michael McDaid and John Young.

² Chapter 86

85.26 As to the man with a pistol at the rubble barricade at whom Corporal P said that he had fired four shots, we have found nothing that to our minds supports Corporal P's accounts, which varied from telling the RMP that he had seen a man get up from behind the barricade and point a pistol "in our general direction"¹ to telling the Widgery Inquiry that the man had fired a number of shots before he fired at the man. We consider, as we have said above,² that Corporal P's account of a man with a pistol getting up from the rubble barricade in full view of a considerable number of soldiers in the area, let alone then proceeding to fire a number of shots, is simply not credible.

² Paragraph 82.10

85.27 Corporal P initially fired two shots, not at a nail bomber but probably over the heads of people to frighten them off, and he fired nine shots in total. Four people were killed at the rubble barricade: Michael Kelly (who was shot by Lance Corporal F), Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash. As will be seen hereafter,¹ we are sure that none of these was armed with a weapon or doing anything that justified him being shot. We are also sure, for the reasons we give later in this report,² that there were no additional unidentified casualties at the rubble barricade. It seems to us highly unlikely, in view of the fact that Corporal P must have known that people had been killed at the rubble barricade, that he would have invented an account of firing at that barricade. Accordingly we conclude that Corporal P did fire at least four shots at the rubble barricade, but lied about his target, knowing that he had no justification for what he did. It is possible that he fired more than four shots in this direction, since we do not believe his account of later shooting over the heads of a crowd that in our view was not there.

¹ Paragraphs 86.55 and 86.364

² Paragraphs 87.228–236

85.28 We make two further observations about Corporal P. The first is that his first two shots were fired at an early stage. No member of Anti-Tank Platoon or Composite Platoon appears to have seen Corporal P firing. It is therefore in our view likely, as we have already commented,¹ that other soldiers mistakenly took this firing for paramilitary firing. The second observation is that there is no evidence to support Corporal P's evidence as to where he was when he fired his subsequent shots, nor indeed as to when he did so. It is possible that some of these at least may have been fired from or near to the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp; and may have been fired at an earlier stage than Corporal P was prepared to admit.

Private U

85.29 Private U was another Mortar Platoon soldier who disembarked from Sergeant O's APC in Rossville Street. We have described earlier in this report¹ how Private U was then involved in the arrest of Charles Canning. Having described this arrest in his first RMP statement timed at 0040 hours on 31st January 1972,² Private U continued:³

"I then returned the roadside corner of the Rossville Flat GR 43271686 where I took up a position there alone. I then came under fire from the waste ground at the far end of Rossville Flats. Between myself and this waste ground there was a barricade across Rossville Street. It was about three feet high and formed of rubble. The rioters were gathered around and behind this barricade but they were beginning to thin out by this time.

I heard about thirty gunshots while I was in this position but could not tell where they were coming from.

As the rioters thinned out I saw a man on the waste ground behind the barricade, he was about 150 metres from my position. He was standing in the middle of about five other men at GR 43321678⁴ and he was wearing a light coloured anorak.

In his right hand he had a pistol and I saw him fire two shots at other members of my unit who were on the opposite side of the road from me.

From the standing aiming position I fired one aimed shot at this man. I saw that the shot struck him in the stomach and he jerked and fell. I also saw a man behind the one I fired at clutch his head with his hands and also fall to the ground.

When these two men fell to the ground the other rioters nearly⁵ dropped to the ground also.

I reported my hit to my Coy CSM who was nearby and we were going to go forward to recover the body and weapon.

As we were about to do so a priest came out into the road with about ten other people. The priest was waving a white cloth.

We remained in our position. After about five minutes the Priest and the men with him moved off and we could see that the body had been removed.

We stayed in our positions until I was recalled to the arrest vehicle to identify the rioter I had arrested earlier."

² B748-749

³ B749-750

⁴ This appears to be a mistake for GR43221678, which is the position shown on the RMP map.

⁵ The word "nearly" was a typographical error for "nearby", as can be seen from the manuscript version of the statement (B758).

¹ B754

85.31 In his second RMP statement, dated 4th February 1972,¹ Private U gave an account of seeing a gunman at the door of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats firing two shots. We return to this account later in this report.²

¹ B759

² Paragraph 86.563

85.32 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Private U gave this account of what he saw and did after dealing with the man he had arrested:¹

"I then went back up Rossville Street towards the flats and as I did so I could see soldiers at the entrance to the forecourt firing at a gunman I could see on the far corner of the forecourt. At this point I cocked my rifle. I asked one of the soldiers in an armoured vehicle on the open ground to give me cover and I ran across in the direction of the flats. As I was running I saw four or five automatic shots landing near the Company Commander's vehicle which was ahead of me in the direction of the flats. I got to the Command vehicle at the north end of Rossville Flats and intended to return to my own vehicle which was parked on the opposite side of the entrance to the forecourt but I noticed soldiers had taken up covering positions in that area and as there was not enough cover in the area where I was I decided not to proceed in the direction of my vehicle. I took over a position at the other end of the north end of Rossville Flats which is marked with a cross on the photograph which I have signed.

I was in this position about two minutes when I saw five or six men walking across from Glenfada Park towards Rossville Flats behind the barricade. I saw one of these men had a pistol. He had a light blue jacket on. The other men moved away from him as though they were surprised he had a pistol. He fired two shots in quick succession in the direction of the opposite side of Rossville Street from where I was standing where there were soldiers. Then I was in a standing aiming position, I took off my safety catch and aimed for the centre of his body. I fired one round. He fell backwards and the man behind him clutched his head. All the men went to the ground. I reported this to company sergeant major. About a minute later a group of people including a priest came out from behind the flats. The priest was waving a white flag and they picked the body up and took it to the back of the flats. I didn't see what happened to the man who had clutched his head going down."

85.33 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private U said that when he returned from handing over the man he had arrested he had been going to go to Sergeant O's APC but in fact went to the corner of the Rossville Flats:¹

"Q. From there where were you intending to make your way?

A. At this point most of the firing had died down, hardly anything happening. I saw more of my own platoon in firing positions so the area inside of the flats was covered, but the corner, I believe the north corner of Rossville flats was not covered, or it was covered by one man and I did not think it was enough, so I went and joined him.

Q. When you were in that position did you see some people moving?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were they moving?

A. There were people moving all round this area, moving along here, a few people moving in towards Glenfada Park.

Q. Did you see a particular group of people?

A. At this point I see a group of about five or six men moving out from the area of Glenfada Park.

Q. Which way were they moving towards?

A. Moving towards the flats.

Q. Were they on the Free Derry Corner side of the barricade or your side of the barricade?

A. On this side of the barricade.

Q. This is on the far side, the Free Derry Corner side. Did you notice any of that group of men in particular?

A. Yes, one man had a pistol which he raised and fired two quick shots in the area opposite Rossville flats."

85.34 Private U then gave the Widgery Inquiry a similar description to that in his written statement of firing at the man who had a pistol, seeing him fall backwards, seeing a man behind him clutch his head (Private U said that he did not see what happened to this man) and seeing the group of people all going down to the ground. He said that he reported this incident immediately to the Company Sergeant Major who “was stood right next to me”.¹

85.35 We should record at this point that in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Warrant Officer Class II Lewis (the Company Sergeant Major of Support Company) told us that so far as he knew or recalled, Private U did not report a shot to him.

85.36 Private U told the Widgery Inquiry that from his position he could see two bodies at the rubble barricade. He then gave an account of seeing an old man with one of the bodies and of a gunman firing from the door of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats,¹ to which we return later in this report.²

² Paragraph 86.565

85.37 During his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Private U was shown his trajectory photograph.

85.38 Private U agreed that the man he shot was on the junction behind the flats and that there were people at or near the rubble barricade at the time, who would have been in danger as they were between the man and the soldiers at whom, according to Private U, the man was firing.¹

85.39 Private U told the Widgery Inquiry that he had seen soldiers going into Glenfada Park and had then heard high velocity firing from that area.¹

85.40 There is no entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements¹ that corresponds with the shot that Private U said that he fired at a man who had a pistol. Private U told us that he had no recollection of talking to Major Loden.² It appears therefore that Private U did not report his shot to Major Loden, but we do not know why this was so.

² Day 369/183

85.41 Private U gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written evidence to this Inquiry he gave a broadly similar account of his firing to the accounts that he had given in 1972.¹

85.42 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Private U told us that when he was at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats he recalled being on his own and hearing gunfire coming "from – towards Glenfada Park and others over to my left, which would be the courtyard area".¹ He said that when he heard the high velocity firing from Glenfada Park that he had described to the Widgery Inquiry he was at the corner of the Rossville Flats.² He also told us that when he was there he saw five or six soldiers crouched in firing positions behind a wall on the other side of Rossville Street directly across from him. The position of these soldiers he marked on the following photograph with a red arrow as being in the area of the ramp at the northern end of Glenfada Park North.³ He used a blue arrow to show the approximate direction, according to Private U's evidence, in which the gunman at whom he fired was facing.⁴

² Day 369/61-63

³ Day 369/64-67; B786.0039

⁴ Day 369/85

- 85.43 Private U told us that he could not say whether these soldiers moved before he fired his shot.¹ He also told us that he had no recollection of seeing from his position people carrying Michael Kelly from the rubble barricade after he had been shot, or of seeing three men fall at the rubble barricade, or of seeing civilians running towards the door of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, or of seeing a man stumble or fall near that door.² These are all matters to which we return later in this report.³ Private U also said that he had no recollection of Army vehicles moving close to his position and parking at the time he was at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.⁴

³ Paragraphs 86.59 and 86.85–151

² Day 369/72-74

⁴ Day 369/91

85.44 In the course of Private U's oral evidence to this Inquiry, he gave the following answers when he was being questioned about his first RMP statement:¹

"MR HARVEY: Again this statement is graphically painting a picture at the time that you shot of the barricade being manned by rioters; is that not right?

A. That is what I said there.

Q. Yes. There is not one mention which later comes into your SA statement² and your Widgery evidence about persons walking across from Glenfada Park towards the direction of Rossville Flats; is that not right, not one mention? Do you want to go back? Let us go back, could we go to the previous page: 'As the rioters thinned out I saw a man on the wasteground behind the barricade, he was about 150 metres from my position. He was standing in the middle', standing, not walking, but 'standing in the middle of about five other men and he was wearing a light-coloured anorak. In his hand he had a pistol ...'

That is a far different picture from the picture you sought to paint in your Treasury Solicitor's statement³ and in your evidence before Widgery: you are placing this man behind the barricade at some distance, but in the midst of rioters who are thinning out; he is a member of them; they open up; he fires and all the other rioters nearby fall to the ground; is that not right?

A. Once again, I do not understand what you are getting at.

Q. Well, this picture that you are painting, it is a very simple picture in this statement, it is not really all that complicated: you get out of your vehicle, you say you make an arrest; you then go to the north-west corner of Block 1. There is still a riot going on. There are many people behind the barricade. They are thinning out. As they thin out, there is one man who is noticeably standing in the middle of five of those rioters. He opens fire with a pistol and other people around him fall to the ground nearby.

There is no mention of people walking out from Glenfada Park. There is no mention of people walking out from Glenfada Park and moving across towards Rossville Flats; is there?

A. I cannot explain that.

Q. Surely when you were making your statement to the Royal Military Police that particular evening these events would have been fresh in your mind as to when it was and what were the circumstances in which you had killed another person; were they not?

A. I suppose so.

Q. And this picture that you paint in words is consistent with other members of your unit, that is both Mortar Platoon, Machine Gun Platoon firing, either simultaneously or around the same time as you are and not one person being killed but a number of persons being killed at this barricade; is that not right?

A. No, it is not.”

² This refers to his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.

³ This is also a reference to his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.

85.45 It was suggested to Private U that while he was at the end of Block 1 he could not have failed to see other troops shoot and kill a number of those who were hit behind the rubble barricade. Private U said: “I did not see that.”¹

85.46 Private U’s attention was drawn to some of the evidence, to which we refer below,¹ given by Bombardier 015, who was stationed in the shirt factory on the corner of Little James Street and Sackville Street, which he marked with an “X” on the following photograph when he made his written statement to this Inquiry.²

85.47 As can be seen, from this position Bombardier 015 had a view down Rossville Street. Private U gave the following evidence:¹

“Q. Sir Allan Green has already taken you to some portions of what 015 said, can I take you to his statement at B1414.² If we could go to the final paragraph on this page. This is the soldier I have already pointed out to you on photographs 415, 417, 427, you can see the Peter England factory. He is looking straight down Rossville Street:

‘Suddenly all the troops in the area seemed to dive for cover and take up fire positions. One soldier I noticed was observing two men behind a rubble barricade that stretched from Block No 1 Rossville Flats across Rossville St to Glenfada Park. The soldier was positioned on the corner of Block No 1 Rossville Flats. The men were continually throwing missiles in his direction.’

Your claiming before the Widgery Inquiry is in fact that people were throwing stones and bottles at you and that you were hit several times by stones and twice by two bottles; that is right, is it not?

A. That is correct, but not at that time.

Q. You were positioned – and the soldier later describes where it is – it is in precisely the north-west corner, you were positioned there and you were positioned there on your own; is that not right?

A. As far as I remember.

Q. 'The two men suddenly jumped up and started running towards an open door halfway down Block No 1. The rear man stopped suddenly and turned to look at the soldier, as the soldier brought his SLR into the aim position. The man turned and started running faster towards the open door. I then saw the soldier fire one round in the direction of the fleeing man. The man dropped to the ground. He fell in the doorway, I then saw hands come from the doorway and dragged the body in.'

When he gave evidence on 10th July, he accepted that with the perspective that he had, the person may not have fallen into the doorway, but in fact have been brought into the rear of Block 1 at the south-west corner. You are firing in the same direction as the person described by 015; is that not right? You are firing along the eastern pavement of Rossville Street; is that not right?

A. That is his description.

Q. But that is the position you were firing in; that is the trajectory of your shot?

A. I was at that corner.

Q. And you were at that corner?

A. That day, yes.

Q. And you were the first soldier at that corner that day, so far as you recollect?

A. I, I cannot say I was the first soldier there; I have a recollection of being the only soldier there.

Q. If you were the first soldier and the only soldier there for some time, you are firing in this direction, you also, like the soldier described by 015, fired only one shot; that is correct, is it not?

A. I fired only one shot.

Q. The person that you hit, by whatever mechanism, appeared to have been brought into the safety of the rear of the flats; that is also right, is it not?

A. I did not see that."

² B1414

The evidence of Bombardier 015

85.48 In his first RMP statement,¹ timed at 1150 hours on 3rd February 1972, Bombardier 015, a member of 22 Lt AD Regt, recorded that he was at one of the upper windows of the Peter England shirt factory in Little James Street. From that position he saw a soldier at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The soldier was observing two men behind the rubble barricade who were continually throwing missiles in his direction. The two men suddenly jumped up and started running towards an open door “halfway down” Block 1. The rear man stopped suddenly and turned to look at the soldier, as the soldier brought his rifle into the aiming position. Then the man turned again and started running faster towards the door. Bombardier 015 saw the soldier fire one round in the direction of the fleeing man, who fell to the ground in the doorway. Hands emerged from the doorway and dragged the body inside. Bombardier 015 stated that while he was on duty on that day his vision was aided by a pair of binoculars, but he did not say in this statement whether he was using the binoculars when he observed this incident.

85.49 In his second RMP statement,¹ taken by Colonel Overbury and dated 16th February 1972, Bombardier 015 recorded that the open door was at the south end of Block 1, not in the centre as he had said in his first RMP statement. He also said that when the man stopped and turned to face the soldier at the corner of Block 1, the man raised his right arm to shoulder height, pointing towards the soldier. Bombardier 015 had not been able to see whether the man had anything in his hand. According to this account Bombardier 015 pointed the man out to Gunner 023, who was at another window in the same room.

¹ B1422

85.50 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, dated 9th March 1972,¹ Bombardier 015 recorded that during the relevant period of observation he was using his binoculars from time to time. The soldier was at the near corner of Block 1. When the two men were behind the rubble barricade, Bombardier 015 saw the movement of their arms, and saw “pieces of rock” coming over and landing on the corner where the soldier was positioned. Bombardier 015 “did not see any flashes or hear any bangs where they landed”. There was a lot of other noise. When the rear man stopped running towards the door and turned to look at the soldier, Bombardier 015 could see that he was not holding any weapon as large as a rifle. He was too distant for Bombardier 015 to be able, even with the aid of binoculars, to see whether he was holding anything as small as a pistol. Bombardier 015 saw the soldier fire after the man had turned again and was running away towards the door at a faster pace than before.

¹ B1425

85.51 In manuscript on this statement, where Bombardier 015 had described the man turning to look at the soldier, are the words “His right arm came up”. We return to this manuscript addition below.¹

85.52 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Bombardier 015 said that the two men were throwing objects from behind the rubble barricade on the side closer to Block 1. The distance was too great for him to see what sort of objects they were throwing. He saw some of the objects landing near the soldier at the corner of Block 1. Bombardier 015 said that the two men suddenly got up and and started running away towards the door at the south end of the Rossville Flats. The rear man then stopped and turned round and faced the soldier. He said that he was unable to see whether the rear man had anything in his hand when he stopped and turned. Asked to confirm that the soldier at the corner brought his weapon to the aim, Bombardier 015 said “And fired, sir”. Bombardier 015 was then asked what happened, and he replied: “The man who was running away, sir, who had stopped, he fell in the door, in front of the door, and then he was dragged into the door, sir.” Bombardier 015 said that he was sure that the man had not been crawling at any time. He neither saw nor heard any of the objects thrown by the two men from behind the barricade exploding. Questioned by Lord Widgery, at the end of his oral evidence Bombardier 015 gave the following evidence:²

“LORD WIDGERY: Was this man running away at the moment when he was shot?

A. No.

Q. As I understand it, he paused and you saw his arm move?

A. Yes.

Q. But at what time did the soldier fire at him?

A. I could not say, I did not see; all I saw was the puff of smoke and he fell away towards the door.

MR. GIBBENS: I think my Lord was asking whether you saw the sign of the shot before or after he raised his arm.

A. It was about the same time.”

² WT16.40

85.53 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Bombardier 015 told us that the two men were lying or crouching behind the rubble barricade. According to this account, they threw “probably three, four or five” objects in the direction of the soldier at the north-western corner of Block 1, using an overarm action that suggested that they were throwing “a grenade or nail bombs or something similar”. Bombardier 015 did not see any of the objects explode. The two men suddenly rose from behind the barricade and ran towards the doorway. The rear man stopped and turned anti-clockwise, so that his left side was facing the soldier. As he did so, he lifted his right arm, so that it was bent across his chest at shoulder height, with his hand pointing towards the soldier. The man was carrying nothing as large as a rifle or a stick. Bombardier 015 could not see clearly, and could not say whether the man had anything in his hand, but said that his actions were those of someone firing a pistol in a hurry. Bombardier 015 saw a puff of smoke from the rifle of the soldier at the corner. The man “crumpled down” and was dragged by one or more people into the entrance to Block 1. This all happened within “seconds or micro-seconds” of the time when the man turned towards the soldier. Bombardier 015 thought that the man would have been hit “between his front and right side, ie more to the front than to the rear”. Bombardier 015 could not believe that the soldier would have shot the man if he had nothing in his hands, and assumed that the man must have had a pistol. Bombardier 015 said that the passage in his first RMP statement that suggested that the man had been running away when he was shot may have been “a little confused”.² He thought that the passage to the same effect in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry was “misleading the way that it is written”. The man was shot as he turned towards the soldier with his arm up. Bombardier 015 stated that although his current recollection was that he observed this incident without using his binoculars, the reference in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry to his inability to see, even with binoculars, whether the man had anything in his hand showed that he must have been using binoculars.

85.54 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Bombardier 015 said that he was too far away to see whether any of the objects thrown by the two men from behind the barricade were fizzing. He “could not say correctly” that they were throwing anything other than pieces of rock.

When the rear man stopped running and turned to face the soldier, Bombardier 015 had not, so far as he could remember, seen smoke or a muzzle flash. He did not hear any pistol shots. He did not know whether the man was armed, although he had assumed that he was because he could not believe that the soldier would have fired without reason. He did not recall seeing anyone else fall at the same time as the man was shot. Bombardier 015 said that he had his binoculars with him during this incident, but was not using them all the time. He told us that the man was shot “as he was stopped or just about to run away again” and that he ran on towards the doorway after the shot was fired.² He could not say why he had said in his first RMP statement and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that the man had been shot while running away from the soldier, but suggested that he might have been tired and confused when he made those statements. He said that he considered that the man “was fleeing because he jumped up from the barricade and went, he was fleeing from the moment he got up”. Bombardier 015 denied that he had resiled from his earliest accounts in order to protect the soldier. His attention was drawn to the similarity between the relevant passages in his first RMP statement and in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry.³ He said that he did not know whether the latter passage had been copied from the former. Bombardier 015 said that the man took a step or two after being shot before he fell and was pulled into Block 1.⁴ It was then put to Bombardier 015 that he had been wrong when he said that the man had been running away when he was shot. He said that he did not think that he had been wrong. Bombardier 015 accepted that the man might have been pulled around the south-western corner of Block 1 instead of into the doorway.⁵ Bombardier 015 said that he had told the truth in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, in which he had said that the man was not running away when he was shot.⁶

⁶ Day 360/208-210

85.55 There are three common threads that run through the accounts that Bombardier 015 gave in 1972 and the evidence that he gave to this Inquiry. The first of these was that the man he said he saw was running from the rubble barricade away from the soldiers. The second is that the man stopped and turned towards a soldier at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. The third is that that soldier shot at, and hit, the man.

85.56 There is no mention in Bombardier 015’s first RMP statement or in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry of the man raising his right arm. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that the man’s right arm came up as he turned, but said nothing about the man pointing his arm at the soldier.

- 85.57 In his RMP statement and in his statement for the Widgery Inquiry, Bombardier 015 recorded that the man was running away when the soldier shot him. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry he said that the man was not running away at the moment he was shot.
- 85.58 It was submitted that Bombardier 015 had tailored his accounts, particularly his second RMP statement in which he had recorded that the man had raised his right arm and pointed it towards the soldier, in order to provide a justification for the soldier firing.¹ In response to this, the legal representatives of Bombardier 015 submitted that the reason there was no mention of the man raising and pointing his arm at the soldier in the statement Bombardier 015 made for the Widgery Inquiry was either because this was omitted in error, or because the statement was made up without the statement taker actually interviewing Bombardier 015.² These representatives further submitted that there was nothing to support a finding of deliberate deception on the part of Bombardier 015.³
- ¹ FS1.1696-1699 ³ FR9.5-6
² FS9.121
- 85.59 The statement made for the Widgery Inquiry was taken by John Heritage, one of the lawyers acting for the Widgery Inquiry. Those acting for John Heritage were shown the submissions made on behalf of Bombardier 015 and replied by letter dated 20th April 2004,¹ setting out John Heritage's response to the suggestions that he had not interviewed Bombardier 015 or had in error omitted including what Bombardier 015 had told Colonel Overbury about the man raising his right arm.
- ¹ FR18.1-4
- 85.60 John Heritage expressed the view that he had not simply amalgamated the two RMP statements without interviewing Bombardier 015. He pointed to the fact that the statement that he took contained material that was not in either of the two previous statements. He pointed out that it was his practice to take the witness through his previous statements. He also pointed out that at the end of the statement he recorded that he had taken it in the presence of Charles MacMahon, who was acting on behalf of the Army.
- 85.61 As to the reason why there was no mention in the statement he took from Bombardier 015 of the man raising his right arm, John Heritage suggested that there were three possible explanations, namely that he did not have the second RMP statement before him; that he overlooked the evidence about the raised arm in that statement; or that he had concluded that since Bombardier 015 had clearly stated that the man was running away when he was shot, the evidence relating to the raised arm was not material.¹

85.62 John Heritage was unable to state with certainty which one of these explanations was correct, but expressed the view that it was likely that he did have the second RMP statement before him, since that statement had been provided for the Widgery Inquiry and contained the information that the door to the flats was at the far end, which appears in the statement that he took; that it was also unlikely that the evidence about the right arm was omitted through inadvertence, since it was his practice to refer to any material evidence a witness had already given, to which he already adhered, and since, if Bombardier 015's recollection seemed clear on the point, and since the evidence was favourable to the Army, Charles MacMahon "could and (as an experienced lawyer) would have intervened to request its inclusion".¹

85.63 John Heritage considered the possibility that the evidence about the raised arm was intentionally omitted as the result of a discussion with Bombardier 015, but stated that if this had happened he would normally have added an explanation for the change of evidence. There is no such explanation and John Heritage could not now offer any reason for this. However, he expressed the view that the most likely explanation was that the matter had been discussed with Bombardier 015. He also told us that Bombardier 015 "must in any event have left him in no doubt that he saw the man running away when he was shot".¹

85.64 As to the manuscript addition of the words "His right arm came up" on the statement, John Heritage told us that this was not in his handwriting and that he did not make it. He expressed the view that it was likely that this was done by one of the counsel appearing at the Widgery Inquiry, and drew our attention to the fact that other statements that he took also bear additions in similar handwriting.

85.65 We observe elsewhere in this report¹ that we considered John Heritage to be a careful, honest witness on whose evidence we could place reliance. In those circumstances we are of the view that he was correct in his view that the omission of any mention of the man raising his right arm was likely to have been the result of a discussion with Bombardier 015.

85.66 Our assessment of Bombardier 015's evidence as a whole is that we are sure that he saw a man running away from the rubble barricade who stopped and turned to look at the soldier who was at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats; and that as the man turned to continue running away, the soldier shot him. We are doubtful whether the man raised his arm, and we do not accept that he pointed it towards the soldier, something that (apart from his second RMP statement) Bombardier 015 did not mention in his other 1972 statements or when he gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

85.67 Bombardier 015 agreed with Counsel to this Inquiry that he believed that a soldier in the British Army would not fire without a reason, which had led to him telling us that he assumed that the man must have had a pistol.¹ It is possible that in this belief he convinced himself that the man must have pointed at the soldier. We are left in doubt whether this was the explanation for what he told Colonel Overbury, or whether he knowingly invented this detail, from which he later resiled when questioned by John Heritage and when he gave his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.

The evidence of Gunner 023

85.68 As we have noted above,¹ in his second RMP statement Bombardier 015 recorded that he had pointed out the man he had seen running away to Gunner 023 "who was at another window in the same room".²

² B1422

85.69 Gunner 023 gave an RMP statement and also a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry. In his RMP statement,¹ he recorded that he said that he saw a man appear from "behind a wall, on the waste ground opposite FAHAN ST". His RMP map² put the position of this man as just to the west of the south end of the northern block of Joseph Place. The man seemed to take aim with a rifle at APCs in Rossville Street. Gunner 023 heard some low velocity shots and the man disappeared. After a couple of minutes, the man appeared again and aimed his weapon in the direction of the APCs. Gunner 023 took aim at the man with his SLR. He then heard a low velocity shot that seemed to come from the man's position, immediately followed by a high velocity shot from the area of the APCs. The man behind the wall seemed to jump in the air and fall back. A crowd gathered around him and carried him off. In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ Gunner 023 gave a similar account.

¹ B1519

85.70 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Gunner 023 said that he no longer remembered the incident. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² he said that he did not recall Bombardier 015 drawing his attention to a man who had been running towards a doorway south of the rubble barricade and was then shot.

² Day 360/40

85.71 We have found no other evidence to support Gunner 023's account of seeing a man with a rifle near Joseph Place, or of this man apparently being shot and then being carried away by a crowd. No soldier gave evidence of firing at or hitting a man in this position. On the basis of Gunner 023's account, a soldier would have been justified in firing at a man behaving as Gunner 023 described. Gunner 023's account was so different from that of Bombardier 015 that in our view it cannot be a description of the incident described by the latter. In these circumstances we take the view that Gunner 023 must have been mistaken in what he said he saw.

Summary and consideration of the accounts of firing by Private U

85.72 Private U gave evidence that when at the north-western corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, he fired at and hit a man armed with a pistol who fired two shots towards soldiers on the opposite side of Rossville Street; and who, according to his first RMP statement, was standing with about five other men on waste ground behind the rubble barricade; or, according to the evidence he gave to the Widgery Inquiry, was walking with a group of men across from Glenfada Park towards the Rossville Flats.

85.73 We have no reason to doubt that Private U fired from the position that he indicated. We should note that Private 006 told us that during the time when he was at the north-western corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, or behind a vehicle near that corner, he did not see Private U fire or see any soldier fire from that corner.¹ If Private U had fired from the corner during that time, Private 006 said that he would have been bound to see him do so. However, in view of the evidence of Bombardier 015, we are sure that a soldier did fire from that position.

85.74 In our view that soldier was Private U. There is no evidence that suggests to us that another soldier fired his rifle into Sector 3 from the north-western corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

85.75 We should note at this point that Charles Canning, who, as we have described earlier in this report,¹ was arrested by Private U and Private 112, recorded in his NICRA statement² that before he was arrested one of the two soldiers who arrested him had been firing shots with his SLR towards the people at the rubble barricade. There is no other evidence that suggests to us that Private U fired his rifle at this early stage or that he fired more than one shot. In his written statement to this Inquiry,³ Charles Canning said that he saw a number of paratroopers firing towards the rubble barricade from about the point marked “G” on the plan attached to his statement⁴ (near the entrance to the alleyway between Glenfada Park North and Columbcille Court). He said that of the two soldiers who arrested him, the soldier with the SLR had come from that area, but he did not say that he had seen him firing his rifle. In our view Charles Canning probably witnessed Corporal P firing his first two shots and confused this soldier with those who had arrested him.

³ AC25.2

² AC25.5

⁴ AC25.6

85.76 Apart from Private U's account, there is no evidence from any source that suggests to us that anyone was shot in the position that he gave for the man at whom he fired. As with Corporal P, we find it beyond belief that a man, in full view of a number of soldiers in the area and away from any cover, should produce a pistol and fire it at soldiers. We reject as an invention Private U's account of the man with a pistol. We should add that having listened to Private U we formed the view that he had seen and remembered much more of what occurred on and near the rubble barricade than he was prepared to admit to us.

85.77 Later in this report¹ we conclude, for the reasons that we give, that Private U shot Hugh Gilmour; and we also consider the state of mind of Private U when he fired.

The evidence of Captain 028

85.78 The representatives of the majority of represented soldiers submitted that the description Captain 028 gave in 1972 of a man with a pistol who appeared to the south of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats had “particular similarities” to the account of Private U.¹

85.79 Captain 028 was the Unit Press Officer of 22 Lt AD Regt.¹ He gave an RMP statement dated 3rd February 1972,² and written and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.³ In these accounts he described being in Rossville Street when the vehicles of Support Company came in, and hearing a shot fired from a .303in rifle or an M1 carbine from the direction of Free Derry Corner, which struck the front of the leading vehicle just before it came to a stop in front of the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats; seeing a man with a machine gun some 20 yards behind the rubble barricade fire about 15 rounds in one burst, which hit the ground about 20 feet in front of soldiers who were advancing towards the barricade; hearing 7.62mm fire returned and seeing the man with the machine gun fall; seeing a priest at the rubble barricade apparently directing the other people there; seeing the bodies of four people at the rubble barricade, of whom he told the Widgery Inquiry that he could not say categorically whether they were hit by Army fire or by the man with the machine gun behind them; and later seeing a man appear from the south end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats with a pistol, who fell to the ground when a shot was fired, together with another civilian who had run or walked towards him.

² B1566

¹ B1582.3; B1582.6-8

85.81 According to his own accounts, Captain 028 had accompanied the paratroopers who had gone through Barrier 14 in William Street. As we have explained earlier in this report,¹ this occurred after the vehicles from Support Company had gone into the Bogside. On this basis Captain 028 could not have been in Rossville Street in time to see the Support Company vehicles arrive, and thus to witness a bullet hitting the leading vehicle before it had come to a stop. As we have explained earlier in this report,² no Army vehicle moved to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats until much of the shooting was over. His accounts of this shot and of a man firing a burst of about 15 rounds with a machine gun from some 20 yards behind the rubble barricade are unsupported by any other persuasive evidence. Some of his other accounts, such as that of seeing a priest (whom he identified in his RMP statement,³ by reference to a photograph,⁴ as Fr Anthony Mulvey) directing people at the rubble barricade as the man was firing the machine gun, are in our view so far-fetched that they can be rejected out of hand. We consider the evidence given by Fr Mulvey elsewhere in this report.⁵

² Paragraphs 43.18 and Chapter 59

⁵ Paragraphs 122.138–141 and 124.24–27

³ B1567

85.82 In these circumstances we take the view that it would be unwise to rely at all upon the accounts of Captain 028; and we accordingly reject the submission that his evidence supports the accounts given by Private U.

Lance Corporal J

85.83 In his first RMP statement, having described shooting from a position that appears (from his RMP map and later accounts) to have been near the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp at a man he said had a nail bomb at the rubble barricade (an incident that we have considered earlier in this report¹), Lance Corporal J continued:²

“I then, accompanied by other members of my unit, advanced further along Rossville Street towards the barricade. Several nail bombs were thrown at us. I saw at the junction of a block of flats a person, he was holding a nail bomb in his hand. I could see smoke coming from the bomb. I fired one aimed 7.62 round at this man. The round struck the wall above him and he then dropped down and disappeared behind the block of flats. I do not think I hit him.

My location was about 50–60 metres from the man’s location. I could not describe him as I was being fired on from the flats by an automatic weapon. The advance was continued and the crowds from the barricade were dispersed.

I then received orders to go to Glenfada Park and assist in escort duties for a number of civilians that had been arrested for rioting. These were escorted by us to our vehicle location where they were taken in armoured vehicles, I do not know where.

We were ordered to withdraw. I did not fire any more rounds.”

¹ Paragraphs 81.36–57 and 83.9–10

² B266

85.84 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Lance Corporal J gave this account of his second shot:

“After a few minutes we then moved further down towards the entrance to an alleyway which leads to Glenfada Park. From behind the barricade several nail bombs were thrown in our direction. They fell short and I saw about two explode. Then I saw, at the corner of Rossville Flats further down Rossville Street, a man who had his head and left arm round the corner and he held in his left hand an object which I saw to be fizzing. I fired one quick aimed shot at him. As soon as I saw him he must have seen me and as I fired he ducked back round the corner out of my vision and I did not see the object in his hand explode. I do not think that I hit him.”

¹ B273

85.85 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, after he had described his first shot, which he said that he fired from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp, Lance Corporal J gave an account of moving forward from the low walls when “most of the trouble had stopped for that time”. He said that most of the people had moved back, to the far corner of the Rossville Flats and the corner of Glenfada Park, but some of them were still throwing missiles “and several nail bombs were then thrown”, of which two went off.¹

85.86 He then gave the following answers:¹

“Q. Did you see some particular person who attracted your attention?

A. Just as I got to the alleyway leading to Glenfada Park I looked across to the far side of Rossville Flats and a person came into view there with a fizzing object in his left hand.

Q. Just point out with the pointer where he was.

A. Just here.

LORD WIDGERY: I cannot see from here. Is it at the very end of the block that you are pointing?

A. The very end, sir.

Q. What level? Ground floor?

A. No, he was on the street outside.

Mr. UNDERHILL: He came to the corner of the building?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Did he have anything in his hand?

A. Yes, he had a cylindrical object and it was fizzing.

Q. Can you remember which hand it was in?

A. In the left hand.

Q. Was he close to the corner of the building?

A. Yes sir, he was hiding behind it and as I got to the wall he came out into view sufficient to throw the object.

Q. What did you do?

A. Well, I got to the alleyway, to the corner there, took one aimed shot at him –

Q. Did you have much time for aiming?

A. No sir.

Q. Did it hit him, as far as you could tell?

A. I don't think so, sir. I think as soon as I saw him he must have seen me.

Q. What did he do? Did he remain in the same position?

A. As I fired he kind of went back behind the corner and the round must have missed him.

Q. Did you see what happened to the object he had in his hand?

A. It wasn't thrown. He seemed to go back behind the corner.

Q. Did it go off, so far as you know?

A. I didn't hear any explosion, sir.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. We then moved up into Glenfada Park ...”

85.87 We have reproduced Lance Corporal J's trajectory photograph¹ earlier,² but it is convenient to do so again here. The upper trajectory line marked on this photograph indicates that Lance Corporal J fired at the man he said was a nail bomber at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats from a position in Rossville Street beside the ramp at the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North.

¹ B289

² Paragraph 81.47

85.88 We have observed above¹ that there is no entry in Major Loden's List of Engagements that corresponds with either of the shots that Lance Corporal J stated that he had fired in Rossville Street. It appears therefore that he did not report this firing to Major Loden, but we do not know why this was so.

85.89 Lance Corporal J gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written evidence¹ he told us that his recollection was poor, but he described firing a second shot, at a man who was holding a smoking object, after he had moved further south down Rossville Street from the position from which he had fired his first shot, and he said that he was sure that he had not hit this person, but the wall above him.

85.90 As we have already observed,¹ we did not believe Lance Corporal J when he professed, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, that he had virtually no recollection of the events of the day.

Summary of the accounts of firing by Lance Corporal J

85.91 According to his accounts, Lance Corporal J fired first from the low walls of the Kells Walk ramp at a nail bomber at the rubble barricade, but did not think that he had hit him. He then moved south along Rossville Street, and from the wall of the Glenfada Park North ramp fired another shot at a man at the southern corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats who was holding a cylindrical fizzing or smoking object, but again did not think that he had hit him.

85.92 No other soldier gave specific evidence about Lance Corporal J firing from near the ramp at the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North.

85.93 Earlier in this report¹ we gave our reasons for rejecting the accounts of Lance Corporal J of the throwing of nail bombs and for our conclusion that, in view of the unreliability of his evidence, we could not accept Lance Corporal J's account of shooting at a nail bomber at the rubble barricade in the absence of supporting evidence, of which in our view there was none. We take the same view of the claim by Lance Corporal J that he saw and fired at a nail bomber who was at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Again there is no evidence from any source to support this claim. In our view there was no such nail bomber.

85.94 Whether Lance Corporal J shot anyone at the rubble barricade and whether he fired in the genuine but mistaken belief that he had seen a nail bomber at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats are matters that we consider later in this report.¹

86.1 We now turn to consider the circumstances in which the known casualties in Sector 3 were shot. As we have previously stated,¹ there is no doubt that Michael Kelly, Hugh Gilmour, John Young, Michael McDaid, William Nash and Kevin McElhinney were killed by Army gunfire in this sector. Alexander Nash, the father of William Nash, was wounded by gunfire, though whether this was Army or civilian gunfire was a matter of dispute. Alexander Nash was wounded after he had gone out to the rubble barricade to his son William Nash, who was lying there after being shot.

86.2 Later in this report¹ we consider whether it is possible to determine who shot these casualties.

Michael Kelly

Biographical details

86.3 Michael Kelly was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He lived in Dunmore Gardens, Creggan, with his parents and some of his siblings. He was employed as an apprentice sewing machine mechanic in the factory of Deyong Golding Ltd, on the Maydown Industrial Estate. He kept racing pigeons as a hobby.¹

Prior movements

86.4 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Michael Kelly's brother-in-law George Downey said that he went to Michael Kelly's parents' house on the morning of Bloody Sunday. George Downey arrived too late to accompany Michael Kelly's parents to Mass at midday, but found Michael Kelly still in bed. Michael Kelly joined the rest of the family for lunch after his parents returned from Mass. At about 2.00pm, George Downey set off for the start of the march at Bishop's Field in the company of Michael Kelly, his other brothers-in-law John Kelly and George Cooley, and Michael Kelly's friends Zac Rooney, John Daly and Jim Brennan. George Downey said³ that he became separated from Michael Kelly at some point during the march.

³ AD134.19

² Day 123/5

86.5 William Martin Hegarty was another brother-in-law of Michael Kelly. He said in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he too left for the march from Michael Kelly's parents' house. William Martin Hegarty's evidence was that he left the house at about 2.20pm with George Downey, George Cooley, another man named Eamonn Quigley, and (he thought) Michael Kelly's brother John, but that Michael Kelly, Jim Brennan and Zac Rooney left for the march separately.

86.6 A photograph taken by the Derry Journal photographer Larry Doherty appears to show Michael Kelly on the march. We have no other photographs that show him before he arrived in the area of the rubble barricade.

86.7 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² George Downey told us that after he had become separated from Michael Kelly, he did not see him again until they happened to meet (before the paratroopers entered the Bogside) at the point marked “B” on the plan attached to his statement³ (the north-eastern corner of Columbcille Court). While they were there, Michael Kelly’s mother shouted and beckoned to him from the first floor walkway on the western side of Kells Walk, but Michael Kelly was embarrassed and did not go to his mother. George Downey then heard that two people (evidently Damien Donaghey and John Johnston) had been shot. He went to find out which house they were in, thereby parting company once more with Michael Kelly.

³ AD134.26

² Day 123/8-9

86.8 Michael Kelly’s mother, the late Kathleen Kelly, told us in her written statement to this Inquiry¹ that she had seen him near the north-eastern corner of Columbcille Court. She was looking from the front door of her sister’s maisonette on the first floor of Kells Walk. It appears from her statement that Kathleen Kelly believed that she saw her son only after the paratroopers had entered the Bogside. She said that he did not hear her when she called to him and that he ran off towards Glenfada Park.

86.9 According to the note made by Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times of his interview of her on 29th February 1972,¹ Margaret Deery said that Michael Kelly had helped her into Chamberlain Street after she was wounded. The same claim appears in Margaret Deery’s written statement for the Widgery Inquiry² and in the note of her recollections taken on 25th January 1983,³ to which we have referred in our discussion of the casualties in Sector 2.⁴ Margaret Deery’s daughter Helen Deery said in her written statement to this Inquiry⁵ and in her oral evidence to this Inquiry⁶ that her mother had told her that she had been assisted to Chamberlain Street by Michael Kelly. Helen Deery added that Michael Kelly was “always at our house and all our family knew him”.

86.10 John Kelly identified his brother Michael in one of the photographs taken by the Irish Times photographer Ciaran Donnelly of the scene at the rubble barricade when the Army vehicles came into the Bogside.¹

Michael
Kelly

86.11 We accept this identification. The same figure can be seen in the following photograph taken moments earlier by the same photographer.

Michael
Kelly

86.12 These photographs, which we have also shown earlier in this report,¹ show some of the Army vehicles on Rossville Street, and the Eden Place waste ground virtually deserted. We are doubtful whether there was time for Michael Kelly to have made his way to the car park of the Rossville Flats, to have helped Margaret Deery into Chamberlain Street after she was shot and then, by one route or another, to have reached the area south of the rubble barricade before he was photographed there.

- 86.13 In our view, therefore, Margaret Deery was probably mistaken in thinking that Michael Kelly had assisted her after she was shot. In our view he is unlikely to have had time to have assisted Margaret Deery (who was the second casualty in Sector 2) and then gone to the rubble barricade, where he became the first casualty in Sector 3.
- 86.14 In these circumstances it remains uncertain from where Michael Kelly had come to reach the rubble barricade. On the whole, however, we consider that he had probably entered from the western side of Rossville Street, perhaps through Glenfada Park North. If Kathleen Kelly was mistaken in her memory of seeing her son after (as opposed to before) the soldiers entered the Bogside, both her account and that of George Downey support this conclusion.

Medical and scientific evidence

Wound pathology and ballistics

- 86.15 Dr Thomas Marshall, then the State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of Michael Kelly on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Dr Raymond McClean (a local general practitioner who attended the autopsies of the bodies of many of the deceased as an observer at the request of the Cardinal Archbishop of Armagh)² and an RUC photographer were also present.³ Dr Richard Shepherd and Mr Kevin O'Callaghan, who were engaged by this Inquiry as independent experts on pathology and ballistics respectively, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Marshall (now Professor Marshall), Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Marshall also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

³ D60

² AM105.8

- 86.16 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Marshall described a gunshot wound consisting of an approximately oval hole measuring 28mm x 16mm, in the left side of the abdomen, centred 6cm to the left of the umbilicus and 40.5in above the soles of the feet. The long axis of the wound was directed downwards and to the left at an angle of 20° to the vertical. The left margin was shelved, with the subcutaneous tissue facing outwards. The right margin was fairly steep. The margins were soiled in places by what appeared to be fibres of clothing. The hole was bordered by a variable zone of pale abrasion, up to 3mm wide. Between the 11 o'clock and 1 o'clock positions, the outer limit of this abrasion was a thin red line.

¹ D60

86.17 The internal injuries found by Dr Marshall are described in his report.¹

86.18 We have referred in an earlier chapter of this report¹ to the examination conducted in 1972 of the bullets recovered from three of the casualties. For reasons we gave there,² we have no doubt that Lance Corporal F fired the bullet recovered from Michael Kelly's body. In his case, a copper-jacketed, lead-cored bullet bearing rifling marks was found embedded in the centre of the sacrum at about the level of the third segment. The bullet was removed and handed to Constable Hugh McCormac,³ who took it to the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast on 2nd February 1972.⁴ Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in that department, there examined it microscopically in order to compare the rifling marks with those on bullets fired from the rifles known to have been used on Bloody Sunday. It was this exercise that enabled the bullet to be matched to Lance Corporal F's rifle. In his report on the comparison of the bullets dated 29th February 1972,⁵ Dr Martin did not mention any damage to the bullet extracted from the body of Michael Kelly. After this Inquiry was established, a search for the bullet was made in the holdings of the Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland, formerly the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science, but the bullet was not located.⁶

⁴ ED45.6

⁵ D47

³ D63

⁶ D741.7

86.19 In the course of the autopsy, as he explained in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall caused X-rays to be taken of Michael Kelly's sacrum to show the location of the bullet.

¹ Day 207/50-52; Day 207/60-61

86.20 In his autopsy report, Dr Marshall summarised his conclusions about the fatal injury as follows:¹

“Death was due to a bullet wound of the abdomen. A single bullet had entered the abdomen just over two inches to the left of the umbilicus. It had caused three perforations of the upper small intestine, complete transection of a segment of small intestine further down and it had lacerated the artery and vein serving the left leg before it embedded itself in the middle of the sacrum, the bone forming the back of the pelvis. It was the haemorrhage into the abdomen from the lacerated blood vessels which precipitated his death.

The bullet was recovered. It had a copper jacket and lead core and was seemingly of SLR type.

With the body erect, the track of the bullet through the body was backwards, with a declination of about 30° and a deviation to the right of about 20°. The bullet might have come from a point above him to his left front or, had he been bending forwards at the time he was shot, the bullet would have been travelling horizontally about 3 ft. 6 ins. above the ground.

The entrance wound was atypical and indicates that the bullet was not travelling nose-on when it struck. It had probably already passed through some object or been deflected by it.”

¹ D64

86.21 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report.

86.22 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall clarified his reference in those conclusions to a declination of about 30° and a deviation to the right of about 20°, explaining that the former was the declination from the horizontal plane and the latter the deviation from the sagittal plane. The sagittal plane is the vertical plane which divides an object (in this case, the human body) down the middle into left and right sides.

86.23 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall said that it was possible that the bullet had passed through something soft, such as the soft tissue or clothing of another person, before it hit Michael Kelly. He was asked whether the bullet could have been deflected by hitting something harder such as a brick or a piece of debris without showing any sign of damage. Although he thought that in such circumstances a bullet would show signs of damage, Dr Marshall said that this was a matter outside his expertise. Dr Marshall was asked² whether, on the hypothesis that the bullet had passed merely through the jacket of a person standing ten yards or so in front of Michael Kelly, it was likely that the bullet would have been so destabilised in its flight as to have hit Michael Kelly side-on. He replied that he had “no personal experience of this” but that although he thought that passing through clothing, particularly firm clothing, would have helped to destabilise the bullet, he was “not sure that it would have made it go side-on by the time it got to Michael Kelly”.

² Day 207/128-130

86.24 Professor Keith Simpson, then a Home Office pathologist, gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry after having studied the mortuary photographs and autopsy reports relating to those who were killed on Bloody Sunday, and photographs of rifling and score marks on the bullets recovered from the deceased.¹ Professor Simpson said that he did not think that the bullet that killed Michael Kelly was a ricochet or that it had struck bone before it entered Michael Kelly’s body.² His view appears to have been based on the degree of enlargement of the entrance wound rather than on the absence of damage to the bullet. He thought it possible that the bullet had been slightly deflected on passing through soft tissue or clothing before it hit Michael Kelly.

¹ D629

² WT9.39

86.25 In their report, Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan reached conclusions which they summarised as follows:¹

“Michael KELLY was hit by only one bullet, which struck his abdomen approximately ‘side on’ most probably with the nose of the bullet pointing upwards and to the right and the base downwards, indicating that the bullet was unstable.

86.26 As Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan explained in their report:¹ “When describing the human body it is standard practice in medicine to assume that the body is standing vertically with the arms by the sides and the palms facing forwards. This position is known as the standard or NORMAL ANATOMICAL POSITION.”

86.27 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Shepherd said that it was most likely that the bullet had struck an object or person before it struck Michael Kelly. It could have bounced off a hard object or passed through a soft object, such as part of a human body. The “relatively pristine” state of the bullet showed that it had not passed through a hard object and suggested that any contact with such an object had been very shallow.

86.28 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Mr O’Callaghan was shown one of the X-rays showing the bullet lodged in Michael Kelly’s sacrum and said that while no damage to the bullet was apparent from the X-ray it was not possible to draw the conclusion that the bullet was undamaged. If the bullet had struck a hard object, it is likely that some damage would have resulted, although it would not necessarily have been visible to the naked eye if the contact had been slight.

86.29 The photographs of Michael Kelly’s body taken in the mortuary show the wound described by Dr Marshall. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan¹ illustrates the position of the wound.

86.30

Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science, examined the clothing of Michael Kelly under the direction of Dr Martin.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out this finding:

"A hole approx. 1" long in the front left of the jacket had a trace of lead on the edge and is consistent with bullet damage. There is corresponding damage to the undergarments."

² D45

- 86.31 Dr Martin commented that before it hit Michael Kelly the bullet had probably struck an intermediate object, which had upset its stability.
- 86.32 Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan also examined the clothing of Michael Kelly, which had been retained by his family. Photographs were taken of the clothing.¹ In their report,² Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan stated:

"As can be seen in our photographs of the clothing, the bullet struck the deceased's jacket side-on. It passed through the left front of the jacket, pullover and vest, and nicked the top of the elasticated waistband of the deceased's underpants.

The more extensive damage to the vest visible in the photographs is likely to have been due to the vest being crumpled in that area when the bullet passed through.

The two small holes adjacent to the bullet hole in the front of the pullover may well be due to deterioration of the garment with age. We found no associated damage to the other items of clothing.

We found no further bullet damage."

¹ F5.1-8; F5.11-12

² E2.40-E2.41

- 86.33 On the basis of this evidence, we consider that the bullet was very likely to have contacted some object before it hit Michael Kelly. Later in this report¹ we conclude, for the reasons that we give there, that Michael Kelly was not the victim of a bullet that had first struck someone else. In front of Michael Kelly was the rubble barricade, constructed out of a variety of materials. In our view the bullet probably struck some part of this barricade at a shallow angle before it struck Michael Kelly. We have found no evidence that suggests that the bullet first passed through the clothing of anyone standing in front of Michael Kelly.

Tests for firearm discharge and explosives residue

- 86.34 Dr Martin tested the jacket that Michael Kelly was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. Apart from the trace of lead on the edge of the bullet entry hole in the jacket, Dr Martin detected what he considered to be "above normal" densities of lead particles on the right cuff and back of the jacket. He also detected a "large lead particle" on the swab from the back of the left hand, but no lead particles on the other hand swabs. He stated in his report the conclusion that the nature and distribution of lead particles on the swabs and jacket was similar to those produced by exposure to discharge gases from firearms, but that the absence of lead on the right hand was not consistent with the high levels detected on the right cuff of the jacket.¹ Dr Martin also detected lead particles on Michael Kelly's trousers,² but did not comment on these in his report.

² D49; D605-D606

86.35 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin said that the contamination of the right cuff but not of the right hand was consistent with firing while wearing a glove. He could think of no explanation for the particles found on the cuff other than exposure to discharge gases either from handling or standing beside someone using a firearm. Dr Martin said² that it was possible that the particle on the left hand had come from a fragmenting bullet.

² WT9.19-WT9.20

86.36 The clothing removed from the body of Michael Kelly at the autopsy did not include a glove.¹ There is no evidence that he was wearing a glove on his right hand when he was shot.

¹ D61

86.37 Dr John Lloyd, the independent scientific expert engaged by this Inquiry, summarised in his report¹ his overall conclusions about the tests for lead particles conducted by Dr Martin. He considered that, in view of the lack of control testing and the likelihood of spurious contamination, Dr Martin's results were of no evidential value.

86.38 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin accepted that unless there was evidence from other sources to indicate an association between any of the deceased and a weapon, it would be unwise to interpret his findings "as other than contamination".

86.39 In relation to Michael Kelly, Dr Lloyd stated in his report¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry² that although the use of a firearm while wearing a glove was a possible explanation for the particles found on the right cuff, it was of doubtful credibility in view of the flawed and unspecific nature of Dr Martin's tests, and that it was improbable that proximity to a person who was discharging a gun could have produced the distribution of particles found in this case.

² Day 227/43-44

86.40 Dr Martin said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he would now agree with those views of Dr Lloyd. We also accept the views of Dr Lloyd. It follows that we consider there to be no valid scientific evidence that Michael Kelly had been handling firearms or had been close to someone who was handling a firearm.

86.41 Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of Michael Kelly for explosives residue. None was detected.¹ There is, therefore, no scientific evidence that Michael Kelly had been in contact with explosives.

¹ D41

Michael Kelly's clothing

86.42 Michael Kelly was wearing a light blue jacket, a mustard-coloured pullover, a brown tie and blue trousers.¹

Where Michael Kelly was when he was shot

86.43 We have shown earlier in this report¹ the two photographs taken by Robert White of Michael Kelly lying on the ground after being shot. It is convenient to show those photographs again here.

Michael Kelly

Michael Kelly

86.44 There is no doubt that Michael Kelly fell at, or very close to, the position in which he can be seen in these photographs. We have already referred¹ to the evidence on which we rely for this conclusion. By way of example, Fr Terence O’Keeffe, who was watching from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North,² gave the following evidence to the Widgery Inquiry:³

“Q. What was the first casualty you observed?

A. One young man who dropped holding his stomach, and four young people detached themselves from this crowd which was still on that gable end corner and ran over very fast indeed. They crouched and grabbed him by the arms and legs and ran back behind the gable end of the wall. At that stage the crowd more or less got in behind the wall to see what was wrong with the young man.

Q. I would like greater detail about that if you are capable of giving it, but if not, say so if you will. Can you say where about on that barricade that first casualty was – the Rossville Flats side of the barrier or your side, or where?

A. More towards my side of the barrier on the gable end.

LORD WIDGERY: That is nearer to Rossville Street th[a]n to the flats. You were on that side?

A. Nearer to the gable end of the maisonettes.

LORD WIDGERY: Glenfada Park, yes.

Mr. STOCKER: When he was hit, can you tell m[y] Lord whether he was crouched or standing or lying down?

A. Standing facing Rossville Street, down Rossville Street towards the Saracens. I saw him hold his stomach and double up and begin to fall, at which these four young people took him and carried him very swiftly. It was very swiftly done.”

³ WT5.6

² This south end is often referred to as the “gable end” of this block.

When Michael Kelly was shot

86.45 As we have noted earlier in this report,¹ Michael Kelly was the first casualty of Army gunfire at the rubble barricade.

86.46 Before taking the two photographs shown above¹ of Michael Kelly lying shot on the ground, Robert White had taken photographs of Armoured Personnel Carriers (APCs) coming into the Bogside, and of the crowd moving away on the Eden Place waste ground. Robert White told us that these photographs were taken in fairly quick succession. He believed that they would have been taken within a few seconds of each other.² He said that he then ran into Glenfada Park North and halfway up the pram-ramp at the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park South and took three photographs from there, of which the first two are those of Michael Kelly. The third photograph, to which we return below,³ was of Hugh Gilmour. Robert White recalled that it did not take him very long to get to the pram ramp, because he was afraid of missing something. He said that he did not think that the distance that he had to run was as far as 60 yards.⁴ He also said that he thought that he was standing at the pram ramp for a matter of seconds, but less than a minute, before he took the first photograph showing Michael Kelly lying on the ground.⁵

² Day 137/86-87

³ Paragraph 86.88

⁴ The distance is, in fact, somewhat more than 100 yards.

⁵ AW11.4; Day 137/87-90

86.47 It is difficult to estimate what time passed between the entry of the Army vehicles and the shooting of Michael Kelly, but in our view at most it can only have been a matter of a very few minutes.

What Michael Kelly was doing when he was shot

86.48 As we have discussed earlier in this report,¹ there was rioting at the rubble barricade when the Army vehicles came into the Bogside. The photographs that we have displayed above² show that Michael Kelly moved forward slightly from the position, just south of a missing piece of pavement, in which Ciaran Donnelly photographed him standing, so that when he was shot he was closer to the rubble barricade, on the tarmac verge of the pavement close to the kerb.

² Paragraph 86.43

86.49 Differing accounts of Michael Kelly's actions emerge from the civilian evidence, ranging from him being a passive bystander to him being an active rioter. Ronald Wood, who saw Michael Kelly fall, told the Widgery Inquiry that he was not throwing stones when he was shot¹ and told us that it "did not appear" that Michael Kelly had been throwing anything when he was hit.² The photographer Ciaran Donnelly told the Widgery Inquiry that "Immediately prior to falling he [Michael Kelly] had not been doing anything at all, he was merely standing, but people on both sides of him were throwing stones".³ Hugh O'Boyle, who was standing to the right of Michael Kelly, told us that he did not remember people around him throwing stones.⁴

86.50

On the other hand, Paul McGeady suggested that Michael Kelly was shot while scaling the barricade and was thrown backwards by the shot,¹ although he placed him more towards Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Danny Craig said that Michael Kelly had been throwing stones and had picked up another that he was about to throw when he was struck.² Patrick Joseph Norris said that Michael Kelly had picked up a stone after stepping out from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North when the Army came in and was about to throw it when he was shot.³ Neither Danny Craig nor Patrick Joseph Norris could identify himself in the two photographs that Ciaran Donnelly took of the people behind the rubble barricade, which we have shown above⁴ and which we show again below.⁵ These witnesses placed Michael Kelly in different positions when he was shot. Danny Craig said that Michael Kelly was at the rubble barricade when he fell, while Patrick Joseph Norris said that Michael Kelly had just stepped out from the wall at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North when he was shot.

John J McLaughlin told the Sunday Times Insight Team reporter Philip Jacobson that Michael Kelly was struck while dragging fencing "to close the gap" in the rubble barricade.¹ William Vincent Hegarty made a NICRA statement² and a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry,³ and gave oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry⁴ and a deposition for the purposes of the inquest into Michael Kelly's death,⁵ in all of which he said that Michael Kelly was shot while attempting to cross the rubble barricade, after having been entangled in barbed wire there. He described the young man he saw shot as wearing a light blue suit, and said that he was told by Michael Kelly's parents that Michael Kelly was so dressed that day.⁶ William Griffin⁷ told the Widgery Inquiry and the Sunday Times that he and Michael Kelly were crossing the barricade from the north when Michael Kelly was shot, and that he had not been entangled in wire.

- 86.52 The accounts of Paul McGeady, Danny Craig, Patrick Joseph Norris, John J McLaughlin, William Vincent Hegarty and William Griffin differ, but all describe an active Michael Kelly. Ciaran Donnelly's first photograph appears to show Michael Kelly standing, though the second may show him stepping forward.

Michael Kelly

Michael
Kelly

- 86.53 As we have observed elsewhere in this report,¹ it is important to bear in mind that still photographs such as these record only an instant of time. Thus in our view it would not be legitimate to infer from these photographs that Michael Kelly was simply standing when he was shot. Our assessment of the evidence discussed above² has led us to conclude that it is likely that Michael Kelly had thrown or was throwing or was about to throw a stone when he was shot.

² Paragraphs 86.49–52

86.54 However, we have no doubt about four matters.

86.55 Firstly, we are sure that Michael Kelly was neither a gunman, nor a nail or petrol bomber. There is no evidence to suggest, nor did anyone suggest, that he was armed with any form of lethal weapon.

86.56 Secondly, we are sure that Michael Kelly (even if, contrary to our view, he was not himself throwing anything) was among or near the people at the rubble barricade who were throwing stones, bricks, rubble and perhaps bottles, as we have described earlier in this report.¹

86.57 Thirdly, we are sure, having considered both the military and civilian evidence, that when Michael Kelly was shot, there was no-one at the rubble barricade who had deployed or who was about to deploy a firearm or bomb of any kind. We have considered whether the actions of those at the rubble barricade when Michael Kelly was shot could have led a soldier mistakenly to believe that anyone there was presenting a lethal threat sufficient to justify opening fire, but for reasons we give later in this report,¹ we have concluded that Lance Corporal F neither had, nor believed that he had, any justification for firing the round that killed Michael Kelly.

86.58 Finally, in view of Robert White's photographs and the medical evidence, we have no doubt that Michael Kelly was shot when he was behind the rubble barricade and facing north.

Where Michael Kelly was taken after he was shot

86.59 Soon after he was shot, Michael Kelly was carried behind the south wall of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, where Fr Denis Bradley and others tended him. He was then carried across Glenfada Park North, through the south-western alleyway and into the Carrs' house at 8 Abbey Park. From that house he was taken to Altnagelvin Hospital in an ambulance that also carried two of the Sector 4 casualties. We deal in more detail with what happened to Michael Kelly after he had been taken to the gable end, in our consideration of the events of Sector 4.¹

Hugh Gilmour

Biographical details

86.60 Hugh Gilmour was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was the youngest member of his family and lived with his parents at 23 Garvan Place in Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. He was employed by Northern Ireland Tyre Services as a tyre fitter.¹

Prior movements

86.61 In her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Hugh Gilmour's sister Mary Bonner told us that her brother had lunch at their parents' flat. At about 2.30pm or 2.45pm, he left the flat to meet some friends by the shops on the south side of Block 2 of the Rossville Flats. This group of seven or eight friends walked through the Bogside to join the march.

86.62 Michael Bridge (the cousin of the man of that name wounded in Sector 2) told us in his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ that he joined the march with Hugh Gilmour, and left him at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street.

86.63 In their closing submissions,¹ the representatives of the family of Hugh Gilmour refer to a photograph that they submit shows him on the march.

Man with Fair Isle or similar sweater

86.64 It appears from a photograph of Hugh Gilmour being carried to an ambulance, that he was wearing a Fair Isle or similar sweater.

² Paragraph 86.88

86.66 We accept that Hugh Gilmour was on the march, but have found no evidence to indicate how he arrived at the vicinity of the rubble barricade after he left Michael Bridge at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street.

Medical and scientific evidence

Wound pathology and ballistics

86.67 Dr Derek Carson, then the Deputy State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of Hugh Gilmour on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Three other doctors and two RUC photographers were also present.² Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Carson, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Carson also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

² D179

86.68 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Carson described the following four gunshot wounds:

(i) A circular entrance wound, 6mm in diameter, on the ulnar border of the left forearm, centred 12cm above the ulnar styloid. This wound was surrounded by a rim of dark red abrasion, 2mm wide. There was no blackening of the surrounding skin.

(ii) A ragged exit wound, measuring 20mm x 11mm, on the flexor surface of the left forearm, at a slightly lower level than wound (i). This wound was surrounded by an irregular rim of abrasion, 2–3mm wide. It lay within a vague zone of bruising, measuring 5cm x 2.5cm. There was a fracture of the underlying ulna.

(iii) A gaping wound, measuring 6cm x 5cm, on the left side of the trunk, with the centre of its anterior border situated 13cm directly below the nipple. There was no significant abrasion of its margins.

(iv) An elliptical wound, measuring 20mm x 12mm, on the right side of the trunk, centred 14cm below and 7cm behind the right nipple and 16cm above the right anterior superior iliac spine. The long axis of this wound was directed downwards and forwards at an angle of 20° to the vertical. There was no significant abrasion of the wound margins nor was there any bruising or blackening around it. The wound had a “split” appearance, with pointed extremities, and did not have the typical appearance of an entrance wound.

86.69 The internal injuries found by Dr Carson are described in his report.¹

86.70 Dr Carson summarised his conclusions about the gunshot injuries as follows:¹

“There were two gunshot wounds on the left forearm and two more on the trunk. Only one of the four had the typical appearances of an entrance wound. This was located on the ulnar border of the back of the mid-forearm. From here the bullet had passed through the forearm, causing a fracture of the ulna, before leaving the front surface of the forearm at a slightly lower level than the entrance wound.

Of the wounds on the trunk the larger was located on the left side of the front of the lower chest and the other on the right side at about the same level but slightly further back. The bullet causing these wounds had fractured the 8th rib on each side, lacerated the diaphragm, the left lung, the liver, spleen and stomach. The liver injury was particularly extensive. Massive bleeding into the chest and abdominal cavities from these injuries would have caused rapid death.

It might be argued that because the wound on the left chest was larger than that on the right chest, the wound on the right side was an entrance wound and that the man must therefore have been struck by two bullets. If this were so then the bullets would have come from opposite directions, one from his left and the other from his right. However the wound on the right chest, although smaller, did not have the typical appearance of an entrance wound, being pointed at each of its extremities as though the tissues were split open from within. It would be more logical to conclude that all four wounds were caused by the passage of a single bullet and that the large size of the wound on the left chest was accounted for by distortion or yawing of the bullet which had already passed through the left forearm and fractured the ulna. All four wounds were brought into line when the left forearm was semi-flexed at the elbow with the upper arm almost touching the body and the flexor surface of the wrist facing the abdomen. On this interpretation the bullet had passed horizontally from left to right through the body with a slight inclination backwards. Assuming the deceased was erect at the time the bullet must have come from his left and slightly in front of him.

The extent of the injuries indicated that the bullet had come from a weapon of medium or high velocity, but since the missile had passed completely through the body and was not recovered it was not possible to determine the calibre. There was nothing to suggest that the weapon had been discharged at close range.”

86.71 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Carson confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report.

¹ WT8.67-WT8.69

86.72 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Carson told us that although he could not entirely rule out the possibility that the wound in the right chest was an entrance wound, he still stood by his original conclusions and believed that the most likely explanation of Hugh Gilmour’s wounds was that they were all caused by a single bullet.

¹ D535

86.73 In a further written statement,¹ Dr Carson made the following comments in support of his interpretation of Hugh Gilmour’s injuries:

“There is an adage in medicine that common things occur most commonly. This is true of wounds of arm and trunk. Experience over the years has shown many cases in which a single bullet passes through both.

The arm is usually in a position by the side, whether standing, walking or running. Therefore there is a great possibility that a bullet passing through the trunk from side to side will also damage an arm, and vice versa.

Since the probability is that both wounds were caused when the deceased was upright, then it is asking a lot of coincidence to suggest that two bullets struck the body at the same level and at the same time, and further that they came from diametrically opposite directions.

The wound on the right side of the trunk does not have the appearance of an entrance wound. (Note the appearance of all the other entrance wounds in the six cases). It is not a small neat circular hole with an abrasion collar – rather it is large and pointed above and below with a split appearance, typical of an exit wound.

A bullet which has been deformed, especially by impact with bone, and which has lost its stability of flight may well cause a re-entry wound larger than the ultimate exit wound. It is losing more energy on re-entry, and temporary cavitation must also be considered as a factor, in high velocity wounds in particular.”

86.74

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Carson maintained the same views, although he accepted that if Hugh Gilmour had been hit by two bullets, they need not necessarily have struck him simultaneously. He explained the phenomenon of temporary cavitation, whereby the passage of a bullet through the body can cause an expansion of the surrounding tissue and hence an enlargement of the wound. Dr Carson added that it would have been possible for Hugh Gilmour to run a distance of 20 to 30 yards even after he had sustained the injury to his trunk. Dr Carson observed that unless the brain or spinal cord is grossly damaged it is “amazing what can be done after a gunshot wound”. On the other hand, he later said² that he would not have expected Hugh Gilmour to have “stayed on his feet for long” after receiving the injury to the trunk. Dr Carson was inclined to agree with a suggestion put to him that once Hugh Gilmour had been injured in the arm, it would have been natural for him to clutch his arm to his abdomen, in which case a second bullet passing through the trunk would have been likely to cause a further injury to the arm. Dr Carson agreed³ that there did appear to be a small area of abrasion on part of the margin of the wound on the right side of the chest, but he did not consider that any significance should be attached to this.

³ Day 207/35-39

² Day 207/21-27

86.75 In their report, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan reached conclusions which they summarised as follows:¹

"The possible causes of the injuries to the chest and arm are:

- a) ONE SHOT: passing through the left arm then re-entering the left chest and exiting the right chest.
- b) ONE SHOT: entering the right chest, exiting the left chest, re-entering the left arm.
- c) TWO SHOTS: one passing through the left arm and one passing through the chest left to right.
- d) TWO SHOTS: one passing through the left arm and one passing through the chest right to left.

The injury to the ulnar aspect of the left arm is such a classic entry wound that we have no doubt that it indicates that the bullet must have passed through the left arm from the ulnar to the flexor surface.

It is extremely difficult to orientate the arm so that the ulnar wound is against the site of the wound on left chest wall. The entry wound on the ulnar surface of the arm is so unlikely to be a re-entry wound that we consider that this possibility can be excluded. These factors exclude option (b).

It is our opinion that the injury to the right side of the chest is, more likely than not, an entry wound and that the injury to the left side represents an exit wound. This would exclude options (a and c). However the injury to the left side of the chest is not photographed clearly and in the absence of X rays that might have given information about the direction of fragmentation of the ribs this cannot be stated with certainty.

Based on the original 4 hypotheses it is therefore much more likely than not that Hugh Gilmore was struck by two bullets; one striking the right side of the chest and the other the left forearm. (d)

The forearm is an extremely mobile part of the body and it is not possible to give any indication of its position when struck. The mobility is so great that the shot that struck the forearm could have come from almost any position around the body. Clearly the shot to the chest, if we are correct in the orientation of this shot, has come from a point to the right of the chest at the moment of discharge."

86.76 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Shepherd adhered to these conclusions. With regard to Dr Carson's views, Dr Shepherd commented that a moving person is less likely to have his arm at his side than one who is stationary, and that if two bullets had hit Hugh Gilmour when he was moving they need not necessarily have come from opposite directions. There was also no reason why the two bullets must have struck Hugh Gilmour at the same time. Dr Shepherd said that although the wound on the right side of the trunk had some features of an exit wound, it looked less like an exit wound than the wound on the left side. Although atypical, it was possible for an entrance wound to show the "split" appearance described by Dr Carson and to lack a rim of abrasion. Dr Shepherd considered that temporary cavitation was more likely to affect the size of an exit wound than of an entrance wound.

86.77 It will be seen from the foregoing summaries of their evidence that there is a fundamental difference of opinion between Dr Carson and the Inquiry's experts as to whether Hugh Gilmour was struck by one or two bullets. We return to this difference of opinion later in this report.¹

86.78 The photographs of Hugh Gilmour's body taken in the mortuary show the wounds described by Dr Carson. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan¹ illustrates the position of the wounds.

86.79 This diagram also shows the position of what Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan described as a “small puncture wound”¹ adjacent to the upper margin of the wound to the right side of the trunk, visible in the mortuary photographs but not mentioned in Dr Carson’s autopsy report or notes. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Dr Carson said that he was not sure that there had been a puncture wound and thought that this was just a blemish on the skin.

86.80 Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of Hugh Gilmour under the direction of Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the same department.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out these findings:

“There is a small hole in the left arm of the anorak (item 2) which had traces of lead on the perimeter and is consistent with a bullet entry. A second larger hole in the arm is consistent with bullet exit and two more larger holes in the left and right of the anorak body are consistent with the path of the same bullet. There is corresponding damage to the pullover, shirt and vest (items 3, 4 and 5).”

Tests for firearm discharge and explosives residue

86.81 Dr Martin tested the anorak that Hugh Gilmour was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. Apart from the traces of lead consistent with bullet entry around one of the holes in the left arm of the anorak, Dr Martin detected no significant number of lead particles on the anorak and none on the hand swabs. He concluded that Hugh Gilmour had not been using a firearm.¹

¹ D169

86.82 Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of Hugh Gilmour for explosives residue. None was detected.¹

¹ D165

86.83 It follows that there is no scientific evidence that Hugh Gilmour had been handling firearms or had been close to someone who was handling a firearm, or that he had been in contact with explosives.

Hugh Gilmour's clothing

86.84 We have referred above¹ to Hugh Gilmour's multi-coloured sweater. Over this he was wearing a brown anorak and under it a yellow shirt. He was also wearing blue denim jeans.²

² D164

Where Hugh Gilmour was when he was shot

86.85 Two difficulties arise when considering the question of where Hugh Gilmour was when he was shot.

86.86 Much of the evidence is confused and irreconcilable. We do not find this surprising, in view of the fact that they were witnessing horrific and fast-moving events, and, as we have pointed out elsewhere in this report,¹ people who have witnessed the same event very often give sharply differing accounts of it.

86.87 In the second place, if the Inquiry's experts are correct in their view that it is most likely that two bullets hit Hugh Gilmour, then the possibility arises that he was first hit when in one place and hit again after he had moved to another place.

86.88 Hugh Gilmour can be seen in the following photograph, which Robert White took from the Pram Ramp on the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North after he had taken the photographs of Michael Kelly lying on the ground behind the rubble barricade, which we have considered earlier in this report.¹ Hugh Gilmour was identified in this photograph by, among other witnesses, Frankie Mellon.²

² AM399.4

Hugh Gilmour

86.89 Robert White (who did not make a statement in 1972) gave the following account in his written statement to this Inquiry of what happened after he had taken the two photographs of Michael Kelly:¹

“Just at that moment I became aware that a young man was running south on the pavement to the west of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He was running along and holding his side with his right hand and I instinctively took a photograph of him. There would only have been a second or two between me seeing this young man and me taking the photograph. I would have had my camera ready and my elbows were probably resting on the wall of the pram ramp with my camera held up ready to shoot. I would say that the young man could only have run 5 or 6 yards between me seeing him and me taking the photograph that is attached and numbered 32. I subsequently learned that this young man’s name was Hugh Gilmore and that he was shot and killed that day. When I saw him I did not realise he had been shot, and again I thought that he had perhaps been hit by a rubber bullet.”

86.90 Robert White told us that he did not know what had happened to the man he had photographed running.¹ He stated that he later came down from the pram ramp and took a photograph of a group of people at the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. *"It looked as if there were seven or eight people standing around a body on the ground, but I could not see that body and I did not know who it was."*²

² AW11.5

86.92 In our view Hugh Gilmour had been hit by at least one bullet before he reached the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. We set out below a still from the helicopter footage on which we have marked the position of Hugh Gilmour as shown in Robert White's photograph, from which it can be seen that he was some distance from the rubble barricade when that photograph was taken.¹

86.93 We now turn to consider the evidence of other civilians relating to where Hugh Gilmour was when he was shot. As will be seen, some of the witnesses put him in front of, some at, and some behind the rubble barricade when this happened.

Eamon Melaugh

86.94 Eamon Melaugh gave a Keville interview which included the following account:¹

“At approximately four o’clock or some time shortly after that I found myself standing at the barricade outside the Rossville Street Flats. The barricade was situated about twenty five to thirty yards from the Free Derry end of the flats. I was er – facing the Army and watching the members of the Security Forces fire their self-loading rifles. Most of the shots that I seen fired were being fired from waist level and that they weren’t deliberately aimed. Two shots rang out, the lad standing beside me who had – who I now know to be Hugh Gilmore lurched forward from the waist. He said ‘I’ve been hit Eamon, I’m hit’; meaning that he was shot. I looked at him, there was an expression of amazement, total amazement on his face. He turned round and ran up the street away from the barricade and from the soldiers. I ran after him. I wasn't able to catch up with him because I was lumbered down with two cameras and long lenses. He ran, after having been shot, to the gable end nearest to Free Derry Corner. He then slumped to the ground out of the line of fire and some time later he died."

86.95 According to the statement taken by Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times Insight Team,¹ Eamon Melaugh was one of the crowd that surged forward from around the area of the rubble barricade in response to seeing a youth being arrested. He was among the last civilians to move back towards the barricade as he had paused to pick up a lens hood that he had dropped. As he did so he saw a soldier with a baton gun firing from the western side of Rossville Street, and another soldier behind him who fired two live rounds. For reasons given earlier in this report,² we are of the view that these two soldiers were respectively Private 017 and Corporal P. According to the same statement, Eamon Melaugh attempted to take a photograph of at least one of these soldiers. He saw two youths lying on the ground near the rubble barricade, and believed that they were taking cover or feigning injury. There was a lull of 10 to 15 seconds and then two further shots rang out. Eamon Melaugh was standing next to Hugh Gilmour who "lurched forward from the waist" and called out "I'm hit Eamon, I've been hit". As he said this "he turned round and he bolted back towards Free Derry Corner and when he came to the door of the flats he started to stagger somewhat".

² Paragraphs 69.20–58 and Chapter 73

86.96 This statement also recorded that after trying to photograph the soldier who had fired first, Eamon Melaugh "got down off the top of the barricade into the Free Derry side". Hugh Gilmour was shot no more than two feet from where Eamon Melaugh was standing. Eamon Melaugh took a moment to register what was happening, and then set off after Hugh Gilmour. He thought that Hugh Gilmour wanted to get into the doorway of the Rossville Flats, but could not do so as there were too many people present. He instead ran to the corner and fell "out of the line of fire". Eamon Melaugh reached Hugh Gilmour and saw a wound below his chest that was emitting no blood. Someone was holding some material to Hugh Gilmour's side. Eamon Melaugh said "with ut[t]er and complete conviction" that Hugh Gilmour was not even throwing stones when he was shot. He had nothing in his hands, and was not armed.

86.97 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ Eamon Melaugh accepted that he had been interviewed by, or had given a statement to, Peter Pringle but said: “Obviously there are elements in the statement that I conveyed, but I can tell you that 85 per cent of that statement is sheer fiction, fiction.” He also told us that the account that he had given to Kathleen Keville might have been more accurate than his current recollection.²

² Day 143/37-39

86.98 Despite what Eamon Melaugh said to us, we consider that the statement probably did accurately record an account that Eamon Melaugh gave in 1972. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Peter Pringle said that “in most cases we would not have said ‘statement’ unless there had been some special reason for that”, and suggested that it might be a transcript of a tape recording or perhaps a copy of a statement made previously by the witness. The statement was generally consistent with what Eamon Melaugh had told Kathleen Keville. Thus the accounts that Eamon Melaugh gave in 1972 were to the effect that Hugh Gilmour was standing at or behind the rubble barricade, and only ran south after he was shot; whereas his recollection when he gave evidence to this Inquiry is that both he and Hugh Gilmour were both north of the rubble barricade, and that Hugh Gilmour was already moving in a southerly direction when he was shot.²

² AM397.4

86.99 We should note that it was Liam Mailey’s evidence to this Inquiry that Eamon Melaugh was behind the rubble barricade as the soldiers began to fire.¹

Geraldine Richmond

86.100 In her NICRA statement, Geraldine Richmond (who became Geraldine McBride) gave the following account:¹

“I was in the march on Sunday 30th January. I was at the corner of Rossville Street. I turned back towards Free Derry Corner. The boy Gilman [sic], was walking along the side of the flats at Rossville Street beside me. All of a sudden there was a lot of shooting. There had been no shooting before this. This shooting came from the army because when I turned round there was a soldier on one knee. The boy Gilman stumbled. I went over to him. Some men were already by his side. I prayed into his ear. I helped to carry him to where the telephone box was.”

86.101 In an undated statement taken in 1972 (probably by solicitors acting for the wounded)¹ Geraldine Richmond recorded that she ran south when she saw soldiers on the waste ground. She heard gunfire and saw smoke from some of their guns. Hugh Gilmour was on her left. He shouted that he was hit, and ran on holding onto his stomach. Geraldine Richmond grabbed his right arm and told him to keep running. She assisted him around the south-western corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, where he collapsed and died.

86.102 In her written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and in her oral evidence to that Inquiry,² Geraldine Richmond said that she had been near Hugh Gilmour between Pilot Row and Eden Place. The two of them were present there when they became aware of the soldiers entering the Bogside, and they ran south towards Free Derry Corner. Just as they reached “the main section of Rossville Flats” Hugh Gilmour said “I’m hit, I’m hit”. Geraldine Richmond encouraged him to keep running. Hugh Gilmour began to stumble, but Geraldine Richmond was able, with the help of an unnamed man, to hold him up and help him round the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Geraldine Richmond said that Hugh Gilmour was shot “just before we came to the barricade” (and therefore presumably to the north of the barricade).³

³ WT6.49

² WT6.48-51

86.103 In the course of her oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Geraldine Richmond was shown a photograph of a man running doubled up. We have no doubt from the context that this was a copy of the photograph taken by Robert White of Hugh Gilmour running which we have reproduced above.¹ Geraldine Richmond accepted that she was not shown in this photograph and that she did not begin to assist Hugh Gilmour around the corner until after this point.²

“Q. You are not in that photograph?

A. No, I am not.

Q. So at this stage, at any rate, you were not still helping him to run?

A. No, but when we got beside those people there we grabbed him again and got him round the corner to help him.”

² WT6.50

86.104 In her deposition taken for the purposes of the inquest into Hugh Gilmour's death,¹ Geraldine Richmond again indicated that Hugh Gilmour was shot north of the rubble barricade as he ran south down Rossville Street.

86.105 In her evidence to this Inquiry, Geraldine Richmond told us that she and Hugh Gilmour ran from the incoming soldiers, but stopped at a point level with Pilot Row on Rossville Street. From there, Hugh Gilmour and another youth threw one stone each in the direction of the Army vehicles.¹ She then saw soldiers disembark from vehicles on Rossville Street. She saw one soldier in particular firing from beside one of the vehicles.² Geraldine Richmond and others ran south. Hugh Gilmour was slightly in front of her and to her left. Geraldine Richmond recalled scrambling over the barricade, with no indication as yet that Hugh Gilmour had been shot. There were youths at the barricade throwing stones, but Geraldine Richmond could not recall seeing any casualties there. There were more than ten people present at the barricade, some throwing stones, some standing around, and some running away.³ Hugh Gilmour continued to run in front of her and to her left on the pavement of Rossville Street, about six feet from the wall of the Rossville Flats.⁴ A little further south than halfway between the barricade and the south end of Block 1, Geraldine Richmond heard two shots that came from her right, and felt the bullets pass her. She heard Hugh Gilmour gasp and say that he had been hit. She believed that Hugh Gilmour was shot when just out of frame on Robert White's photograph of him running. She marked her likely position in red at the time that the photograph was taken.⁵

86.106 Geraldine Richmond told us that at the time when he was shot, Hugh Gilmour was running south and was not turning, and that she believed that the bullets came from the western side of Rossville Street from the Glenfada Park area.¹ She and another man assisted Hugh Gilmour around the corner of Block 1, where he died.² Geraldine Richmond said that when she recorded in her written statement for the Widgery Inquiry that she saw Hugh Gilmour shot before he reached “the main section” of the Rossville Flats she was referring to the main door of Block 1 (ie the entrance near the south-western corner of the block). However, this does not explain other indications in her earlier evidence that he was shot further to the north. Geraldine Richmond accepted that it was possible that Hugh Gilmour was hit twice, but remained confident that she became aware of Hugh Gilmour’s injury only after he had crossed the rubble barricade.³

² AM45.17-18

86.107 Geraldine Richmond’s oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry and her deposition for the coroner indicate that Hugh Gilmour was shot to the north of the rubble barricade, while her evidence to this Inquiry is that he was shot to the south of it. She also indicated for the first time, in her written statement to this Inquiry, that she believed that the bullets came from the western side of Rossville Street and flew past her. She recorded in that statement that Hugh Gilmour had thrown a stone at an earlier point, but at the moment of his shooting was running south and not turning.

Frankie Mellon

86.108 In his Keville interview,¹ Frankie Mellon, then a student nurse, said that he was standing “just outside ... the flats opposite Glenfada Park” when Hugh Gilmour “come crawling round shouting he had been shot in the stomach”. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Frankie Mellon said that this account was “not correct at all”.

² Day 151/178-179

86.109 Frankie Mellon gave a NICRA statement¹ in which he recorded that “Me and my mate were standing at the corner of flats opposite Glenfada Park. John [sic] Gilmore jumped into the air shouting ‘I’ve been hit’ and he started running towards the corner² of the flats where we were standing. My friend and I grabbed Gilmore by each arm and dragged him around the corner. Just beside the telephone box Gilmore collapsed to the ground.”

Frankie Mellon stated that he then tried to tend to Hugh Gilmour’s wounds.

² In the typed version of this statement the word “cover” appears but we are satisfied that this was a typographical error for “corner”.

86.110 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Frankie Mellon told us that he was walking south down Rossville Street when he saw a number of people running to the north of the rubble barricade and throwing stones in a northerly direction. Frankie Mellon stated that he walked south past them and that he noticed that Hugh Gilmour was one of these people. Hugh Gilmour was about six to eight feet from the wall of Block 1, and ran from the south of the barricade to 40 to 50 yards north, then threw one stone and turned to run back.¹ In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Frankie Mellon said that Hugh Gilmour might not have run so far to the north.

² Day 151/142-143

86.111 Frankie Mellon told us that at this point he became aware of Army vehicles driving down Rossville Street.¹ However, he stated that he had earlier seen an Army vehicle on the waste ground.² In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Frankie Mellon accepted that he could have been wrong about the timing of the arrival of the vehicles. In his written statement to this Inquiry he recorded that he saw a number of soldiers disembark and commence firing immediately. Some of the soldiers moved towards the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and some to a low wall on the western side of Rossville Street. Frankie Mellon stated that he ran south, and reached the rubble barricade. As he did so he heard two single SLR shots fired in rapid succession. He believed that the shots came from somewhere to his right (thus the west). He told us that he was one of the last civilians to cross the rubble barricade, and that he continued running south. He recalled Hugh Gilmour running in front of him as he heard the shots. Hugh Gilmour had previously looked over his shoulder and seen the vehicles on Rossville Street, and was running in a southerly direction, two or three feet ahead of Frankie Mellon. The second shot appeared to hit him, and Hugh Gilmour jumped up, grasped his right side and shouted “I’ve been hit”.⁴ Frankie Mellon told us in his oral evidence that he thought that both men were south of the rubble barricade by this point.⁵ In his written evidence to this Inquiry he stated that Hugh Gilmour continued to run, but after a few steps began to stumble. Frankie Mellon ran after him and caught up with him at the entrance to Block 1. He was on Hugh Gilmour’s right-hand side. As the doors to Block 1 were closed, he pulled him around the gable and Hugh Gilmour collapsed. Frankie Mellon said that he believed that he was the only man who helped Hugh Gilmour at this point, although he did recall that he was with John Anthony (Sean) McDermott, to whose evidence we refer below,⁶ on the day.⁷ Frankie Mellon identified himself in Robert White’s photograph as the first man to the left of Hugh Gilmour, in a light-coloured jacket.⁸

Frankie Mellon

- 86.112 Frankie Mellon’s NICRA statement was to the effect that he was standing at the southern corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats when he heard Hugh Gilmour shout that he had been hit and saw him start to run towards where he was standing. His Keville interview appears to be to much the same effect. In contrast, his evidence to us was that Hugh Gilmour was already running in a southerly direction when he was shot and that he, Frankie Mellon, was running behind him.

Sean McDermott

- 86.113 John Anthony McDermott, known as Sean McDermott, gave the following account in his NICRA statement:¹

“I was standing on the pavement outside the High Flats in Rossville St. I saw a boy walking alone across waste ground on the William St. side of the Flats. A soldier appeared on the corner of the Flats on the side nearest William St. The soldier caught hold of the youth and beat him mercilessly with a riot stick or baton. At this moment Hugh Gilmore emerged from the main door of the High Flats on Rossville St. He moved past towards the mound of rubble which formed a barricade across Rossville St. He got on top of the barricade and someone shouted ‘They are shooting live ammunition.’ When I heard this I crouched and looked around and Hugh Gilmore jumped up clutching the bottom of his stomach shouting ‘I’m hit, I’m hit.’ I thought he had been hit by a rubber bullet so a friend of mine Francis Mellon and myself got hold of him and assisted him around the corner of the Flats on the side nearest Free Derry Corner. As we got round the corner he collapsed. A few people gathered round to assist us.”

- 86.114 In our view, Sean McDermott’s description of a youth being caught by a soldier relates, like the accounts of certain other witnesses to which we have referred earlier,¹ to the arrests of William John Dillon.

- 86.115 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Sean McDermott said that he no longer recalled seeing the arrest of a youth on the waste ground and that he was not aware of the presence of soldiers when he saw Hugh Gilmour for the first time.¹ He told us that he did recall seeing

Hugh Gilmour emerge from Block 1 of the Rossville Flats as he (Sean McDermott) stood with Frankie Mellon to the south of the rubble barricade. He saw Hugh Gilmour move off towards William Street.²

² AM4.3

86.116 A few minutes after seeing Hugh Gilmour, Sean McDermott heard someone shout that live rounds were being fired. He crouched down, and heard bangs that he thought came from the general direction of William Street.¹ Sean McDermott said that within 30 seconds he saw Hugh Gilmour running unaided in a “semi-crouched” position, along the eastern side of Rossville Street. He shouted “I’m hit, I’m hit”. Hugh Gilmour was approximately on the rubble barricade, or perhaps just to the south of it. He was running in a southerly direction. On hearing this, those at the barricade turned and ran.² Sean McDermott and Frankie Mellon chased after Hugh Gilmour, who ran past the door of the flats. They assisted him around the corner of the gable, as his knees seemed to buckle when he reached the corner.³

¹ AM4.3; Day 144/56-57

³ AM4.3-4

² AM4.3; Day 144/60

86.117 Neither in his NICRA statement nor in his evidence to us did Sean McDermott suggest that he had actually seen Hugh Gilmour shot, but his NICRA statement implies that he saw him on the top of the rubble barricade very soon afterwards. He said that he was not shown in Robert White’s photograph of the running Hugh Gilmour, as he was just out of frame to the left, running behind Frankie Mellon.¹

86.118 In his NICRA statement, Sean McDermott referred to helping Hugh Gilmour “around the corner” of the Rossville Flats with his friend Frankie Mellon. The latter referred in his NICRA statement to “My friend and I” grabbing Hugh Gilmour by each arm and dragging him round the corner.

James Green

86.119 James Green gave the following account in his NICRA statement:¹

“I was standin[g] at the barricade at Rossville flats with a young lad who turned out to be Hugh Gilmour. We saw the soldiers comin[g] in from William St. and this lad said to me, ‘They are firing live ammunition’. I said, ‘They are firing over our heads and we are O.K. as long as we don’t get hit.’

A minute later I heard one shot then another shot and then the boy said, ‘Christ I’ve been hit.’ He half ran back to the corner of Rossville St flats for cover. With some help we put him on his back. The blood was pouring out of his side.”

86.120 In his evidence to this Inquiry, James Green said that he was behind the rubble barricade when the soldiers arrived in the Bogside. After a few minutes he and others threw stones at the soldiers. There were about 20 to 30 people at the barricade at this point, but not all of them were throwing stones.¹ James Green said that he heard gunfire and thought that the soldiers were firing over their heads. Although he could not be precise, he thought that there was probably a single shot, then a few, and then a volley.² The crowd at the barricade did not seem too concerned about the shooting, possibly because they thought that baton rounds were being fired. James Green said that he knew that live rounds were being fired, and recalled a remark that he had made to a freelance photographer standing nearby who had said that he thought that live ammunition was being fired; but he said that did not seek cover because he was confident that the shots were being fired into the air.³ He acknowledged that his NICRA statement indicated that he had had the conversation about live rounds with Hugh Gilmour. He did not appear to be sure which was the more accurate recollection.⁴

³ AG54.2-3; Day 149/8-11

⁴ Day 149/13-14

86.121 James Green told us that he became aware of Hugh Gilmour beside him. James Green bent to pick up a stone and, as he stood up, he heard Hugh Gilmour exclaim that he had been hit.¹ James Green did not see any visible signs of a wound at this time, and did not think that Hugh Gilmour had been hit with a live round. However, he recalled that Hugh Gilmour was crouched over and holding his stomach.²

² Day 149/17-18

- 86.122 He told us that he and Hugh Gilmour turned and ran south, and that he noticed Hugh Gilmour falling behind and turned to look at him. He stated that he was doing so at the time that Robert White's photograph of the running Hugh Gilmour was taken and identified himself as the man with glasses and a beard looking at Hugh Gilmour from under the canopy of the entrance to Block 1.¹

James Green

- 86.123 James Green said that he saw no evidence of Hugh Gilmour having been hit by a second bullet, although he accepted that this could have happened after he had run past him.¹ As Hugh Gilmour reached the corner of Block 1, James Green and three or four others lifted him and carried him round to the south end of the block where they laid him down.²

- 86.124 In his written statement to this Inquiry, James Green told us that Hugh Gilmour had been throwing stones from behind the barricade, but that he did not have anything in his hands at the time he was shot. James Green stated that he thought that Hugh Gilmour's hands had been "in front of him, down by his sides".¹ However, in his oral evidence James Green said that while he had not seen Hugh Gilmour at the moment when he was shot (as he himself was bending down), and while there was no stone in Hugh Gilmour's hand when he looked at him after the shooting, he thought that Hugh Gilmour had "probably" had a stone in his hand, which he had "possibly" dropped at the moment when he was shot.²

² Day 149/15-16

- 86.125 James Green's evidence, therefore, is to the effect that Hugh Gilmour was shot while at the rubble barricade. There is nothing in his evidence to suggest that Hugh Gilmour was on, as opposed to just behind, the rubble barricade.

Michael McCusker

- 86.126 Michael McCusker did not refer in his Keville interview to witnessing the shooting of Hugh Gilmour. He gave an account of leaving the car park of the Rossville Flats after soldiers had started firing there and then talking to John Young at the rubble barricade, who told him that two boys had been shot at the back of the flats. The account that he gave in this interview continued as follows:¹

"Then the shooting started again and somebody says that er – it's the army shooting so I run and I got around the corner with the telephone box, round at the side of the flats there's a telephone box. So I threw myself there and about – there must have been about a dozen all lying there and there was a young fella, he was just lying at the corner of the flats and the first aid couldn't get to him."

- 86.127 This account appears to indicate that after seeing John Young (which would have been very shortly before the latter was killed at the rubble barricade) Michael McCusker ran to the southern corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and saw Hugh Gilmour lying there.
- 86.128 In his written statement to this Inquiry, Michael McCusker told us that as the soldiers entered the Bogside he ran through the Rossville Flats car park and then through the passage between Block 1 and Block 2. When he reached the south end of Block 1 there was a lull in the gunfire that he had previously heard. He moved to the rubble barricade. He stayed there for about five minutes. There were about 12 to 20 people standing around. One of them was John Young, who told him that two people had been shot in the car park, and that one of these was Michael Bradley, who had been taken to a house in Joseph Place.¹ Michael McCusker told Praxis Films Ltd in about 1991² that John Young had told him that Michael Bradley had been hit "so I went around the back of the flats towards the courtyard to see if I could help him". Michael McCusker said that he turned to go, but heard firing break out before he moved. He ran south along with several other men. One of these men, who was running ahead of him, was dressed in a black bomber jacket and jeans. As he reached a point towards the southern end of Block 1, this man put his right hand to his back and staggered, falling forwards. Michael McCusker thought that the man had been shot, and although he did not see the source of fire he assumed that it came from the north. There was considerable firing at this time. Four or five people assisted the man around the corner.³

³ AM160.2; Day 148/57-59

² AM160.9

86.129 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Michael McCusker was unable to explain why he had not referred in his Keville interview to seeing a man clutching his back and falling forwards.¹

Hugh Patrick O'Donnell

86.130 In his Keville interview Hugh Patrick O'Donnell gave an account of running from the junction of Rossville Street and William Street towards the Eden Place waste ground and of armoured cars passing him. He continued:¹

"There was four or five of them and then the Ferret² car behind that. Well I looked back and I saw my mate and he seemed to be c – he seemed to be caught though I wasn't sure. And I ran on and I ran into the waste ground and the army they were – and Saracens they were ploughing into the crowd. They were trying to ram the people ... everything started to get confused then and we were surrounded by hundreds of soldiers, they were batoning people all round me and I was looking for a way out. There was a young – young bloke in front of me and the soldiers just at arms reach away; don't know how he missed me but he did. And he hit me ... head ... his rifle butt and I got past him and as I passed the soldier I heard the rifle shots and I wasn't sure where they came from or anything else but then I saw a soldier outside a Saracen and I saw him shooting his rifle. So I ran up to the end of the Rossville Street flats and I met another mate of mine and he told [me] that there was two young fellas lying dead around the back of the flats and nobody could get at them and he then started to cry and panicked and he led a few of us over a barricade at Rossville Street and we run down ... the army and as we were running a black soldier stepped out of a saracen and he started firing his rifle at us and the bullets were hitting the barricade behind us and hitting the wall beside us and I could feel the wind passing me. And I ran back to the corner of the flats and I looked back and saw that my mate was all right and as I turned the fella just at the corner of the flats fell beside me he was shot, he was right beside me and I got over to look, someone pulled up his jumper and opened his shirt to see how he was. There was a hole in him and the blood was running out of his nose and mouth and a man says he's dead."

² Having listened to the Keville tape, we consider that the word "other" in the typed version is a transcription error for "Ferret".

86.131 In his evidence to this Inquiry, Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that he was part of a crowd of about 30 to 50 people (some of whom were throwing stones) who surged over the rubble barricade towards the soldiers in Rossville Street. He believed that they did this in response to reports of youths being shot in the Rossville Flats car park. He heard live rounds being fired immediately after this and dropped to the ground at the rubble barricade.¹ Hugh Patrick O'Donnell rose to his feet and as he did so he saw a black soldier at the north-western corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats firing his rifle repeatedly from the hip.²

² AO32.4; Day 405/17-19

86.132 Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that he ran south, aware of further firing and bullets striking the rubble barricade. As he approached the corner of Block 1, he became conscious of a man on his left who was the only person who could keep up with him. This man suddenly seemed to be knocked forward in an unnatural movement and dropped to the ground somewhere close to the corner of Block 1. Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that he jumped over the man to get to cover and then (with another man) pulled the injured youth to cover. He immediately realised that this man had been shot in the torso. He later learned that this was Hugh Gilmour. Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that he believed that he was shown covering Hugh Gilmour with his jacket in the photograph that Robert White took of the group at the south end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹

¹ AO32.4-5; AO32.15; Day 405/20-23

86.133 Hugh Patrick O'Donnell said that he did not believe that Hugh Gilmour turned his body while he ran, and that he did not have anything in his hands. Hugh Patrick O'Donnell could not comment on the possibility that Hugh Gilmour had been shot twice, but he did not believe him to have been in pain or discomfort before he lurched forward and fell. He could not identify himself in Robert White's photograph of the running Hugh Gilmour.¹ Hugh Patrick O'Donnell told us he did not hear Hugh Gilmour shout anything as he ran.²

He said that he subsequently looked back at the rubble barricade and recalled that he could see about ten people lying behind it. He believed that at least one of these people (and in his opinion probably more) had been shot.³

³ AO32.5; Day 405/24-25

² Day 405/21-23

86.134 It will have been noted that in his Keville interview Hugh Patrick O'Donnell described seeing a man fall, but did not record that he had actually seen him shot. In our view the account that he gave to Kathleen Keville is to be preferred to his recollection long afterwards; so that, although in our view he probably did see Hugh Gilmour collapse, we place no reliance on his evidence to the extent that it might suggest that Hugh Gilmour was shot close to the end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

PIRA 14 and PIRA 26

86.135 PIRA 14 and PIRA 26, who are brothers, and who at the time of Bloody Sunday were members of the Provisional IRA, told us that they were at the rubble barricade when Hugh Gilmour was shot. PIRA 26 said that he saw him run past them and throw a stone at soldiers at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats¹ after which he was shot by a soldier standing in front of the low ramp at the south end of Kells Walk, the same soldier having previously fired what PIRA 26 thought at the time were blanks “down Rossville Street but more towards the Glenfada Park side”.²

² APIRA26.4; Day 425/63-69

86.136 PIRA 14 gave evidence to this Inquiry that Hugh Gilmour “may” have been throwing a stone at the soldiers, and placed him either on or just north of the barricade when he was shot by a tall soldier near the low ramp at the south end of Kells Walk, who had previously been firing “in the direction of Free Derry Corner”. PIRA 14 said that his recollection was that Hugh Gilmour was facing towards the soldiers at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats when he was shot.¹ He told us that after being hit, Hugh Gilmour “turned and ran alongside the Flats in the direction of Free Derry Corner”.²

¹ APIRA14.3-4; Day 421/48-49

² APIRA14.4

86.137 We have no 1972 accounts from PIRA 14 or PIRA 26.

Alex Morrison

86.138 In his NICRA statement this witness described seeing, from the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, one of a group of “boys” standing on the Free Derry Corner side of the rubble barricade being shot. He stated that “This was the first boy shot.” He continued:¹

“Immediately I heard further shots which came from the soldiers and were directed at the other boys at the barricade of rubble. We retreated immediately to the doors of the flats. Kevin McElhinney was running alongside me. We were crouched and running at the same time – making for the main door of the flats. As I entered I heard Kevin – who was now² just behind me shout ‘I’m hit ... I’m hit ...’ I dived on in the door and went up the stairs thinking that Kevin was behind me. I realised that no one was behind me so I ran back down and saw Kevin lying dead just inside the door. Others lifted him and took him upstairs. Kevin was beside me for the few moments before he was shot. At no time had a nail bomb, petrol bomb, gun or any other lethal weapon.”

² It is clear from the manuscript that “not” in the typed version was a transcription error for “now”.

86.139 This account referred to Kevin McElhinney, who was also shot in Sector 3. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Alex Morrison said that he now believed that it might have been Hugh Gilmour who was running behind him and shouted that he had been hit. He identified himself in Robert White’s photograph of the running Hugh Gilmour as standing under the canopy over the doorway to Block 1.¹

¹ AM429.1; AM429.8-9; AM429.11; Day 143/140-148

- 86.140 In view of Alex Morrison's 1972 identification of the person who called out as Kevin McElhinney, and the fact that his NICRA statement recorded him diving "in the door" and not standing under the canopy as shown in the photograph above, it is difficult to place reliance on his current belief that it might have been Hugh Gilmour. Kevin McElhinney was shot after this photograph was taken. The evidence of this witness does not provide us with any assistance as to where Hugh Gilmour was shot.

Brendan Gallagher

- 86.141 This witness told us that he believed that he had seen Hugh Gilmour fall while level with the doorway of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.¹ However, there is nothing in his NICRA statement² to support this recollection and in our view it would be unwise to place any reliance on it.

Brian McLaughlin

86.142 We have considered the accounts given by Brian McLaughlin to this Inquiry, but have concluded that these are too vague and confused to allow us to place any reliance on them.¹

Kathleen Brown, Margaret Patterson and Donal Deeney

86.143 These witnesses gave evidence to this Inquiry relating to the question of where Hugh Gilmour was when he was shot. There is a NICRA statement that appears to have been made by Kathleen Brown,¹ but which she told us that she did not think that she had made.² According to this NICRA statement, the witness saw a man “coming out from the alley between the flats, towards the market” who staggered and fell, and was “finished ... off” by a soldier firing from Glenfada Park. Kathleen Brown told us, in her evidence to this Inquiry,³ that Hugh Gilmour came past the doorway of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and appeared to try to run for cover through the passage between Blocks 1 and 2, but then to change his mind and turn back to face the direction from which he had come, whereupon he was shot by a soldier at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. We have found no other evidence that provides any support for this account. The other two witnesses gave no statements in 1972, and, having considered the evidence they gave to us, we concluded that it did not provide us with any reliable assistance on this topic.⁴

Consideration of the evidence relating to where Hugh Gilmour was shot

86.144 As we noted above, much of the evidence on the question of where Hugh Gilmour was when he was shot is confused and irreconcilable. Nevertheless, in our view an analysis of the evidence does enable us to reach some conclusions on this matter.

86.145 Robert White’s photograph of Hugh Gilmour running¹ shows him with his right arm extended towards the side of his chest or abdomen. As we have noted above,² Robert White himself said that he took the photograph because the man was running and holding his side. He also said that the man could only have run five or six yards from when he first saw him to when he took the photograph. Geraldine Richmond, Frankie Mellon, Sean McDermott and James Green also described seeing Hugh Gilmour clutching this part of his body after he had called out that he had been shot. We are therefore of the view that Hugh Gilmour had been hit by the bullet that had passed through his chest before this photograph was taken. It follows that we consider that Hugh Gilmour was shot in the chest at least a few yards north of the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

² Paragraph 86.89

- 86.146 The evidence of Eamon Melaugh, James Green, PIRA 14 and PIRA 26 is to the effect that Hugh Gilmour was behind or just to the north of the rubble barricade when he was shot. Geraldine Richmond's oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry and her deposition for the coroner indicate that she recalled him being to the north of the rubble barricade.
- 86.147 We have concluded that Hugh Gilmour received his chest wound when he was in the area of the rubble barricade; though we do not find it possible to say from the evidence considered above whether he was behind or in front of it.
- 86.148 None of the eyewitness evidence suggests that Hugh Gilmour was hit in the left arm by another bullet either before or after the time when he sustained the chest wound. The possibility exists that he was shot twice more or less simultaneously, but this would involve him either being shot from two quite different directions, or very rapidly turning his arm or body or both between the shots. In our view it is much more likely that Hugh Gilmour was only shot once, the bullet passing through his left arm and into and through his chest. Accordingly we take the view that on this matter Dr Carson's opinion is to be preferred to that of the Inquiry experts.

When Hugh Gilmour was shot

- 86.149 In view of Robert White's sequence of photographs we have concluded that Hugh Gilmour was shot after Michael Kelly. As discussed above,¹ Robert White took two photographs of Michael Kelly lying on the ground after he had been shot. We do not know how long Michael Kelly had been lying there when these photographs were taken, though it appears (for example, from Fr O'Keeffe's account quoted above²) that soon after he was shot he was carried to the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, and so it could not have been very long. Robert White's next photograph was of Hugh Gilmour running. The evidence discussed above³ shows that Hugh Gilmour started running more or less immediately he had been hit and thus only a short time before Robert White photographed him. Robert White was asked about the time lapse between photographing Michael Kelly and photographing Hugh Gilmour. He told us that he thought that it would have been a very short time, even less than a minute, but he did not honestly know.⁴ In these circumstances, we consider that it is probable that only a short time elapsed between the shooting of Michael Kelly and that of Hugh Gilmour.

³ Paragraphs 86.94–143

² Paragraph 86.44

⁴ Day 137/81-82

86.150 As we have noted above,¹ Michael McCusker recorded in his Keville interview that after leaving the Rossville Flats car park after soldiers had started firing there, he went to the rubble barricade and there talked to John Young (who was shot dead a short time later), who told him that two people had been shot at the back of the flats, ie in the car park. This was before Michael McCusker, according to this account, ran to the southern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and found a young man (in our view clearly Hugh Gilmour) lying there.

86.151 This evidence leads us to conclude firstly, that Hugh Gilmour was hit before John Young and secondly, that the shooting in Sector 2 had started before John Young was hit. Michael McCusker told this Inquiry¹ that John Young told him when they met at the rubble barricade, not only that two people had been shot in the car park but also that one of them (Michael Bradley) had been taken (as indeed was the case) to a house in Joseph Place. In his written evidence to this Inquiry,² Sean McCallion told us that after two people had been shot in the area of the car park of the Rossville Flats he came out through Block 1 into Rossville Street, where there were still rioters at the rubble barricade and no shooting was taking place. In our view this evidence makes it probable that people had been shot in Sector 2 before either Michael Kelly or Hugh Gilmour had been shot in Sector 3.

What Hugh Gilmour was doing when he was shot

86.152 As will have been seen from our examination of the witnesses who gave accounts of seeing Hugh Gilmour shot, there are varying accounts of what he was doing at the time. From the nature of his chest wound, he must have been more or less sideways on to the soldier who shot him. We consider that it is probable that shortly before he was shot Hugh Gilmour had been throwing stones at or towards the soldiers, and it is possible that he was about to throw another at the moment when he was shot.

86.153 Earlier in this report¹ we considered in detail the evidence of Bombardier 015, who was observing events from one of the upper windows of the Peter England shirt factory in Little James Street.

86.154 To a significant degree this evidence is consistent with that discussed above.¹ It is inconsistent with the evidence of the shooting of any of the other Sector 3 casualties. Since we are sure, for reasons given later in this report,² that there were no additional unidentified casualties in Sector 3, we are of the view that Bombardier 015 was describing the shooting of Hugh Gilmour. Later in this report,³ we reach the conclusion, for the reasons we give there, that Hugh Gilmour was shot by Private U, who was at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

² Chapter 87

86.155 We are sure that at no stage was Hugh Gilmour armed with any form of lethal weapon. Many of the witnesses to whom we have referred above expressly said so; and there is no evidence that to our minds suggests the contrary. We note that it was implicitly suggested by the representatives of the majority of represented soldiers that PIRA 14, PIRA 26 and the late Colm Keenan – who at the time of Bloody Sunday were members of the Provisional IRA and who, on the accounts of the two who remain alive, were close to Hugh Gilmour when he was shot – may themselves have been armed.¹ PIRA 14 and PIRA 26 denied that this was the case² and we have nothing that suggests to us that their evidence on this point should be rejected. If the suggestion is that Hugh Gilmour was shot by accident by a soldier legitimately aiming at one of these individuals, we reject it, because to our minds it is unlikely in the extreme that anyone would have been so foolish as to produce a weapon in full view of a number of soldiers not far away.

Wound pathology and ballistics

86.167 Dr John Press, then the Assistant State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of Michael McDaid on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Two RUC photographers were also present.² Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Press, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Press also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

86.168 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Press described the following two gunshot wounds:

- (i) An oval entrance wound, measuring 8mm x 5mm, on the left cheek, centred 5cm in front of, and 1cm below, the outer opening of the ear, and 61in above the soles of the feet. The upper margin shelved outwards and was bordered by an arc of abrasion up to 5mm broad. The lower margin was undermined. There were two superficial lacerations at the lower border, each about 3mm long. A probe inserted into the wound extended downwards at about 45° to the horizontal plane, with an inclination backwards of about 30° and a deviation of about 25° to the right.

(ii) A roughly oval exit wound, measuring 3cm x 1.5cm, on the right side of the back, centred 29cm above the level of the iliac crest and 19cm to the right of the midline, and 52in above the soles of the feet. The long axis of the wound was horizontal. The upper margin was undermined while the lower margin shelved outwards. The margins were somewhat ragged and the wound was bordered by a zone of patchy bruising, up to 3cm wide.

86.169 The internal injuries found by Dr Press are described in his report¹ and summarised in his conclusions about the fatal injury, which are as follows:²

“Death was due to a gunshot wound of the neck and chest. A bullet had entered the left cheek about two inches in front of the outer opening of the ear, fracturing the left side of the lower jaw. It had then passed through the mouth, the spine in the neck, fracturing the three lower neck vertebrae and severing the spinal cord, before entering the right chest cavity, fracturing the first two ribs. It had then traversed the upper part of the right lung before leaving the body through the back of the right side of the chest. The injury to the spinal cord would have caused his rapid death.

The injuries were of a type caused by a bullet of high velocity. There was nothing to indicate that the weapon had been fired at close range.

The track of the bullet through the body was downwards and backwards at an angle of about 45° to the horizontal plane and a slight deviation to the right.

If he were erect at the time he was shot then the bullet must have come from above, to his left and slightly in front of him.”

² D92

86.170 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ in his written statement to this Inquiry,² and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Dr Press confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report. He said⁴ that there was a margin of error of at least 5° either way in the estimation of the angle at which the bullet passed through the body.

² D509

⁴ Day 205/193-194

- 86.171 In their report, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan reached conclusions which they summarised as follows:¹

"Michael McDaid was struck by one bullet which hit his left cheek and penetrated through his neck and right chest before exiting at the back.

Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position the track has passed downwards, backwards and from left to right.

It is likely that Michael McDaid's head was turned to the left at the time he was shot since this orientation gives the most direct track of the bullet through the body."

- 86.172 The photographs of Michael McDaid's body taken in the mortuary show the wounds described by Dr Press. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan¹ illustrates the position of the wounds.

86.173 Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan were invited to consider the theory that the angles at which Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young were hit by bullets indicated that these three casualties had been shot from the City Walls. The essence of their conclusions was that it was impossible from consideration of the pathology of the wounds and of measurements of the locality taken by the Northern Ireland Ordnance Survey to say either that it was more or that it was less likely that the fatal shots were fired from the City Walls than that they were fired from Rossville Street. They stated in their report:¹

“Whether the shots were fired downwards from the walls or horizontally at ground level from the Kells Walk direction the deceased would have been bending forward for the shots to have caused the tracks that were found.

If facing towards the walls the deceased would have to have bent forwards at an angle of approximately 40° to align the track through the body with the angle from the ground by Glenfada Park to the walls.

If facing towards a gun at ground level the deceased would have to have bent forwards at an angle of approximately 45° to align the track through the body with a horizontal trajectory.

The difference in angle of shot is therefore only 5°, well within the possible error of measurement.

Consequently, our opinion is that the shots which killed WILLIAM NASH, JOHN YOUNG and MICHAEL McDAID could have been fired from either the street or from the City Walls.

However, it is clear from the injuries that all three men were facing in the general direction from which the shots came. It follows that if the shots originated from the City Walls the deceased would have to have had their backs towards Kells Walk at the time they were shot. Conversely if the shots originated from the Kells Walk side of the barricade they would have to have been facing in that direction. Witness testimony and not pathology or ballistics is therefore the key to resolving this matter.”

86.174 Later in this report¹ we consider whether there was shooting from the City Walls.

¹ Chapter 167

86.175 Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of Michael McDaid under the direction of Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the same department.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out this finding:

“A hole approx 1" x 1" in the right back of the jacket with corresponding damage to the undergarments is consistent with bullet exit.”

² D79

86.176 Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan also examined the jacket of Michael McDaid, which had been retained by his family. Photographs were taken of the clothing.¹ In their report,² Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan said:

"As can be seen in the photographs of Michael McDaid's jacket, there was a bullet exit hole just to the rear of the seam behind the right armpit. The right side seam was split and there was heavy bloodstaining in the area of the lower left back of the jacket as well as smaller patches elsewhere.

The position of the exit hole in the jacket is consistent with the position of the exit wound in the deceased's back."

² E2.25

Tests for firearm discharge and explosives residue

86.177 Dr Martin tested the jacket that Michael McDaid was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. Dr Martin detected what he considered to be a "higher than normal" density of lead particles on the jacket. He also detected a "large particle of lead" on the swab from the back of the right hand, but no lead particles on the other hand swabs. He stated in his report the conclusion that the nature and distribution of lead particles on the swabs and jacket was similar to that produced by discharge gases from firearms.¹ Dr Martin also detected lead particles on Michael McDaid's trousers, at levels "within the same range" as those found on the jacket, but he did not comment on these in his report as he only examined the trousers at a later stage.²

² D81; D605-D606; WT9.36

86.178 In his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² John Bradley said that he had employed Michael McDaid and knew that he was left-handed.

86.179 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin said that the results of his tests for lead particles were consistent with Michael McDaid having been handling a firearm. He said that the knowledge that Michael McDaid was left-handed would not make any essential difference to this conclusion, although the absence of lead on his left hand would have been unusual if Michael McDaid had been firing with that hand and if the hand had been uncovered. Dr Martin said that it was possible that the particle on the right hand had come from a fragmenting bullet,² and that a higher than normal density of lead particles on the jacket would have been expected if Michael McDaid had been lying in an area where guns were being discharged or bullets were ricocheting.³ Dr Martin acknowledged that the particle on the right hand and the general distribution of particles on the jacket and trousers were consistent with contamination from the firing of a weapon up to 30 feet away.⁴

³ WT9.30

² WT9.19-WT9.20

⁴ WT9.35-WT9.36

86.180 Dr John Lloyd, the independent scientific expert engaged by this Inquiry, summarised in his report¹ his overall conclusions about the tests for lead particles conducted by Dr Martin. He considered that, in view of the lack of control testing and the likelihood of spurious contamination, Dr Martin's results were of no evidential value.

86.181 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin accepted that unless there was evidence from other sources to indicate an association between any of the deceased and a weapon, it would be unwise to interpret his findings "as other than contamination".

86.182 In relation to Michael McDaid, Dr Lloyd said in his report¹ that the APC in which the body was transported to Altnagelvin Hospital was likely to have been heavily and continuously contaminated with firearms residue. He said that the results obtained by Dr Martin in this case were "explicable solely on this basis". In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Dr Lloyd confirmed that he meant that this could by itself explain the contamination, rather than that it was the only possible explanation.

² Day 227/44-46

86.183 Dr Martin said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he agreed with Dr Lloyd's views on this matter.

86.184 Dr Lloyd said in his report¹ that the particle found on the right hand could well have been derived from contamination of the clothing, and was not evidence that Michael McDaid or anyone close to him had been using a firearm. Dr Martin was prepared to accept that this was so.²

² Day 226/96-97

86.185 Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of Michael McDaid for explosives residue. None was detected.¹

¹ D75

86.186 In these circumstances we consider that there is no valid scientific evidence that Michael McDaid had been handling firearms or had been close to someone who was handling a firearm, or that he had been in contact with explosives.

Michael McDaid's clothing

86.187 Michael McDaid was wearing a green checked sports jacket, a blue shirt, blue and orange tie and grey trousers.¹

¹ D73

Where Michael McDaid was when he was shot

86.188 Michael McDaid was shot dead at or very close to the rubble barricade. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Alexander Nash, who was himself later wounded at the rubble barricade, said that he went out to his son William, who was lying dead "Just in the middle of the wee barricade". He said that his son was lying between two other bodies, which he confirmed were those of Michael McDaid and John Young.¹

86.189 Part of the ABC film footage shows a man raising his arm behind the rubble barricade.¹ We are sure that this is Alexander Nash and that he was close to where his son was lying. We show below a still from this film.

86.190 We have no photographs or film that show the bodies of Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young at the rubble barricade. However, from the foregoing evidence we are satisfied that they were shot somewhere close behind the western side of the rubble barricade. As will be seen, there is other evidence that supports this conclusion.

When Michael McDaid was shot

86.191 Michael McDaid must have been shot after Michael Kelly, since in Robert White's photograph shown above¹ he can be seen walking through the rubble barricade at the stage when Michael Kelly was lying on the ground. He was also, in our view, shot after Hugh Gilmour, since, as discussed above,² Michael McCusker recalled speaking to John Young just before going to the south end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats where he saw Hugh Gilmour lying on the ground. For reasons we give below,³ we have concluded that Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young were all shot within a very short space of time.

³ Paragraphs 86.287–364

² Paragraphs 86.126–129 and 86.150–151

What Michael McDaid was doing when he was shot

86.192 The evidence of what Michael McDaid was doing when he was shot is confused and inconsistent. We return to consider this matter¹ after discussing the shooting of William Nash and John Young.

Whether Michael McDaid (and William Nash and John Young) were shot from the City Walls

86.193 It is convenient at this point to deal with the theory, canvassed at the outset of this Inquiry but not in the end pursued by any of the interested parties, that Michael McDaid, as well as William Nash and John Young, were shot from the City Walls. As already noted, we consider later in this report¹ whether there was firing from the City Walls.

86.194 This theory, which was based on the tracks of the bullets that passed through the bodies of the three casualties, was put forward before this Inquiry was established, by Robert Breglio, a ballistics expert from New York City, and Dr Raymond McClean, a local general practitioner who had attended some of the casualties in the Bogside on Bloody Sunday and had also attended many of the autopsies. Mr Hugh Thomas, a consultant surgeon from Merthyr Tydfil, also supported the theory that these three casualties were shot from above. He told Alex Thomson of Channel 4 News in 1997 that the “shot could only have come from a higher level”¹ and in his written statement to this Inquiry said: “... in my opinion the chances of the three men shot at the barricade stooping to the same angle, being shot in exactly the same pattern ... from in front, and especially from ground level must be minute”.²

² M90.4

86.195 As we have already noted, the suggestion was considered by Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan,¹ whose conclusion was that it was impossible from consideration of the pathology of the wounds and of the measurements of the locality taken by the Northern Ireland Ordnance Survey to say either that it was more or that it was less likely that the three fatal shots were fired from the City Walls than that they were fired from Rossville Street. We accept this conclusion.

- 86.196 It is clear from the injuries they sustained that all three men were facing in the general direction from which the shots were fired.
- 86.197 As will be seen,¹ while there is some disagreement among the civilian witnesses as to the direction in which Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young were facing immediately before, and when, they were shot, it is our conclusion that the weight of the evidence shows that the three were facing north towards the soldiers in Rossville Street. As will have been seen,² several photographs taken on Bloody Sunday show civilians at the barricade, in the main, facing the soldiers in Rossville Street or fleeing west towards Glenfada Park North. No soldier has acknowledged firing from the City Walls towards the rubble barricade. We consider it unlikely in the extreme that all three of these casualties would have been facing south, when there were soldiers north of them in the Rossville Street area. For these reasons, we are sure that Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young were shot from the area of Rossville Street north of the rubble barricade when they were more or less facing the soldiers who were in that area.

² Paragraphs 68.32 and 86.52

Whether Michael McDaid was arrested and put into an Army vehicle from which he escaped

- 86.198 It is also convenient to consider at this point the evidence that some witnesses gave to the effect that Michael McDaid had been arrested and put into the back of an Army vehicle from which he had escaped before he was shot.
- 86.199 This evidence is irreconcilable with the bulk of the civilian and photographic evidence. John Begley, who made the claim in two statements in 1972,¹ told us in his written statement to this Inquiry that he was inebriated when he made those statements and now has no recollection of the day.² Ciaran Donnelly, who described the arrest of a youth in his written statement for the Widgery Inquiry and said that he thought that he had been told at some stage that the youth's name was McDaid,³ acknowledged in his oral evidence to this Inquiry that what he witnessed had looked "extremely like" the scene shown in Jeffrey Morris's photographs of the arrest of William John Dillon,⁴ which we have reproduced above in our consideration of the events of Sector 2.⁵ At one stage in his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Frankie Boyle said that Michael McDaid was arrested by three soldiers and placed in an APC south of the barricade,⁶ though elsewhere in his evidence he told us that the APC was "On the waste ground facing Rossville Flats."⁷ He said that CS gas was fired into the APC before Michael McDaid escaped, only to be shot, apparently in the back, within 20 yards of the APC.⁸ However, no APC moved south of the rubble barricade until, as we explain later in this report,⁹ Lieutenant N's APC was driven forward to collect three bodies from the barricade, including that of Michael McDaid, who had not been shot in the back. The photograph we have shown above¹⁰ of Michael McDaid walking through the rubble barricade, appearing composed and neatly dressed, hardly depicts a person who has just escaped from arrest after being exposed to CS gas. We believe that these witnesses and others who described the purported arrest of Michael McDaid were mistaken. In our view they had either confused Michael McDaid with someone whom they had seen being arrested, or had come to believe that they had seen something which we are sure that they did not.

Where Michael McDaid was taken after he was shot

86.200 Michael McDaid lay at the rubble barricade until he was picked up by soldiers and put into an APC, together with William Nash and John Young. These three casualties were then taken in the APC to Altnagelvin Hospital. We deal in detail below¹ with the circumstances in which the bodies were collected and with the manner in which they were handled.

William Nash

Biographical details

86.201 William Nash, sometimes known as “Stiff” Nash, was 19 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He lived in Dunree Gardens, Creggan, with his parents, four of his seven brothers, and his five sisters. One of his brothers had been married on the day before Bloody Sunday and the celebrations had continued late into the night. Their mother had missed the wedding, as she had suffered a heart attack a few days earlier and was recovering in Altnagelvin Hospital. William Nash was employed as a docker.¹

Prior movements

86.202 William Nash's cousin Charles Christopher Nash told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that they went on the march together and became separated somewhere near Barrier 14.

86.203 According to a Sunday Times research note, William Nash went on the march with his friends Pat Ward and Tommy Hazlett. His brother Paddy Nash said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that a journalist from the Sunday Times Insight Team had interviewed his mother. We therefore consider it probable that Mrs Nash was the source of this piece of information. Paddy Nash confirmed that it was likely that his brother had been on the march with Pat Ward but said that he did not recall Tommy Hazlett.² Another brother, John Nash, said in his interview with Jimmy McGovern³ that he thought that his brother had gone on the march with Pat Ward but not with Tommy Hazlett, who had been ill. Neither Pat Ward nor Tommy Hazlett gave evidence.

86.204 Three photographs taken by Constable A Brown of the RUC, a photograph taken by Frederick Hoare of the Belfast Telegraph and a photograph taken by John Walters of the Daily Mail show William Nash in front of Barrier 14 while rioting was in progress. Counsel for the Nash family accepted that in the fourth of these photographs he is "throwing something",¹ though to us it looks as though the photograph was taken just after he had thrown something.

William Nash

Man identified as William Nash

86.206 With rather less confidence, John Nash identified his brother at the corner of the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North in an earlier photograph, also taken by Ciaran Donnelly.¹

86.207 It is difficult (as John Nash himself acknowledged) to be sure of the identification of his brother in the earlier photograph,¹ which shows the group behind the rubble barricade. Nor are we convinced that William Nash appears in the later photograph (the first of the two reproduced above²), which, as we explain later in this report,³ shows the group carrying the body of Michael Kelly, which had been lying near the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, where Fr Bradley had given Michael Kelly the last rites. Our reasons for not accepting this identification are as follows.

³ Paragraph 92.4

² Paragraph 86.205

86.208 The scene shortly before this photograph was taken, when Fr Bradley and others were around the body of Michael Kelly at the south-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North, is shown in two photographs taken by Liam Mailey.

Helen

Barry
Liddy

86.209 The next photograph that Liam Mailey took was the following.

86.210 An examination of the different positions of people seen in this photograph as compared with the immediately preceding photograph¹ shows that these two photographs were taken within a very short time of each other. When the first was taken, Michael Kelly's body was still on the ground. Barry Liddy is shown in that photograph kneeling on the right of the group around Michael Kelly, wearing a hat. A tall lady in a trouser suit (Helen Johnston²) is behind him, looking towards Rossville Street. The second man to the right of Helen Johnston is a tall man wearing a tie. In the next photograph³ the body of Michael Kelly has been lifted but not moved very far. Fr Bradley and Helen Johnston have moved towards the south wall of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. Barry Liddy has stood up and the tall man has moved slightly to the north. In the photograph taken by Ciaran Donnelly,⁴ which is said to show William Nash, the body of Michael Kelly has been carried further to the north. A significantly larger group has gathered at the south wall and the tall man appears to have moved to the western corner of the wall and turned round in order to look at the body. This can only have happened after Liam Mailey had taken the photograph showing Fr Bradley walking in the direction of Rossville Street.⁵

86.211 Fr Bradley told us that he thought that this photograph¹ showed him "walking towards the gable end having been told that someone had been shot at the barricade".² As we discuss further when considering the events of Sector 4,³ Fr Bradley said that he was about to accompany those who had lifted Michael Kelly when his attention was drawn to three or four other people lying at the rubble barricade and he made his way in that direction and found that they had been shot. He recalled that during this period he could hear shooting, and he had the strong impression that this was coming from the northern end of Rossville Street.⁴

86.212 Fr O’Keeffe, who was also there, thought that he had seen bodies at the rubble barricade by the time this photograph was taken.¹

86.213 The only casualties of gunfire who could have been lying at the rubble barricade at this stage were William Nash, Michael McDaid and John Young. In these circumstances we are of the view that the identification of William Nash in Ciaran Donnelly’s photograph¹ of the group carrying Michael Kelly is mistaken.

Medical and scientific evidence

Wound pathology and ballistics

86.214 Dr John Press, then the Assistant State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of William Nash on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Three other doctors and two RUC photographers were also present.² Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Press, Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Press also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

86.215 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Press described the following two gunshot wounds:

(i) A round entrance wound, 7mm in diameter, on the right side of the body, centred 4cm above, and 6.5cm medial to, the nipple, and 53in above the soles of the feet. The wound was bordered by a zone of abrasion, 1–2mm broad. A probe inserted into the wound passed downwards at 45° to the horizontal plane, with an inclination backwards of about 40° and no deviation to the left or right.

(ii) A roughly oval exit wound, measuring 17mm x 7mm, on the right side of the back, centred 4.5cm above the iliac crest and 4.5cm to the right of the midline, about midway between the iliac crest and the 12th right rib, and 42in above the soles of the feet. The long axis of the wound was directed downwards and to the left. The margins were slightly ragged. There was an arc of abrasion up to 4mm broad along the lower margin of the wound.

86.216 The internal injuries found by Dr Press are described in his report¹ and summarised in his conclusions about the fatal injury, which are as follows:²

“Death was due to a gunshot wound of the chest. A bullet had entered the right side of the chest about 1½ inches above and about 2½ inches to the left of the nipple. It had grazed the upper border of the fourth right rib as it entered the right chest cavity. It had then passed through the front margin of the upper part of the right lung, through the right atrium of the heart, the heart sac before entering the abdominal cavity through the diaphragm, lacerating the inferior vena cava, the largest vein in the body, as it did so. It had then lacerated the liver, the right suprarenal gland and the right kidney before leaving the body through the right side of the back wall of the abdomen. The combined effect of these injuries would have caused his rapid death.

The injuries were of a type caused by a bullet of high velocity. There was nothing to indicate that the weapon had been fired at close range.

The track of the bullet through the body was from front to back with an inclination downwards of 45° to the horizontal plane but no deviation to right or left.

If he were erect at the time he was shot then the bullet must have come from in front and slightly above him.”

² D123

86.217 Dr Press also described a number of minor external injuries.¹ His findings about these injuries were as follows:²

“Abrasions on the forehead, neck, right knee and right shin were probably caused when he collapsed. They were of trivial nature and played no part in the death.”

² D123

86.218 A test on a sample of William Nash's blood showed that the alcohol content was 121mg/100ml.¹ Dr Press commented in his autopsy report that this concentration was not high and would not have accelerated death.²

² D123

86.219 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Press confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report, except that he said that his description of the direction from which the bullet must have come would have been more accurate if "downwards" had been substituted for "slightly above him".

86.220 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Press referred to the description in his autopsy report of an arc of abrasion around the wound on the right side of the back. He said:

"Although it is not unusual to get an abrasion at an exit wound site, abrasion of the wound is normally associated with an entrance wound. I have been asked therefore to consider whether it is possible that the wound in the right side of the back was an entry wound. I think this is very unlikely in the circumstances. The reason for this is that the wound on the right chest has the typical appearance of an entrance wound and the most likely explanation is that a single bullet entered from the front and exited the right back. The wound on the back also has all the characteristics of an exit wound. It is larger than the wound on the chest and is less regular in outline being roughly oval. I do not believe the arc of abrasion on the lower margin of the wound is significant in the circumstances."

86.221 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Press agreed with a suggestion that the abrasions on the neck of William Nash could have been caused when the body was "manhandled" after death. He said that there was a margin of error of at least 5° either way in the estimation of the angle at which the bullet passed through the body.²

² Day 205/193-194

86.222 In their report,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan observed that the mortuary photographs revealed more extensive abrasion around the exit wound than Dr Press had described in his autopsy report. They noted that the abrasion appeared to occupy the whole circumference of the wound and to be more prominent at the upper right border. Splits, both deep and superficial, could be seen within the ring of abrasion. They summarised their overall conclusions as follows:

“A single bullet in the right chest struck WILLIAM NASH. Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position the angle of impact is front to back and from above downwards.

The appearance of the exit abrasion strongly suggests a shored wound, possibly due to clothing pulled tight against the skin.

The appearances of the ‘other injuries’ are consistent with minor blunt trauma.

The injuries to the shins are typical of ‘running into’ or ‘tripping over’ blunt objects.

The injuries to the head are also minor and are due to contact with a blunt object or objects. They are consistent with a fall or collapse to the ground.

There is nothing in the appearances, patterns or distribution of these injuries alone or together that would indicate that they were deliberately inflicted.”

86.223 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Shepherd said that clothing would only have caused shoring of the exit wound if it had been pulled tightly across the back for some reason. It would not have been enough that the clothing was tight-fitting. Dr Shepherd said that there were many possible reasons why clothing might have been pulled tightly across William Nash’s back. One explanation might be that he was bending when he was shot.

86.224 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ after reviewing the photographs, Dr Press said that he agreed with Dr Shepherd that the abrasion around the exit wound was more extensive than he had described in his report. Dr Press also agreed that shoring of the wound was the “most likely explanation” of the abrasion. We accept this conclusion.

86.225 The photographs of William Nash’s body taken in the mortuary show the wounds and minor external injuries described by Dr Press. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan¹ illustrates the position of these wounds and injuries.

86.226 In relation to William Nash, as in relation to Michael McDaid and John Young, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan reached the conclusion that it was impossible from consideration of the pathology of the wounds and of measurements of the locality taken by the Northern Ireland Ordnance Survey to say either that it was more or that it was less likely that the fatal shot was fired from the City Walls than that it was fired from Rossville Street.¹ For the reasons that we have already given,² we have rejected the theory that any of these three casualties was shot from the City Walls.

- 86.227 Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of William Nash under the direction of Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the same department.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out these findings:

“A small hole in the front of the waistcoat and shirt with corresponding damage to the undergarments is consistent with bullet entry. A larger hole in the back of the jacket with similar undergarment damage is consistent with bullet exit.”

Tests for firearm discharge and explosives residue

- 86.228 Dr Martin tested the jacket that William Nash was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. He detected lead particles on the swabs from the web, back and palm of the left hand, but none on the swabs from the right hand and no significant number on the jacket. Dr Martin stated in his report the conclusion that the nature and distribution of lead particles on the swabs from the left hand was similar to that produced by exposure to discharge gases from firearms.¹ Dr Martin also detected lead particles on William Nash’s trousers² but did not comment on these in his report.

² D110; D605-D606

- 86.229 In Eamonn McCann’s book Bloody Sunday in Derry: What Really Happened,¹ William Nash’s sister Margaret McGilloway is reported to have said that William Nash was left-handed and that the lead particles were found on his right hand. She may have meant to say the opposite, since the lead particles were in fact detected on the left hand; and in his written statement to this Inquiry,² her brother Paddy Nash said that William Nash was right-handed. Counsel for the Nash family accepted³ that Frederick Hoare’s photograph (reproduced above)⁴ shows William Nash “throwing something”. The photograph may actually have been taken just after he had thrown something, but it appears in any event that the action was performed with his right hand. In our view William Nash was right-handed.

² AN7.4

- 86.230 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin confirmed what he had said in his report. He also said that the quantity of lead particles found on the left hand of William Nash was as he would have expected it to be if the deceased had been holding that hand forward of the breech mechanism of a weapon while using his gloved right hand to fire it.²
- ¹ WT9.30; WT9.35 ² WT9.13
- 86.231 The clothing removed from the body of William Nash at the autopsy did not include a glove.¹ There is no evidence that he was wearing a glove on his right hand when he was shot.
- ¹ D119
- 86.232 Dr John Lloyd, the independent scientific expert engaged by this Inquiry, summarised in his report¹ his overall conclusions about the tests for lead particles conducted by Dr Martin. He considered that, in view of the lack of control testing and the likelihood of spurious contamination, Dr Martin's results were of no evidential value.
- ¹ E1.51-E1.52
- 86.233 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin accepted that unless there was evidence from other sources to indicate an association between any of the deceased and a weapon, it would be unwise to interpret his findings "as other than contamination".
- ¹ Day 226/2
- 86.234 In relation to William Nash, Dr Lloyd repeated in his report¹ the observation that he had made in the case of Michael McDaid,² that the APC in which the body was transported to Altnagelvin Hospital was likely to have been heavily and continuously contaminated with firearms residue. He said that the results obtained by Dr Martin were "explicable solely on this basis". In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Dr Lloyd confirmed that he meant that this could by itself explain the contamination, rather than that it was the only possible explanation.
- ¹ E1.48 ² E1.45 ³ Day 227/45-46
- 86.235 Dr Martin said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he agreed with Dr Lloyd's views on this matter.

- 86.236 Dr Lloyd pointed out in his report¹ that in the laboratory notes² Dr Martin had recorded that he had detected five lead particles on the jacket of William Nash and 14 on the trousers. Dr Lloyd said³ that it was the general, but not the invariable, rule that the deposition of firearms discharge residue became weaker as the distance from the point of origin increased. Hence the results in William Nash's case could more readily be explained on the assumption that the source of the particles, or at least the majority of the particles, was other than the firing of a gun by the deceased. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁴ Dr Martin accepted that this was "fair reasoning".

86.237 Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of William Nash for explosives residue. None was detected.¹

¹ D105

86.238 In these circumstances we consider that there is no valid scientific evidence that William Nash had been handling firearms or had been close to someone who was handling a firearm, or that he had been in contact with explosives.

William Nash's clothing

86.239 William Nash was wearing a brown corduroy jacket, brown waistcoat, yellow flowered shirt and tie, and brown trousers.¹ The jacket and trousers are described in a police report as a suit.²

Where William Nash was when he was shot

86.240 For the reasons we have given when discussing the shooting of Michael McDaid,¹ we are satisfied that William Nash was shot just behind the western side of the rubble barricade, close to Michael McDaid and John Young.

When William Nash was shot

86.241 For reasons given below,¹ we are sure that William Nash was shot at about the same time as Michael McDaid and John Young. It follows in our view, for the reasons we have given when discussing the shooting of Michael McDaid,² that he was shot after Michael Kelly and Hugh Gilmour.

Where William Nash was taken after he was shot

86.243 William Nash lay at the rubble barricade until he was picked up by soldiers and put into an APC, together with Michael McDaid and John Young. These three casualties were then taken in the APC to Altnagelvin Hospital. We deal in detail below¹ with the circumstances in which the bodies were collected and with the manner in which they were handled.

John Young

Biographical details

86.244 John Young was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was the youngest member of his family and lived in Westway, Creggan, with his parents and one of his three sisters. He was employed as a salesman in the men's clothing shop of John Temple Ltd in Waterloo Place.¹

Prior movements

86.245 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Brian McCay told us that he and Noel McLaughlin went on the march with John Young and became separated from him in Lecky Road.

86.246 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Jerry Mallett told us that he went on the march with John Hegarty and that they were walking behind John Young and Barry Chambers.

86.247 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Eugene Roddy told us that he went on the march with John Young and became separated from him at the eastern end of William Street. Eugene Roddy said that John Young did not throw any stones while they were together.

¹ AR17.1-AR17.2

86.248 In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ and in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Joseph McKinney said that he called for John Young at his house at about 2.00pm and went on the march with him and Eugene Roddy. Joseph McKinney was with John Young at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street as the crowd was directed towards Free Derry Corner. This was his last recollection of seeing John Young. Joseph McKinney went on to Barrier 14 but did not see John Young there.

² Day 76/108-109

86.249 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Noel Doherty told us that he saw John Young near Barrier 14, pleading with people in the crowd to move back and go to Free Derry Corner. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Noel Doherty said that he did not see John Young throw any stones.

² Day 82/3-4

86.250 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Matthew Connolly told us that he had been on the march with John McKeever, from the Creggan to William Street. He thought that John McKeever had met John Young on the march and that the three of them stood talking at the point marked "A" on the plan attached to his statement² (in William Street a short distance west of the junction with Rossville Street) while Matthew Connolly, who was a steward, directed the marchers down Rossville Street. About two minutes after Matthew Connolly had heard baton rounds that he thought were being fired from the eastern end of William Street, he and John McKeever moved down Rossville Street. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Matthew Connolly said that he could not say where John Young had gone at this stage. However, an annotation in Philip Jacobson's handwriting on the note of his and Peter Pringle's interview of Matthew Connolly on 14th March 1972⁴ suggests that Matthew Connolly told the interviewers that he did not see John Young on Bloody Sunday until a later stage of events, when Matthew Connolly was at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North.

86.251 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Seamus O'Donnell said that he arrived at Barrier 14 and threw a few stones. At some point, he and John Young were behind a corrugated tin sheet used as a defence against baton rounds. After a while, Seamus O'Donnell moved away because he could not see the soldiers or throw stones from behind the tin shield. Seamus O'Donnell described himself as a very experienced rioter. He did not say whether he had seen John Young throw stones.

The representatives of the family of John Young have accepted that in the third of these photographs he appears to be throwing a stone at soldiers behind the barrier and that in the fourth he appears to have a stone in his right hand.² In our view John Young was taking part in the rioting at Barrier 14.

86.253 In her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Phyllis McLaren (then Phyllis Browne) told us that her friend Agnes McGuinness introduced her to John Young as they stood in Rossville Street near the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. It appears from the context that the conversation took place shortly before the paratroopers entered the Bogside. In her oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Agnes McGuinness agreed that this conversation might have happened, although she did not recall it.

² Day 97/18

86.254 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Jerry Mallett told us that he followed the march as it turned down Rossville Street. He went to the point marked “A” on the plan attached to his statement² (near the gap between the two blocks of Joseph Place). John Young was with him in that location when the speeches were beginning at Free Derry Corner. Jerry Mallett gave the impression, but did not say in terms, that John Young had been near him all the time until then; but the photographs of John Young in front of Barrier 14 during the riot show that this cannot be so (unless Jerry Mallett, contrary to his evidence, had also gone to Barrier 14). According to Jerry Mallett, while he and John Young were at point A, he pulled off John Young’s hat and ran with it towards Free Derry Corner. John Young chased him and retrieved the hat, and they both returned to somewhere around point A. Very soon after this, shooting began. Jerry Mallett ran towards Free Derry Corner. He became separated from John Young and did not see in which direction John Young ran.

² AM21.4

86.255 We have already referred¹ to Michael McCusker’s evidence when considering the shooting of Hugh Gilmour. He told us that John Young had approached the rubble barricade from the direction of Free Derry Corner.²

¹ Paragraphs 86.126–129 and 86.150–151

² Day 148/54

86.256 Our assessment of this evidence is that between the time when John Young was near Barrier 14 and the time when he was shot at the rubble barricade, he had gone to a location somewhere in the area of Joseph Place; and that the conversation with Phyllis Browne and Agnes McGuinness took place when John Young was on his way from Barrier 14 to that area.

Medical and scientific evidence

Wound pathology and ballistics

86.257 Dr John Press, then the Assistant State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of John Young on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Three other doctors and two RUC photographers were also present.² Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Press, Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Press also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

86.258 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Press described the following two gunshot wounds:

(i) An oval entrance wound, measuring 8mm x 5mm, on the left cheek just to the left of the nose, centred 1cm below the inner corner of the left eye and 64in above the soles of the feet. The long axis of the wound was directed downwards and slightly to the left. The wound was bordered by a zone of abrasion, 2–4mm broad. A laceration, 4mm long, extended downwards and to the left from the lower margin of the wound. A probe inserted into the wound extended downwards at an angle of about 45° to the horizontal plane and backwards at an angle of about 40°, with a deviation of about 10–15° to the right.

(ii) A roughly rectangular exit wound, measuring 2cm x 1cm, on the left side of the back, centred 53cm (it appears possible that this was an error for 35cm) above the level of the iliac crests and about 4.5cm to the left of the midline and 52in above the soles of the feet. The long axis of the wound was directed downwards and to the left. The upper margin was undermined while the lower margin shelved outwards. The margins were somewhat ragged.

- 86.259 The internal injuries found by Dr Press are described in his report¹ and summarised in his conclusions about the fatal injury, which are as follows:²

“Death was due to a gunshot wound of the head and neck. A bullet had entered the left cheek just below the inner corner of the left eye and had caused fractures of the base of the skull associated with some bruising of the brain. It had then passed downwards and backwards through the spine in the neck severing the spinal cord before leaving the body through the back of the chest a little to the left of the midline. The injury to the spinal cord would have caused his rapid death.

The injuries were of a type caused by a bullet of high velocity. There was nothing to indicate that the weapon had been fired at close range.

The track of the bullet through the body was downwards and backwards at an angle of about 45° to the horizontal plane and a slight deviation to the right.

If he were erect at the time he was shot then the bullet must have come from above and slightly in front of him.”

² D154

- 86.260 Dr Press also described a number of minor external injuries.¹ His findings about these injuries were as follows:²

“Abrasions on the face, the tip of the tongue and the back of each hand were probably caused when he collapsed. They were of trivial nature and played no part in the death.”

² D154

- 86.261 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Press agreed that the similarity between the tracks of the bullets in this case and that of Michael McDaid would, combined with evidence that the two men were close to each other when they were shot, suggest that they were very likely to have been shot from the same position.

- 86.262 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Press confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report.

¹ D512

86.263 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Press said that there was a margin of error of at least 5° either way in the estimation of the angle at which the bullet passed through the body.

86.264 In their report,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan reached conclusions which they summarised as follows:

“A single bullet struck John YOUNG in the left cheek and the bullet traversed the neck and exited through the back.

Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position the track has passed downwards and backwards with only slight deviation to the left.

The path of the bullet past the base of the skull and through the vertebrae of the neck and upper chest suggests strongly that John YOUNG’s head was tipped backwards when he was shot.

The other injuries are minor and due to blunt trauma. The injuries to the face are consistent with a collapse, the injuries to the hands may have been caused in the same way but other forms of minor blunt trauma cannot be excluded.”

86.265 The reference to a slight deviation to the left contrasts with Dr Press’s description of a slight deviation to the right. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Shepherd said that if there was any deviation in either direction it was only minimal.

86.266 The photographs of John Young’s body taken in the mortuary show the wounds and minor external injuries described by Dr Press. We have examined these photographs but do not reproduce them here. A diagram appended to the report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan¹ illustrates the position of these wounds and injuries, with the exception of what Dr Press described in his autopsy report as an abrasion on the tip of the tongue.

86.267 In their report,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan said the photographs showed that what Dr Press had described as an abrasion was not in fact an injury, but post-mortem drying of part of the tongue that had protruded from between the lips. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² Dr Press said that he found it difficult to comment on this view, but that his impression at the time had been that there was an abrasion on the tongue due to contact with the ground. He thought that photographs could sometimes be a little deceptive. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ Dr Shepherd said that he had no doubt at all that the photographs showed post-mortem drying of the tongue. He pointed out that if the tongue had been injured by contact with the ground there would also have been injury to the lips and probably to the nose. We accept Dr Shepherd's view on this matter.

³ Day 229/7-8

² Day 205/166-168

86.268 In relation to John Young, as in relation to Michael McDaid and William Nash, Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan reached the conclusion that it was impossible from consideration of the pathology of the wounds and of measurements of the locality taken by the Northern Ireland Ordnance Survey to say either that it was more or that it was less likely that the fatal shot was fired from the City Walls than that it was fired from Rossville Street.¹

86.269 Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of John Young under the direction of Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the same department.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out this finding:

"A 1" long hole in the back of the jacket with corresponding undergarment damage is consistent with bullet exit."

² D140

86.270 Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan also examined the clothing of John Young, which had been retained by his family. Photographs were taken of the clothing.¹ In their report,² Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan stated:

"It can be seen from our photographs of John Young's jacket and shirt that the bullet exited through the back of the clothing at a point to the left of the mid-line. The bullet exited essentially side-on causing the elongated damage visible in the photographs.

The more extensive damage to the shirt is due either to the forces of the bullet being dissipated in the light cloth, causing it to tear or, to the shirt being slightly crumpled as the bullet passed through it.

Both the shirt and the jacket were extensively bloodstained, as can be seen in the photographs.

No further bullet damage was found on the clothing."

Tests for firearm discharge and explosives residue

86.271 Dr Martin tested the jacket that John Young was wearing when he was shot, and swabs taken from his hands, for the presence of lead particles. Dr Martin detected what he considered to be a “higher than normal” density of lead particles on the jacket. He also detected lead particles on the swabs from the web, back and palm of the left hand, but none on the swabs from the right hand. He stated in his report the conclusion that the nature and distribution of lead particles on the swabs and jacket was similar to that produced by discharge gases from firearms.¹ Dr Martin also detected lead particles on John Young’s trousers,² at levels “within the same range” as those found on the jacket, but he did not comment on these in his report as he only examined the trousers at a later stage.

² D141; D605-D606; WT9.36

86.272 As we have noted above,¹ the representatives of the family of John Young have accepted² that in a photograph taken by Kenneth Mason he appears to be throwing a stone at soldiers behind Barrier 14 and that in a photograph taken by Fulvio Grimaldi he appears to have a stone in his hand. In each case, the stone is held in the right hand, suggesting that John Young was right-handed.

86.273 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin said that the results of his tests for lead particles were consistent with John Young having been handling or firing a weapon. Dr Martin said² that the density of lead particles found on John Young’s clothing could have resulted from the discharge of weapons up to 30 feet away or from fragmentation of bullets around him, but that this would not explain the high density of particles detected on his left hand. However, Dr Martin accepted that it was possible that these particles could have been transferred to John Young’s left hand if one or more paratroopers whose own hands were contaminated with lead particles had held it.

² WT9.30; WT9.35-WT9.36

86.274 Dr John Lloyd, the independent scientific expert engaged by this Inquiry, summarised in his report¹ his overall conclusions about the tests for lead particles conducted by Dr Martin. He considered that, in view of the lack of control testing and the likelihood of spurious contamination, Dr Martin’s results were of no evidential value.

86.275 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin accepted that unless there was evidence from other sources to indicate an association between any of the deceased and a weapon, it would be unwise to interpret his findings “as other than contamination”.

86.276 In relation to John Young, Dr Lloyd repeated in his report¹ the observation that he had made in the case of Michael McDaid,² that the APC in which the body was transported to Altnagelvin Hospital was likely to have been heavily and continuously contaminated with firearms residue. He said that the results obtained by Dr Martin were “explicable solely on this basis”. ² E1.45

86.277 Dr Martin said in his oral evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he agreed with Dr Lloyd’s views on this matter.

86.278 In the laboratory notes¹ Dr Martin had recorded that he had detected four lead particles on the left hand of John Young, “some smears” on the web of that hand, and 15 particles on the jacket and 34 on the trousers. In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,² Dr Martin said that a person operating the bolt of a rifle might acquire a smear of lead on the palm of his hand, but Dr Martin did not attach the same significance to lead smears elsewhere on the hand.

86.279 Dr Lloyd said in his report¹ that it was the general, but not the invariable, rule that the deposition of firearms discharge residue became weaker as the distance from the point of origin increased. He said in his report² and confirmed in his oral evidence to this Inquiry³ that the distribution of particles in John Young’s case was not consistent with him having used a firearm or having been beside someone using a firearm.

³ Day 227/49-50

² E1.49

86.280 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin effectively accepted those views. He conceded that he did not now understand why he had told the Widgery Inquiry that the density of particles on the left hand was too high to be explained as the result of the discharge of weapons up to 30 feet away or of bullet fragmentation.

86.281 Alan Hall, then a Senior Scientific Officer in the same department as Dr Martin, examined the outer clothing of John Young for explosives residue. None was detected.¹

Where John Young was taken after he was shot

86.286 John Young lay at the rubble barricade until he was picked up by soldiers and put into an APC, together with Michael McDaid and William Nash. These three casualties were then taken in the APC to Altnagelvin Hospital. We deal in detail below¹ with the circumstances in which the bodies were collected and with the manner in which they were handled.

What Michael McDaid, William Nash and John Young were doing when they were shot

86.287 In the case of John Young, as in the cases of Michael McDaid and William Nash, much of the evidence of what he was doing when he was shot is confused and inconsistent. This does not surprise us, since the witnesses were seeking to recall horrific and fast-moving events and, as we have previously observed,¹ people who have witnessed the same event very often give sharply differing accounts of it.

¹ Paragraphs 63.2 and 86.86

Ronnie Ballard

86.288 In his evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Ronnie Ballard said that he was watching from a position in Rossville Street on the south-eastern side of Glenfada Park South and saw a youth running towards the rubble barricade from the waste ground north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats with about four other young men. The youth was shot as he made to hurdle the barricade. An older man then went towards the body, but was shot while still on the southern side of the barricade. Ronnie Ballard believed that these two were William Nash and his father but only found this out from watching television after the event.

86.289 We concluded that it would be unwise to rely on this account, having formed the view that this witness was, understandably, having difficulties in recollecting what he saw.

James Begley

86.290 In his interview with Kathleen Keville, James Begley gave the following account.¹ We should note that having listened to the audio tape² and also considered the transcription made in 1972,³ we have filled in some of the passages omitted and corrected some mistakes in the transcript made for the purposes of this Inquiry.⁴

“To start off I was halfway up Waterloo Street and I heard a roar and the Paras came up. And there was a wild scatter over Chamberlain Street. I run down Chamberlain Street and run along as far as the bookies. The soldiers came round the corner and we charged back at one of them, they caught hold of an old man, we run back after them but they came back and they opened fire. I never seen them there before, they just went down over Chamberlain Street and into the back of flats. There was a boy lying there I went down on my knees to look at him and everybody else went past and he was coughing up blood and I knew I’d seen he was a goner, anyway when I looked at him, you know, he was a goner. I went down and went over and outside of the flats across Rossville Street and I run down and seen more soldiers and I run down there with a couple of other boys and they started shooting at us so I went back over the barricade and hid in behind it when there was right up there a young man who was Will Nash known as Stiff he was lying there. Well I lay down and they were still firing at us then the firing stopped and a – another boy came up his name is Pat Young he come over to me and says ‘are you all right’ and I says ‘aye’ and I was getting up and started firing again and I told him to get down and I looked up and I seen he got right between the eyes just on there and er – he fell over the top of me and they kept on firing and then another boy came up it was Mr Nash I knew him by looking at him I looked up and seen him and told him to get down but I was too late he got it too. And some other fella then came out to give us a hand over and er – I don’t know what you call him but he got it as well and there was three or four all lying there at the barricade and me and another boy just creeped in from the corner and hid in behind the flats. They then stopped shooting and went back over the road. That’s it.”

⁴ AB29.3

86.291 James Begley is dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry. From his Keville interview, since James Begley did not say that William Nash was shot when lying next to him, it appears to us that William Nash must have been shot by the time James Begley arrived at his side. His reference to Pat Young must be a reference to John Young and the later reference to “Mr Nash” must be a reference to Alexander Nash, William Nash’s father, who, as we explain in more detail below,¹ came out to the rubble barricade after his son had been shot. However, we are confident that no-one was shot at the rubble barricade after Alexander Nash, which casts doubt on James Begley’s recollection of the sequence of events.

James Breslin

86.292 In his evidence to this Inquiry,¹ James Breslin said that he was watching from the front garden of the northernmost house in Joseph Place and saw a youth shot as he pulled himself along the western section of the rubble barricade towards Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, “clinging on to the side of the barricade, defying gravity. He was pulling himself along with his hands and not using his legs.” He was later told that this youth was William Nash, although he might also have realised this at the time. We find difficulty with this account in view of the medical and scientific evidence, which in our view is inconsistent with this description of what William Nash was doing.

James Chapman

86.293 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ James Chapman said that he was watching from the window of his maisonette, approximately in the middle of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. He described seeing three men fall as they scrambled over the rubble barricade. They fell on the right-hand side (ie the western section) of the barricade. The first to fall was the nearest to the gap in the barricade, the second fell almost underneath James Chapman’s window on the (western) edge of the barricade, and the third fell between the other two.

86.294 James Chapman is now dead and gave no evidence to this Inquiry.

Matthew Connolly

86.295 Matthew Connolly gave the following account in his NICRA statement:¹

“I was standing rubble at Ros[s]ville Street when a young fellow of 16 or 17 was shot and fell in front of me. He was shot fairly high up in his chest. The soldier who fired the shot was crouched behind the door of a saracen. At this time the fellow was not dead. As we went to forward to help him, automatic fire riddled the rubble. Everyone lay flat out on the ground, about four stayed on for about a minute and during this time the soldiers were still shooting and we could hear the bullets above our heads. The fellow was screaming. We retreated behind a wall. About a minute later John Young crawled with his head down towards the boy who had been hit. He got to within a yard of him when a single shot hit him, he was dead. A youth tried to move towards the two bodies but only got out into the open and was shot. He stumbled back towards the wall and taken on to a house.”

- 86.296 Peter Pringle and Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times Insight Team interviewed Matthew Connolly. Their interview notes (dated 14th March 1972) recorded that Matthew Connolly had told them that he had moved from the Rossville Flats car park to the telephone box on the other side of the gap between Blocks 1 and 2:¹

“i then moved across to the barricade and until this time, as far as i could tell, ther[e] had not been any high velocity fire – only rubber bullets. i was standing on the glenfada park side of the barricade on the pavement when i heard a single rifle shot a young fellow of about 16 or 17 fell in front of me. he had been shot in the chest on the left side. i learnt after that it was willie nash. i could see the bullet hole in his light coloured shirt. the shot appeared to come from the soldiers who were about 40 y[a]rds away up rossville st on the same side crouched behind the door of a pig. nash squealed. he was not dead. he was moaning.

then the shooting really started and i could hear the bullets hitting the barricade. everyone lay flat on the ground and about four of us stayed on for about a minute and we then crawled along the gable end of a block of flats in glenfada park (x1).² we were there for about a minute. It was then I saw John Young for the first time that day.

then i saw someone crawling out to the barricade. he had his back to me and i didn't know. he was crawling to willie nash. a single shot ran out and he slumped. i thought he was hit somewhere in his head. he was wearing some kind of combat hat and jeans. when he was hit i saw it was john young. he didn't move. another boy – i dont know his name – stepped out from the gable end and was shot in the left shoulder. he fell back and a group of about four people took him away through the alley into abbey park. we stayed by the gable for a few minutes longer and then some of us ran off into abbey park.”

² Point x1 was shown on the plan that accompanied the notes of this interview (AC76.17) as the south-eastern corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North.

- 86.297 In his deposition for the coroner's inquest into the death of John Young, Matthew Connolly described how he had reached the rubble barricade. He then gave the following account, which we have set out here in its original typed form:¹

I stayed behind this small rubble barricade for 5 - 10 minutes and slight stoning of the soldiers and the saracens in Rossville Street was taking place. A young lad called either Nash or McDaid, was standing beside John Young of West way. I knew Young. There also were some other young boys there as well. I mean boys of 15 to 17 years old. I heard one shot and I knew it was not a rubber bullet being fired as the sound was much sharper I can say that this was the first time I realised live bullets were being used although there could have been others used on the car park side of the high flats without me being aware of it. After I heard the shot being fired the youth in front of me fell. The shot seemed to come from further down Rossville Street where foot soldiers were behind the saracens. I saw one soldiers half exposed behind an open door of a saracen. The saracen was facing towards us. I got the impression this soldier fired the shot but I couldn't be sure. I don't think I saw him with his rifle at the aim position. I looked at the youth and he was hit high up on the left hand side of his chest. He was moaning and everyone gathered round. He was named either Nash or McDaid I learned later, but I didn't know him. As we stood around him and about 30 seconds later a barrage of about 12 to 15 shots rang out and we all fell down for cover. The shooting continued with about two or three shots being fired at short intervals. We all started to crawl away towards a wall at Glenfada Park. I reached the wall with most of the others who were crawling and when I looked back I saw the boy who had been shot lying on the roadway with his feet towards the barricade. ~~There definitely wasn't a gun in his hand or near him. I would have been if he had had a gun as he was immediately in front of me.~~ One of the youths who was lying behind the wall beside me and whom I later saw to be John Young of Westway started to crawl on his hands and knees towards where the other youth was lying behind the barricade. ~~He had no gun nor any weapon in his hands.~~ The crowd shouted at him not to go out into the open but he didn't listen. He was out about 2' from the end of the garden wall when a single shot rang out and he slumped forward. I could see from where I was he was hit in the head or face as I could see the blood there. Just then everybody shouted the soldiers were coming and we all ran into the opening into Glenfada Park. About 18 shots all close together rang out. Everybody dived into Gardens and houses in Glenfada Park.

86.298 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Matthew Connolly said that he did not remember three sentences in this deposition being deleted and could not explain why this had been done, but he said that the contents of the deleted sentences were true.¹ The reason appears to be found in a note by Robert Carswell QC, counsel for the Ministry of Home Affairs at the inquests, dated 22nd August 1973, in which he wrote: “... it was agreed in discussion between the legal representatives before the inquest opened that no evidence from the forensic science reports would be given and there would be no debate on the question whether any deceased person had been handling or close to a firearm or bomb. References to the absence of firearms were deleted from the draft depositions. I saw the Coroner before the inquests opened, explained that these steps were acceptable to all parties and obtained his approval for the omission of surplus evidence.”²

86.299 Matthew Connolly gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry.

86.300 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Matthew Connolly told us that he was standing at the rubble barricade with other people for perhaps two or three minutes. He saw people throwing stones in the general direction of the soldiers, though there was “nothing close enough to throw stones at”. He then told us:²

“17. As I stood there, a small boy in front of me jumped and screamed as if he had been shot. My first impression was that he was play-acting. I had not heard a specific shot. He fell backwards, perhaps two or three feet in front of me, very slightly to my right. He, too, was behind (on the south side) of the Rubble Barricade approximately at the point marked 1 on the attached map (grid reference J15). He did not say anything, he just screamed. I did not know who he was but was subsequently told that he could have been either William Nash or Michael McDaid.

18. I went forward to the boy. I thought he was fifteen or sixteen years old. He had a shirt but no jacket. I think the shirt may have been light blue in colour. I cannot recall what else he was wearing. I think that his hair was dark and of average length. He had been shot high up in the front left-hand side of his chest. I could not see much blood and I think it took me a couple of minutes to realise there was any. I wanted to do something but did not know what to do. I think there were two or three of us around him at that time. Somebody was holding him and he was still screaming. I think that we stayed by him for about two minutes. I did not hear any shots at all during the time that we were beside him.”

² AC76.3

86.301 The point marked “1” on Matthew Connolly’s map was slightly to the west of the centre of the rubble barricade.¹

86.302 After giving a description of the soldiers he recalled seeing north of the rubble barricade, Matthew Connolly continued:¹

“22. There was then a volley of automatic shots. I got the impression that these shots were very close to us. The impact sounded as if it was hitting stones, perhaps the stones in the Rubble Barricade. I think that there were more than ten or fifteen shots.

23. Immediately, I got down flat on the ground. Nobody had been throwing stones immediately before these shots. The soldiers near the Saracen were too far away to throw stones at. Although there had been ten or fifteen of us behind the Rubble Barricade before these shots, it is my recollection that there were only four or five of us lying down behind the barricade after these shots. The others must have moved away, perhaps south down Rossville Street, although I do not know.

24. We then also ran, keeping down, to the gable end wall of the row of houses on the east side of Glenfada Park North. There were other people there when we got there. I cannot remember how many. People were milling about but I think there were about twenty or thirty people there at that time. I think I was approximately at the point marked F on the attached plan (grid reference I 15). There were also people in the car park of Glenfada Park North and people further south from me, nearer to the north-eastern entrance to Glenfada Park South. I refer to the copy photograph at Appendix 3. This is taken at the place where I and the other people were sheltering by the gable wall although I do not know when during Bloody Sunday that this picture was taken. I refer also to the copy photograph at Appendix 4 which shows Glenfada Park North. I do not recognise anybody in this photograph.

25. I do not know whether the boy at the point marked 1 at the Rubble Barricade was still screaming; I could not hear him. John Young was also behind the gable wall when I got there.

26. I moved slightly to the south of the people by the gable wall so that I could see up Rossville Street. As I looked out into Rossville Street, the gable end wall of Glenfada Park North blocked my view of the injured boy at point 1. I think I was about ten or twelve feet south from the end gable wall but I am not very sure how far east or west along the gable wall I was. I heard someone in the crowd shout ‘come back in’. I saw somebody on his hunkers move out from the gable end of the wall where we were sheltering towards the Rubble Barricade. I thought that the person who had shouted 'come back in' had shouted at this man. There was also another man behind him and slightly to his left as I was looking at them and I will describe him later. The first man who I had seen then fell over. He was between the gable wall and the Rubble Barricade, to the south of the Rubble Barricade, approximately at the point marked 2 on the attached map (grid reference J15). He fell to his right. He had been crouched down with his left side towards the Rubble Barricade and he fell to the south away from the barricade onto his right side, facing east. I then saw him plainly and I saw that he was John Young. He had been shot in the head. The wound was in the left-hand side of the head. He lay on his side with his feet towards the Rubble Barricade, still in a crouched position. He did not move. Although I heard shots at the time, there was no specific shot which I could say hit him. At no time had I seen John Young throw stones.

27. Immediately after this, the second man who had been behind John Young and to his left, that is, nearer to the Glenfada Park North side of Rossville Street, seemed to stumble. He was approximately at the point marked 3 on the attached map (grid reference J14/15). I think, therefore, that he was further out in the road than the first boy (at the point marked 1) I had seen shot. I would say that this man was about eighteen or nineteen years old. I think that he wore something dark, maybe jeans, although I am not sure. He was not tall and I cannot recall what his hair was like. After I saw him stumble someone then blocked my view and I never saw him again. I do not know what happened to him but assumed he had been shot. I did not know who he was, but afterwards have discovered that he may be either William Nash or Michael McDaid, because I learned that they, too, were shot there.

28. I could not say whether or not John Young and the other man had gone out towards the Rubble Barricade to help the first boy we had seen shot, or not. After this, the people sheltering by the gable wall were standing in shock. Although I heard shots at the time they fell I could not see any soldiers from where I was standing. It did seem to me as though the shots were coming south down Rossville Street from where I had seen the soldiers by Kells Walk. I could not tell the difference between a high or low velocity shot but I could tell the difference between the sound of rubber bullets and live bullets. These shots were live shots.

29. I did not see anyone cross the Rubble Barricade towards the soldiers after the first shot. Nor did I hear anyone say ‘They’re only firing blanks’. Nobody was shooting from the Rubble Barricade at the army. I was not aware of any civilians at the barricade with guns. If I had seen a civilian gunman, I would have remembered.

30. There had been sporadic shooting ever since the first boy had been shot. Occasionally there would be clusters of heavier shooting too. John Young fell during the sporadic shooting as did the man who was behind him when he was shot.

31. I cannot recall how long I stayed with the people behind the gable wall at Glenfada Park North but I think I was there for about fifteen or twenty minutes in total. I was in shock. I did not see what happened to the bodies at the Rubble Barricade.”

86.303 The position marked “F” by this witness was just south of the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, ie what Matthew Connolly described as the gable wall.¹ The two photographs to which this witness referred were respectively one taken by an unknown photographer of people at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, which we discuss later in this report,² and the photograph taken by the Irish Times photographer Ciaran Donnelly of people carrying Michael Kelly across Glenfada Park North.

² Chapter 176

86.304 The part of the map on which this witness marked “2” and “3” is reproduced below.¹

86.305 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Matthew Connolly, having been shown one of the photographs taken by Robert White of Michael Kelly lying on the ground behind the rubble barricade, said that it was possible that the first person he saw shot was Michael Kelly.¹ He also said that when he heard the volley of shots after seeing this person shot there were “maybe half a dozen” people at the rubble barricade, most either lying down or crouching down, and that there was no stone-throwing at this time.²

² Day 151/18-19

86.306 Matthew Connolly marked on a photograph the position so far as he could remember it of the three bodies at the rubble barricade. The blue arrow shows the position of the first person he said that he saw fall, the red arrow the position of John Young, and the green arrow the position of the person he said had followed John Young out from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North.¹

86.307 Matthew Connolly also told us that it was possible that in the accounts he had given in 1972 he had become muddled between Michael Kelly and Michael McDaid, when describing a boy being hit in the left shoulder after John Young had been shot, and being taken away to Glenfada Park North.¹ He told us that of those he saw shot dead the only one he knew was John Young.²

² Day 151/38-39

86.308 Later in the course of Matthew Connolly's evidence he gave the following answers to questions put by counsel for the majority of the families:¹

"Q. We know that Michael Kelly's body was taken away by a group of persons around him. When his body was taken away, were you actually on the ground taking shelter and not looking to see what was happening further at that time?

A. Yes, that is probably correct, if I was still at the barricade, yes.

Q. But still at the barricade. Because we know that William Nash was also shot at this barricade and that William Nash was also, like Mr Kelly, shot in the chest; he was shot just to the right of the midline and above his right nipple.

Could it be, Mr Connolly, that what you have seen is Mr Kelly being shot first; you then take shelter; Mr Kelly's body has been removed by a number of persons, but in the meantime Mr Nash has been shot and Mr Young, who was in the same class as William Nash, has gone out to crawl to his body and that you have taken it, because you have not seen him shot, that that was actually Michael Kelly?

A. It is possible, yes.²

Q. When you saw John Young – if you could perhaps look at the map that you originally compiled, that is the map at AC76.24. If we look at the positions you have marked as to three bodies that you saw on the barricade, they in fact appear to be marked on the road side of the barricade, not on the pavement. Number one appears to be just at the right-hand margin on the barricade and to the right of the left-hand footpath; do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Just immediately to the right of the figure 1 is the figure 2, and south of both those bodies and in a midpoint between them is the third. Those are in different positions from what you marked today on the photograph. The photograph you marked today has been preserved as AC76.28. The position is that you were asked to mark firstly where you saw the first body, and you marked that with the blue arrow; that is Michael Kelly?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You were then subsequently asked to mark where John Young was; you marked the red arrow. Finally the other person whom you saw, and you have marked that with the green arrow.

Were you taking the reference point for the green and red arrow as being the body of Michael Kelly; namely, you assumed that both of those persons were making towards the first body that you saw?

A. Yes, that is correct to say that.

Q. In other words, the markings for John Young and the second person are predicated upon your understanding that it was Michael Kelly's body they were crawling out to?

A. Yes, that would be fair to say.

Q. Whereas in fact if you look at your original map, or the map that was prepared for the Eversheds statement, it would appear that the bodies were further out to the eastern side of the barricade, that is the Rossville Flats side?

A. Well, that one is wrong, they were definitely nearer the Glenfada Park side.

Q. When you made your statement to NICRA, it would be correct to say that the only person you really named in that was John Young. Then when you were dealing with the Sunday Times, and I wonder if that could be put up, AC76.14, and if the final third of that could be highlighted. The words just before this begins:

'i was standing on the glenfada park side of the barricade on the pavement when i heard a single rifle shot a young fellow of about 16 or 17 fell in front of me. he had been shot in the chest on the left side. i learnt after that it was willie nash.'

Can you recall who told you it was Willie Nash, or was that just the general topic of conversation that you became appraised of?

A. It was just a general topic of conversation. I cannot actually remember who gave the names of the people. Sometimes when they were interviewing me, they would say that was such-and-such and that was such-and-such because of where I said that I thought the bodies were lying. So they actually put a name to them. But I myself could not put a name to them because I did not know any of them at the time.

Q. It goes on:

'i could see the bullet hole in his light coloured shirt.'

Willie Nash appears to have been wearing a white coloured shirt:

'the shot appeared to come from the soldiers who were about 40 y[a]rds away up rossville st on the same side crouched behind the door of a pig. nash squealed. he was not dead. he was moaning.

then the shooting really started'

Do you recall that now after –

A. Well, I recall beginning – I only actually heard the one shot and then shortly after, when I say the shooting really started, there was continuous firing for a while.

Q. Also in this statement it continues on:

‘everyone lay flat on the ground’

If one goes over to AC76.15, that it was some time after you saw the first person fall that John Young moved out from the gable; is that right?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Would that have been a matter of minutes, or can you not recall?

A. Well, I could not really put a time on it, but, yeah, minutes, maybe – I think it must have been about 5 or 10, but I could not swear to that.

Q. When he was crawling out, did he crawl out on his hands and knees or on his stomach, can you recollect?

A. No, what I can recollect is by the time I actually saw him he was well clear of the crowd and he was crouched down, but not – when I say crawling, not on his hands and knees, no.

Q. When you saw him he was well clear of the gable, he was actually out towards the barricade?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. At this stage he was not crawling, his body was not on the ground, he was not on his hands and knees, I think you used the word ‘crouching’; is that correct?

A. Yes, that is correct, he was not on his hands and knees, no.

Q. Can you say how far he was away from the body or could you not – you simply could not see the body at that stage; is that right?³

A. No, I could not see the body, I could not actually say.

Q. Would it also be correct to say, Mr Connolly, that you were very unfamiliar with this area at this time?

A. Yes, that is the first time I had ever been in it.”

² We note here that Matthew Connolly was prepared to agree that it was possible that the first man he saw shot was Michael Kelly, after being told that Michael Kelly had been shot in the chest. Matthew Connolly has consistently said that the first casualty he saw was shot high up in the front left chest. Michael Kelly was not shot high up in his chest. William Nash was shot high up in the front of his chest, albeit slightly to the right of the midline.

³ The tape recording of the evidence reveals that the transcript inaccurately recorded the question as including a quotation.

86.309 Matthew Connolly also told us that the person he recalled seeing with a shoulder injury could have been Patrick O'Donnell.¹ As we describe when considering the events of Sector 4,² Patrick O'Donnell was hit in the shoulder by a shot fired in Glenfada Park North, and then went to the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, where he was eventually arrested by soldiers. However, Patrick O'Donnell was injured after soldiers had come into Glenfada Park North, ie after the shooting of William Nash, John Young and Michael McDaid; and after Matthew Connolly had fled into Abbey Park.

² Paragraphs 104.494–521

86.310 Matthew Connolly's various accounts are not easy to follow. However, we have concluded that the first person he saw shot was William Nash, who was hit high on the chest; and the second John Young, whom he knew. His evidence indicates that there was an appreciable interval of time between William Nash and John Young being shot, which is also supported by the account given by James Begley. In his NICRA statement Matthew Connolly described it as about a minute, though in our view it would be unwise to rely on such estimates as necessarily accurate; and it may have been a shorter period, though enough time for John Young to realise what had happened and decide to go out to William Nash.

86.311 Matthew Connolly also described John Young as crawling out, but he told us, and we accept, that by this he meant not on his hands and knees, but crouching,¹ which is consistent with the medical and scientific evidence relating to John Young.

86.312 Despite Matthew Connolly accepting that it was possible that he had seen Michael Kelly shot, we consider that it is unlikely that he did so. We have noted above¹ that Matthew Connolly has consistently maintained that the first casualty was hit high on the chest, a description that fits William Nash's injury, but not that of Michael Kelly. Matthew Connolly may either have been nearer the rubble barricade than Michael Kelly and did not realise that the latter had been shot behind him, or had not reached the rubble barricade until after this had happened.

86.313 This leaves Michael McDaid, who was undoubtedly shot at the rubble barricade. Matthew Connolly described a third casualty hit in the shoulder, who was carried into Abbey Park. This was not Michael McDaid, who remained at the barricade until put by soldiers into an APC. Michael Kelly was carried into Abbey Park, just before soldiers arrived in Glenfada Park North. The exit wound on Michael McDaid was under his left shoulder. We have concluded that it is likely that Matthew Connolly witnessed the shooting of Michael McDaid, saw the exit wound, and then mistakenly assumed that it was this casualty who was being carried across Glenfada Park North to Abbey Park. Matthew Connolly must have fled from the area of the rubble barricade in the same direction and at about the same time as Michael Kelly was being carried across, just before the soldiers came into Glenfada Park North.

Paul Coyle

86.314 In his interview with Tony Stark of Praxis Films Ltd,¹ Paul Coyle said that he saw William Nash run out towards the rubble barricade in the middle of the shooting, presumably to go to someone's assistance. William Nash fell to the ground dead after taking only a few steps. He had nothing in his hands. In his written statement to this Inquiry,² Paul Coyle told us that he was watching from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North and saw a youth fall at the rubble barricade, where he had been gesticulating at soldiers. He later learned that this might have been William Nash. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry³ he said that it was possible that the youth had just jumped behind the barricade for cover. He no longer had any recollection of seeing William Nash run out towards the rubble barricade.

Alphonsus Cunningham

86.315 In his evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Alphonsus Cunningham said that when standing near the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North he saw a youth shot just after he lifted rubble from the barricade to throw at the soldiers. An older man subsequently went to his aid and was also shot. In our view this evidence refers to the shooting of William Nash and his father.

John Devine

86.316 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ John Devine told us that while hiding behind a car in the south-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North he saw three bodies on the western side of the rubble barricade. One body was about a metre away from another, and the third was another metre and a half away. This account is consistent with Alexander Nash's account of where the three casualties lay.²

² Paragraph 86.188

Joseph Doherty

86.317 Joseph Doherty's evidence was that while looking through the letter box of a house in Joseph Place he saw a youth shot at the rubble barricade as he straightened after bending as if to pick something up, although he told us that he did not see anything in the youth's hands. The youth had gone to the barricade from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. An older man then went to him and was shot himself.¹ Again, in our view, this refers to the shooting of William Nash and his father.

Letty Donnelly

86.318 In her written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Letty Donnelly told us that while watching from her sister's flat at 6 Garvan Place (on the first floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats) she saw a boy fall just north of the eastern section of the rubble barricade, as he ran towards the barricade.² She then saw the crouched figure of a man just south of the eastern section of the barricade shouting: "That's my son. Help me'." She learned that these two were William Nash and his father. She also saw two other bodies on the north side of the western section of the rubble barricade, which were later thrown into an Army vehicle. In her oral evidence to this Inquiry³ she accepted that William Nash and his father could have been on the western section of the barricade but remained sure that one was to the north of the barricade and one to the south. In view of the evidence given in 1972, we have concluded that Letty Donnelly's memory has deceived her, since we are sure that William Nash was shot when on the southern side of the rubble barricade. Furthermore, for reasons given earlier in this report,⁴ we are sure that William Nash (as well as Michael McDaid and John Young) was facing north and not running south when he was shot.

Hugh Duffy

86.319 Hugh Duffy said in his evidence to this Inquiry that while standing at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North he saw two bodies at the rubble barricade, both to the west of the gap, lying very close to each other. He knew that the body further from Glenfada Park North was that of William Nash as he saw his father, Alexander Nash (who was standing in the same group as the witness), go to him. William Nash was lying with his head pointing north. The other body was lying on the barricade, was wearing dark clothes and had dark hair. This man was lying on his side with his back to Glenfada Park and with his head pointing north.¹ There is no doubt that there were three bodies at the rubble barricade when Alexander Nash went out to his son. Hugh Duffy also told Kathleen Keville that he saw two bodies.² It appears that his observation in this regard was incomplete.

John Dunleavy

86.320 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ John Dunleavy told us that from the sitting room of his flat at 5 Garvan Place (on the second floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats) he saw three bodies very close to one another, approximately in the middle of the rubble barricade. His recollection was that one of the bodies was “slightly on top of the other two” and that this youth wore a jumper that gradually became red with blood. The recollections of this witness are to a significant degree consistent with the 1972 accounts of Alexander Nash.

William Etherson

86.321 William Etherson said in his evidence to this Inquiry¹ that while crouching in Rossville Street some distance south of the rubble barricade, he saw three youths fall as they ran across the rubble barricade from west to east. They all seemed to drop at the same time, but he could not be sure that they had been hit.

¹ AE4.3-4; Day 143/6-9

Seamus Fleming

86.322 In his NICRA statement,¹ Seamus Fleming described being affected by CS gas and spraining his ankle when he began to run from Columbcille Court; and then reaching the “entry to Glenfada Park” (ie the south-eastern entrance to Glenfada Park North). His statement continued:

“There were about twenty young men sheltering behind a barricade of bricks and rubble. I then noticed that some of the lads got up and ran into the entry where I was standing. As they were running, I heard gunfire.

There were still about six left at the barricade and they fell for cover. I saw soldiers everywhere and three saracens. During a lull in the shooting, the six lads at the barricade got up to run towards our entry. The minute their heads appeared, there was a burst of fire and I saw a lad with a blue half jerkin clutch his stomach with his hands and slump on top of the barricade. I saw also a lad with a brown coat slumping over, holding his left side. They did not move. A man beside me in the entry made an attempt to go forward to assist them but there was another burst of gunfire and a bullet struck the wall above us. A piece of red brick fell to the ground beside where the man was standing. At that point I ran through Lisfannon Park and into Butcher Street. I stood there for from 5 to 10 minutes. There was a lot of gunfire so I made for home.”

86.323 It is our view that the “lad with a blue half jerkin” was probably Michael Kelly and the “lad with a brown coat” William Nash, since these descriptions are consistent with the clothing worn by these casualties. Seamus Fleming said to this Inquiry that he did not see youths at the rubble barricade throwing stones or anything else at this time. In his oral evidence¹ he told us that he did not see anybody throwing anything from the barricade towards the soldiers.

Brendan Gallagher

86.324 This witness made a NICRA statement,¹ in which he gave the following account:

“I was in Rossville Street Barricade and five Saracens drove into Rossville Street and lined up. A few young boys were going to throw stones at them when the army opened fire. I saw two of these young boys fall dead and the third fellow was shot in the stomach. At the same time another person was shot in the leg while he was standing on the barricade.”

86.325 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Brendan Gallagher told us that he did not now remember seeing four boys shot at the rubble barricade although he vaguely remembered seeing bodies there. However, in his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that he saw three people fall at the rubble barricade, two to the west of centre and one to the east (who was shot in the stomach). All three were on the southern side of the rubble barricade. He also saw a fourth person (who was shot in the leg) still further to the east. Some of these people had been throwing stones, but Brendan Gallagher could not recall which ones. He told us that as he dived for cover at a point close to the north-eastern corner of Glenfada Park South he had also seen another casualty fall close to him, and that he believed that at a slightly later stage, after he had taken refuge in a flat in the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, he saw Hugh Gilmour shot.²

² Day 147/198-208

86.326 The person Brendan Gallagher said he had seen shot in the leg is likely in our view to have been Constantine Gallagher, who, as we describe elsewhere in this report,¹ was on the rubble barricade and had been injured in the leg by a baton round. We are doubtful whether Brendan Gallagher saw Hugh Gilmour shot, as there is nothing in his NICRA statement to that effect.

Veronica Glenn

86.327 Veronica Glenn said in her evidence to this Inquiry that she had been watching from her parents' flat (at 26 Mura Place at the south end of the fourth floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats) and that she believed that she had seen four bodies on the rubble barricade. One of these was on the western side, two on the eastern, but she could not place the fourth body. Veronica Glenn believed that she had previously seen these people taking cover at the barricade during a burst of fire that followed the shooting of a youth who appears to have been Michael Kelly.¹

¹ AG68.2-8; Day 144/142-148

Helen Johnston

86.328 In a NICRA statement made jointly with her sister Margaret Johnston,¹ Helen Johnston recorded that she was in a small alley with a number of other people:

“From where we were standing we could see the remains of a barricade. Lying at the barricade were three men all on top of the other. Immediately beside them on his back was an elderly man. He appeared to be alive as his arms were moving. I asked some of the men, could they not pull him in. They said it was much too dangerous and the other three were dead. Then the chippings came off the wall, where the bullets were striking the wall by where we were standing.”

86.329 In her written statement to this Inquiry, Helen Johnston told us that she thought that she had seen the casualties at the rubble barricade from the area of the eastern entrance to Glenfada Park South.¹ In her oral evidence to this Inquiry, she recalled that two of the three people were close to one another, while the third was a foot or two further away. She initially said that she had seen these three men throwing stones, but later withdrew that suggestion.²

² Day 228/32-36; Day 228/61-66

86.330 From this account it appears that Helen Johnston did not see any of the casualties being shot, but only saw them lying close together after Alexander Nash (William Nash’s father) had gone out to his son.

Eamon McAteer

86.331 In his NICRA statement, Eamon McAteer recorded that from the area of the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North he saw three bodies almost lying on top of one another on the rubble barricade.¹ In his evidence to this Inquiry, he again referred to three bodies in close proximity to each other and recalled that they were in a position to the west of the centre and to the south of the barricade.²

² AM41.13; Day 135/13-15

Mary McCann

86.332 This witness was uncertain as to the precise position of the two bodies that she recalled seeing at the rubble barricade as she looked out from the window of 11 Garvan Place (on the first floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats), but indicated that they were close together on the eastern side of Rossville Street. She also thought that a man (who appears to have been Alexander Nash) was in between these two bodies waving his arm.¹ We formed the view that this witness, though doing her best, really had no clear recollection of events.

Kevin McCloskey

86.333 Kevin McCloskey said in his evidence to this Inquiry that he saw three men fall as he and they ran south over the rubble barricade. He indicated that they fell on the southern side of the barricade, to the west of the gap. He tried to help one of these men, but could not drag him to cover. He thought that this man was in his twenties or thirties. He saw no stone-throwing from the barricade.¹

¹ AM116.4-5; Day 135/237-242

86.334 We formed the view, on listening to Kevin McCloskey's evidence, that he did not have a true recollection of events; in many respects his overall account is inconsistent with other convincing evidence. For example he described going from the rubble barricade and seeing three or four men standing at the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, one of whom was Fr Bradley. It is clear from photographic and other evidence that there were substantially more people at the south end of that block, who remained there throughout the shooting at the rubble barricade. We concluded that it would be unwise to rely on the account given by this witness.

John McCrudden

86.335 This witness said in his evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he looked out from an upstairs window in 12 Garvan Place (on the third floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats) and saw two bodies on the western side of the rubble barricade, a little to the left of the arrow he marked on the following photograph.² He also appears to have seen Alexander Nash nearby, which may have prevented him from seeing a third body.

² AM152.13

Nola McSwine

86.336 In her evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Nola McSwine (now McCullagh) said that while looking out of the window of a flat on the third floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats she saw three bodies lying towards the middle of the rubble barricade. She had the impression (possibly from their posture) that they had come from the south-eastern corner of Glenfada Park North. The bodies were very close to each other. She subsequently saw a man (who appears to have been Alexander Nash) go to the bodies.

¹ AM157.3-4; Day 137/10-11

Michael McCusker

86.337 We have referred earlier¹ to the evidence of this witness. In his Keville interview,² he said that he talked to John Young at the rubble barricade and that John Young told him “that there was two boys shot around at ... the back of the flats”. According to John Goddard’s interview note,³ Michael McCusker said that John Young, who had no stone in his hands, had told him that Michael Bradley had been shot. In his written statement to this Inquiry,⁴ Michael McCusker said that John Young had told him that Michael Bradley had been shot and taken to a house in Joseph Place. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,⁵ Michael McCusker said that he left John Young standing at about the point marked with an arrow on the following photograph.⁶

Denis Patrick McLaughlin

86.338 In his Keville interview, this witness (who was 16 at the time) gave the following account:¹

“I was down at the William Street to see what was happening and er – they started to shoot the gas and we came running up Rossville Street.

[Female voice] To get away from the gas?

To get away from the gas. I was hit with a rubber bullet and I fell and two men dragged me up...

[Female voice] You were hit with a rubber bullet?

Aye and I fell and I was dragged up a bit ... I was all right and er – ... I says I'm ... going down, see what's happening down here again. And I went down and I seen a body over at the barricade and there was another fella along with me, he goes over at the body and I went over along with him and er – this other fella walked out and he was shot in the stomach and he fell, then another man came out again he was shot and he fell and a boy came out and he was shot in the head...

[Female voice] Were any of them armed?

No. None of them was armed at all.

[Female voice] they weren't trying to – to fight the soldiers?

No. They just came out to help with this body that was lying there. They thought we were – they thought we were shot too as we were lying beside him because we didn't want to get up, you know. And they shot him in the head and the – the blood spurted out of his head it came away in my hands, you know. And er – there was a – the oth – there was a boy then that came over and he dragged this boy by the feet, you know, to get him out of the road. He says for us to come over out of the road, you know, you don't want to get shot. We says 'what about these bodies?'

He says 'you have to come over here in case you get shot', you know. So he dragged the first boy by the feet then he grabbed my hands and he dragged me across and we run in against the wall with Father Bradley, you know. And I grabbed Father Bradley down beside me, you know, as he's sort of like a little scared, you know. Some of the soldiers came around the corner and there was another man and he pulled off his coat and the steam was rising out of him and there was a hole in his shoulder and I knew he was shot."

86.339 Denis Patrick McLaughlin also made a NICRA statement,¹ in which he recorded that the first casualty he saw was dressed in a brown suit and had black hair, and had been running south over the "loose stones of the barricade" when he fell back and rolled over onto his face. He stated that he saw this man from the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, and that George Roberts, who had been running alongside the man, went to assist him. Denis Patrick McLaughlin also crawled out to him. A second man fell nearby, who he later found out had been shot dead. A third man walked out slowly. More shots rang out and the third man fell on top of Denis Patrick McLaughlin. The witness turned and saw a fourth casualty's head burst open with blood pouring out. Denis Patrick McLaughlin recorded in his NICRA statement that after witnessing people being shot he became hysterical.

86.340 Denis Patrick McLaughlin gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement to this Inquiry¹ he gave a similar account to that he had given in his NICRA statement, but said that from photographs of those who were killed on Bloody Sunday he had been able to identify the first casualty he saw, who was wearing the brown suit, as William Nash. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry² he said that he did not see any wound suffered by this casualty. He said³ that he did not know what the second man had been doing before he fell. He thought that the man had been shot, because bullets were hitting the rubble barricade when he fell. He said⁴ that he presumed that the third man had walked out “from the Glenfada Park side”. He thought that this man had been shot because of the way he fell, but he saw no sign of injury on him. He said⁵ that he could not remember from where the fourth casualty had come, but he remembered the blood coming out of his head.

² Day 159/102-105

⁵ Day 159/30-33

³ Day 159/27-29

86.341 We have no doubt that Denis Patrick McLaughlin witnessed the shooting of some of the casualties at the rubble barricade. He identified himself¹ as the youth standing fourth from the right in the photograph taken by Liam Mailey showing Fr Bradley walking in the direction of Rossville Street, which we have shown earlier in this report and which we reproduce below.²

² Paragraph 86.209

86.342 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, Liam Mailey said that the youth shown fourth from the right in his photograph had become hysterical.¹

86.343 We have considered the evidence of Denis Patrick McLaughlin. He was a witness to horrific events taking place close to him, and so it is not surprising that he became hysterical. However, we take the view that his evidence indicates that William Nash was shot before John Young and Michael McDaid. There is nothing in his accounts to suggest that the latter two were doing anything other than trying to go out to the bodies.

Kevin McGonagle

86.344 According to the note made by John Barry of the Sunday Times Insight Team of an interview with Kevin McGonagle,¹ this witness said that from his position in a house in Joseph Place he saw one youth near the “left-hand” (which from there would be the western) pavement of Rossville Street crawling towards another youth who was lying at the rubble barricade. The crawling youth then ceased moving. In his evidence to this Inquiry, Kevin McGonagle said that he recalled seeing three or four people fall in a similar area, and another person crawling towards them before that person twitched and was presumably shot.²

Jack Nash

86.345 This witness said in his evidence to this Inquiry¹ that he recalled looking towards the rubble barricade from near the south end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North and seeing two bodies lying close to one another, and Alexander Nash in the middle of them waving his arm. He believed that the bodies were approximately in the centre of the rubble barricade, slightly to the east of the gap.

Brian Rainey

86.346 Brian Rainey (who was a schoolteacher) made a written statement dated 4th February 1972.¹ In this statement he described moving towards Free Derry Corner and continued:

“I had just crossed the street barricade across Rossville Street, just in front of the High Flats and was approaching the small wall surrounding the block of maisonettes at Glenfada Park when I heard shouting and as I looked behind I could see Army Saracens rushing into Rossville Street. A number of young lads were running in all directions in front of them. One saracen stopped about 15–20 yards of the William Street side of the street barricade in Rossville Street. Most of the young lads stopped level with the barricade. I stepped up onto the wall which runs along the front of the maisonettes at Glenfada Park so that I could see better what was happening. I saw a couple of young lads being captured by the Army and being led towards the saracens. At this stage other soldiers were taking up positions. A number of the young lads began stoning the Army, and I saw and heard other young lads shout towards the people at the meeting to come and join them.

Then I heard a burst of gunfire. I decided to get down from the wall and I stood close against the front of the maisonettes. There came another burst of gunfire and as I looked back towards the Army I saw a closely packed group of about four young lads fall lifelessly to the ground. Their position was directly behind the Rossville Street barricade on the Glenfada Park side of the road. At this burst of shooting I got down on my hands and knees and crawled along the base of the maisonettes at Glenfada Park. Just before I turned the corner I looked back to see if what I had seen had actually happened. From the way this small group had fallen – they seemed to be piled on top of one another – I was quite certain they had been shot. Again I must state I did not see any guns except those used by the Army, nor did I see any petrol bombs nor did I hear any nail bombs. The only weapons I saw being used by a number of young lads were stones.”

86.347 Brian Rainey also made a written statement for the Widgery Inquiry, though he did not give oral evidence.¹ In this statement he gave the following account:

“I looked back towards William Street and I saw armoured vehicles driving into and along Rossville Street. Everyone was running. I ran about twenty yards and stopped alongside a small wall which surrounds a block of maisonettes at Glenfada Park. I stood on top of this wall and looked back. By this time I could see two of the army vehicles had halted some thirty yards on the far side of the barricade. Soldiers had got out of the vehicles and were moving around very fast. I saw two people being arrested and dragged away. It was at this point that a number of young lads, who had run past the barricade in the direction of Free Derry Corner, returned to the barricade and began shouting and throwing stones at the army. Other lads were shouting in the direction of the meeting for the people there to come back and help them. It was just then that I heard the sound of gunfire – a couple of single shots. I got down off the small wall immediately and crouched along the front of the maisonettes. I was looking to my left – that is in the direction of the army. I was still hearing single shots ringing out – very sharp and crisp in sound. Just then I observed a group of young lads, about three or four quite close together, falling to the ground and lying motionless. I knew they had been hit. They seemed to fall quite close together. Their position was at the barricade across Rossville Street, opposite the high flats, on the Glenfada Park side of the street.”

86.348 Brian Rainey gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement,¹ he told us that the wall on which he had first stood was the one running along the gardens on the south-eastern side of Glenfada Park South, that the youngsters at the rubble barricade had their backs to him and that the three or four he saw fall did so at about the centre of the rubble barricade:²

“To my mind they had all been throwing stones, grabbing what was nearest. I could not believe my eyes. I had never seen anyone shot before. I remember the way they fell was most unusual, they just dropped together in a lifeless way, not forwards or backwards, just sideways in a heap on top of one another. To me, when they were shot they were looking towards the army position where they were throwing stones.”

² AR3.2-3

86.349 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry, Brian Rainey was asked about this part of his written statement:¹

“Q. ... Is your recollection sufficiently clear for you to be able to say that you actually saw them throwing stones, or is there an element of supposition in your expression ‘to my mind, they had all been throwing stones’?”

A. That was a general, there was a general comment to cover the boys that were at the barricade. Most of them, I feel, were throwing stones, but I could not say all of those who were shot were throwing stones.”

86.350 When he was shown Ciaran Donnelly's photograph (reproduced below) of people facing the Army vehicles in Rossville Street, Brian Rainey told us that his recollection was that there were more people around the rubble barricade when people were shot than shown in that photograph.¹

86.351 Brian Rainey marked on the following photograph where he recalled the young men falling.¹

¹ Day 132/147-148; AR3.20

86.352 As will have been noted, Brian Rainey has given consistent accounts of what he heard and saw from his vantage point on the eastern side of Glenfada Park South.

Edward Rigney

86.353 It appears that this witness made a NICRA statement,¹ for although the statement in question bears the name of Damion Rigney, the address corresponds with that given by Edward Rigney to this Inquiry and the signature on the manuscript copy of the NICRA statement matches the signature on his written statement to this Inquiry.² The NICRA statement was in the following terms:

“I was in Chamberlain Street when the army made their charge into Rossville Street. I ran back to the meeting at Free Derry Corner. I left this when B. Devlin was about to speak. There was shooting started. I saw a man fall at the barricade at Rossville Flats. Two boys ran out to lift him and they were shot at as well, both fell.”

² AR10.7

86.354 In his evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Edward Rigney said that as he ran across Rossville Street to the southern corner of Glenfada Park South he thought that he saw people fall behind the rubble barricade as they moved from east to west.

¹ AR10.5; Day 136/39-40

Ronald Wood

86.355 Ronald Wood (who had served in the Royal Navy) gave a written statement for and oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. In his written statement he described what he saw from what would appear to have been the south-eastern corner of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North:¹

“8. Soldiers got out of the saracens immediately they stopped and some took cover round the saracens and some took cover by a wall in front of the building which I think is called Columbcille Court.

9. The crowd was scattering away from the soldiers towards Free Derry Corner or into the turnings and alleyways off Rossville Street. A few stones were thrown at the soldiers and they fired one or two rubber bullets in return.

10. From somewhere on the William Street side of me two shots were fired. They were real bullet shots. There was no crowd between myself and the troops. That part of Rossville Street from which these two shots were fired was occupied by the troops.

11. One of those two shots hit a young fellow of I suppose about eighteen or nineteen who was standing at the barrier about two or three yards away from me. He was hit in the left side of his stomach. He had a light jacket and white T-shirt on. He was not armed. He was not firing. He was not even throwing stones. This happened no more than a minute or so after the troops got out of the saracens.

12. Several of us lifted this young fellow and took him into cover behind Glenfada Flats. As that was happening there was a whole fusillade of shots and two people further out along the barricade fell. They were young fellows as well. They were dressed in jackets and trousers. I saw no weapons on them or round their bodies. I am fairly certain that they were unarmed. In any case they definitely were not firing. No shots had come from our end of Rossville Street at all.

13. About the same time that these two young fellows were shot the first fellow whom we had carried into cover was taken into one of the flats in either Glenfada Park or Abbey Park. I saw when he was taken that he had been shot in the left side of his stomach. He was still alive then.”

86.356 Ronald Wood gave a consistent account in his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry.¹

86.357 In his written and oral evidence to this Inquiry, Ronald Wood gave an account essentially consistent with the evidence that he had given in 1972, though it appears that his recollection now is that he did not actually see Michael Kelly or the other two casualties at the moment they were shot.¹

¹ AW24.1-4; Day 127/1-72

86.358 We have no doubt that Ronald Wood was close to Michael Kelly when the latter was shot and then (“fairly quickly” afterwards), as he put it to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ saw two other people who had fallen at the rubble barricade. He told us in his written statement to this Inquiry that he had been informed afterwards that these two people had been shot in the head.² This, if he was correctly informed, indicates that he saw Michael McDaid and John Young.

Conclusions on the foregoing evidence

86.359 As we have already noted,¹ much of the evidence is confused and inconsistent. Nevertheless, in our view an analysis of the evidence as a whole does enable us to reach some firm conclusions.

86.360 We are sure that William Nash, John Young and Michael McDaid were all shot and fell close together when they were slightly to the west of the centre of the rubble barricade; and that they were shot in that order.

86.361 We are also sure that, while there was an interval between the shooting of William Nash and the other two casualties, the latter two were shot within a very short time of each other.

86.362 In our view John Young was going to the aid of William Nash when he was shot; and probably Michael McDaid was doing likewise.

86.363 We are sure that all three of these casualties were facing north in the direction of soldiers who were further north along Rossville Street when they were shot; and must have been shot by one or more of those soldiers.

86.364 There is no evidence at all that any of these three casualties was armed with any form of lethal weapon. We are sure that they were not. Many of the witnesses to whom we have referred have stated expressly that none of these three, nor anyone around them, was armed with either a firearm or any form of bomb. All three had probably been throwing stones or similar missiles at the soldiers from the area of the rubble barricade. William Nash may have been throwing or about to throw a stone when he was shot; but in our view John Young was not doing so, as he was going to the aid of William Nash; and the same is probably the case with Michael McDaid. Given, as we are sure was the case, that these casualties were shot by a soldier or soldiers at ground level further along Rossville Street, the medical and scientific evidence indicates that they were not standing upright when they were hit, but were leaning forward or, as one witness put it, crouched.

Biographical details

86.365 Kevin McElhinney was 17 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was the third of five children and lived with his parents in Phillip Street, Pennyburn. He was employed as a shop assistant in Lipton's supermarket in Strand Road.¹

Prior movements

86.366 Kevin McElhinney's sister Roslyn (now Roslyn Doyle) told us in her written statement to this Inquiry¹ that her brother left the family home after lunch to go on the march with a few friends who had called for him, including Frank Hone and Paul Coyle.

86.367 Frank Hone told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he called for Kevin McElhinney on his way home from Mass and went with him to the Creggan for the start of the march, but lost him in the crowd at an early stage. Frank Hone only went on the march to throw stones, but he said that Kevin McElhinney was not interested in rioting in the way that he was.² On the other hand, he also said that after Kevin McElhinney had been killed he told Kevin McElhinney's father that Kevin McElhinney "would not have been carrying more than a stone".

86.368 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Paul Coyle told us that he and his friend Kevin Duffy went to the Creggan where the march was to begin. He met Kevin McElhinney at the Creggan roundabout. Kevin McElhinney was carrying a paint bomb (ie a bottle containing paint). It appears from a remark attributed to Paul Coyle in an article published in the Sunday Press on 19th January 1992,² which he confirmed in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,³ that Kevin McElhinney had told him something to the effect that he wanted “to make his mark on a Saracen”. We accept this evidence.

86.369 James McGeehan told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he walked to the start of the march with his two brothers and his friends Kevin McElhinney and Paul Coyle. James McGeehan went on the march to William Street and continued to Barrier 14 instead of turning down Rossville Street. In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,² James McGeehan admitted that he had been involved in the rioting at Barrier 14. James McGeehan said that he vaguely recalled that he saw Kevin McElhinney for the last time “when we were well up William Street”.³ It is not clear exactly what this means. James McGeehan expressed the opinion that when they became separated Kevin McElhinney must have stayed at Little James Street, but he did not explain the reason for this belief.

86.370 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Paddy Kelly told us that he met Kevin McElhinney at Bishop’s Field and accompanied him on the march as it made its way down to the Bogside. Paddy Kelly took part in the early stages of the rioting at Barrier 14 and then moved to Little James Street where he took part in further rioting. When the paratroopers entered the Bogside, Paddy Kelly ran down Rossville Street and across the waste ground. Paddy Kelly stated that he saw Kevin McElhinney for the last time at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, and was not sure where Kevin McElhinney had gone subsequently.² He gave the impression, without saying so expressly, that Kevin McElhinney had been with him all the time until then. Paddy Kelly described Kevin McElhinney as someone who might have thrown a bottle or stone in a riot, but did not say whether he had in fact done so on this occasion.

86.372 A further photograph shows Kevin McElhinney at the front of the crowd as it moved down lower William Street towards Barrier 14.

86.373 Alex Morrison told us in his written statement to this Inquiry¹ that he went on the march on his own but soon met Kevin McElhinney. They followed the march to the junction of Creggan Street and William Street. They then decided to take a short cut, knowing that there was to be a meeting at Free Derry Corner. Alex Morrison thought (but doubtfully)² that they had walked via Little Diamond and Fahan Street West to Rossville Street, as indicated on the plan attached to his statement.³ On reaching Rossville Street, however, they changed their minds and went to the main entrance of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats instead of to Free Derry Corner. On Alex Morrison's account, Kevin McElhinney then remained in the vicinity of the rubble barricade until he was killed. This evidence is inconsistent with the evidence of James McGeehan and Paddy Kelly, and with the photograph showing Kevin McElhinney at the front of the crowd in William Street, which we have reproduced above,⁴ and which indicates that Kevin McElhinney went down William Street instead of taking the short cut described by Alex Morrison.

⁴ Paragraph 86.372

86.374 According to the note made by Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times Insight Team of his interview of Alex Morrison,¹ the latter had left the march at the “far end” of William Street after having “seen it grind to halt and then seen gas and water cannon etc” and then “cut through to the rossville flats via glenfadda”. The note does not record that Kevin McElhinney was with Alex Morrison at that stage, which raises the question whether the latter could be mistaken in his current recollection that he and Kevin McElhinney took the short cut together. The references in Philip Jacobson's note to seeing gas and water cannon and to cutting through Glenfada Park also indicate that Alex Morrison himself must have proceeded further along William Street than he now uncertainly recalls. It is also relevant to note that Alex Morrison's answers in the transcript of the interview that he gave to Paul Mahon on 6th April 1998² (more than two years before he signed his written statement to this Inquiry on 2nd May 2000) suggest that he was then extremely uncertain both about the route that he took and about whether Kevin McElhinney was with him before he reached Rossville Street. In our view Alex Morrison was mistaken in his uncertain recollections. We consider that it is likely that Kevin McElhinney took part in the rioting at Barrier 14.

Medical and scientific evidence

Wound pathology and ballistics

86.375 Dr Thomas Marshall, then the State Pathologist for Northern Ireland, conducted an autopsy of the body of Kevin McElhinney on 31st January 1972 at Altnagelvin Hospital.¹ Dr Domhnall MacDermott (a local general practitioner who attended as an observer)² and an RUC photographer were also present.³ Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan, the experts on pathology and ballistics engaged by this Inquiry, considered the notes, report and photographs from this autopsy. Dr Marshall (now Professor Marshall), Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan all gave written and oral evidence to this Inquiry. Dr Marshall also appeared before the Widgery Inquiry.

² AM5.7

86.376 In his autopsy report,¹ Dr Marshall described the following five gunshot wounds:

(i) An entrance wound, 3mm in diameter, on the inner side of the left buttock, 2cm from the anus. The left posterior margin of the wound was bordered by a zone of abrasion, up to 3mm wide. The wound bled profusely. When a probe was inserted, there was a track into the abdomen, extending forwards with an inclination of 45° and a slight deviation to the left.

(ii) A lacerated oval exit wound, measuring 7cm x 4cm, in the left flank over the lower ribs, centred 13cm above the top of the iliac crest. The long axis of the wound was vertical. The wound exposed lacerated, black-soiled muscle and a fractured rib. There was a band of green discoloured skin extending downwards from the wound towards the left groin.

(iii) A circular laceration, 4mm in diameter, situated 2.5cm above the upper margin of wound (ii). A tongue of superficial abrasion, 4mm broad, extended upwards for 12mm from the upper surface of this wound.

(iv) A circular laceration, 4mm in diameter, situated 8cm above wound (iii). Around this wound, between the 9 o'clock and 12 o'clock positions, there was an arc of abrasion, 4mm broad.

(v) A laceration, measuring 5cm x 4cm (this appears to be an error for 5mm x 4mm), situated 3.5cm above wound (iv), which had a base formed by the shelved upper margins.

¹ D214

86.377 Dr Marshall noted that a track passed downwards between the skin and the left lower ribs, connecting wounds (ii) to (v), and emerging into the abdominal cavity through a ragged hole in its left wall.¹

¹ D215

86.378 Dr Marshall also described a linear abrasion, 6cm long and up to 1cm wide, extending downwards and forwards across the outer side of the left thigh at the junction of the upper and middle thirds.¹

¹ D215

86.379 The internal injuries found by Dr Marshall are described in his report.¹

¹ D217

86.380 In the course of the autopsy, as he explained in his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall caused X-rays to be taken of Kevin McElhinney's chest and pelvis. He may have done this in order to see whether any bullet or fragment of a bullet was still lodged in the body, and found that there was none.²

² Day 209/77-79

86.381 In his autopsy report, Dr Marshall summarised his conclusions about the fatal injury as follows:¹

"Death was due to a missile wound of the abdomen. A single missile had entered the left buttock only an inch to the left of the opening of the anus. It had passed into the left side of the pelvic cavity causing considerable laceration of muscle, fracturing of bone and a tear in the bladder. It had then divided a segment of large intestine, lacerated the artery supplying the left leg and torn open two segments of small intestine before entering the left side of the abdominal wall. Here it fragmented as it passed through the tissues outside the left lower ribs. One large piece and three small fragments emerged separately, the larger piece fracturing the ninth left rib. Death was precipitated by the bleeding into the abdomen from the lacerated artery.

The injuries were of a kind caused by a high velocity bullet.

The track of the missile through the body was upwards and forwards with a slight deviation to the left although the forwards and left deviations might have been influenced by the missile striking the pelvic bone. When the situation of the entrance wound is taken into account, it seems likely that he was bent forwards at the time he was shot from behind. Then the bullet could have been travelling almost horizontally.”

86.382 With regard to the abrasion of the left thigh, Dr Marshall’s conclusions were as follows:¹

“There was an abrasion extending downwards and forwards across the outside of the left thigh. This could have been a graze from a bullet. It could have come from the same weapon if the left thigh had been flexed at the time. He might have been crouched down on all fours or climbing over something.”

¹ D218

86.383 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall confirmed the conclusions set out in his autopsy report.

86.384 In his written statement to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall clarified the reference in his description of the entrance wound to an inclination of 45° and a slight deviation to the left, explaining that the former was the inclination from the horizontal plane and the latter the deviation from the sagittal plane. Dr Marshall had been asked whether the abrasion around the uppermost three wounds on the left side of Kevin McElhinney’s body might indicate that these were entrance wounds caused by fragments of a second bullet. He said that although he could not entirely rule out this possibility, he remained of the opinion that a single bullet had caused all the injuries.

¹ D547

86.385 Dr Marshall also explained that the reason why he suggested that the abrasion on the left thigh might have been a graze from a bullet was that it appeared to lack some of the characteristics of a graze caused by falling or rubbing against another surface.¹

86.386 In their report,¹ Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan observed that the mortuary photographs showed shelving of the upper margin of wound (iii) rather than the abrasion described by Dr Marshall.

86.387 Herbert Donnelly, then an Assistant Scientific Officer in the Department of Industrial and Forensic Science in Belfast, examined the clothing of Kevin McElhinney under the direction of Dr John Martin, then a Principal Scientific Officer in the same department.¹ In his report dated 21st February 1972,² Dr Martin set out these findings:

“A small hole in the seat area of the trousers (item 6) had traces of lead on the perimeter and is characteristic of bullet entry. A large rip in the left side seam of the jacket (item 2) is characteristic of bullet exit. There is corresponding damage to the undergarments. A small rip in the rear left shoulder of the jacket with damage to the undergarments is characteristic of a bullet fragment – possibly a piece of metal jacket. Two small fragments of lead were detected on the edge of this rip.”

² D201

86.388 In the laboratory notes,¹ Herbert Donnelly had described his findings in more detail, and had referred to the following damage to the clothing:

(i) A tear on the left leg of the trousers, 11in below the waist and 2½in behind the side seam.

(ii) A hole, with a diameter of ⅛in, situated 8in below the top of the trousers on the rear mid-seam, with corresponding damage to the underpants. Dr Martin had added a note that this hole was tested positively for lead and that it had all the appearance of an entry hole.

(iii) Two splits in the left side seam of the jacket. Only the lower of these, which was situated 8in below the armpit, was accompanied by a corresponding hole in the lining of the jacket. This split measured 1in x ⅛in.

(iv) A further hole in the jacket, measuring ½in x ⅛in, situated 1in behind the left side seam and 8¾in below shoulder level. Dr Martin had added a note that this hole was tested positively for lead particles. There was a corresponding hole in the lining of the jacket.

(v) A hole in the left side of the pullover, corresponding to the “previous exhibit”, ie the jacket. Herbert Donnelly did not say which of the holes in the jacket it matched.

(vi) The following four holes in the left side of the shirt:

- (a) A hole measuring $\frac{1}{2}$ in x $\frac{1}{8}$ in, situated just in front of the side seam and 16in below shoulder level.
- (b) A hole, $1\frac{1}{2}$ in long, situated just behind the side seam and 15in below shoulder level.
- (c) A hole measuring $\frac{3}{4}$ in x $\frac{1}{8}$ in, situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ in behind the side seam and $14\frac{1}{2}$ in below shoulder level.
- (d) A hole measuring $\frac{3}{16}$ in x $\frac{1}{16}$ in, situated $3\frac{1}{4}$ in behind the side seam and $6\frac{1}{4}$ in below shoulder level.

(vii) The following three holes in the left side of the T-shirt:

- (a) A hole measuring $\frac{3}{4}$ in by 2in, situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ in in front of the side seam and 15in below shoulder level.
- (b) A hole, with a diameter of $\frac{1}{8}$ in, situated $\frac{1}{8}$ in in front of the side seam and 10in below shoulder level.
- (c) A hole, with a diameter of $\frac{1}{8}$ in, situated 1in behind the side seam and $8\frac{1}{2}$ in below the shoulder seam.

(viii) Holes in the upper and sole of the left boot. These were not accompanied by corresponding damage to the sock.

86.389 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin said that he had not found “fragments” on the rip in the left shoulder of the jacket ((iv) in the list set out above), but “evidence which suggested a fragment”, although he then described what he had found as “minute fragments”. In the laboratory notes,² he had marked an illustration of the rip “pb +ve particles”. Dr Martin had marked the polythene bag containing the filter paper used to test this area of the jacket with the following note:³ “Entry hole L shoulder Cut in cloth 2 particles of lead”. In their report,⁴ Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan commented that Dr Martin appeared to have concluded from the traces of lead found on the rip in the left shoulder of the jacket that this damage had been caused by the entrance of a fragment of a bullet not linked to the fatal injury.

³ F11.1

² D205

⁴ E2.52-E2.53

86.390 In his oral evidence to the Widgery Inquiry,¹ Dr Martin referred to the tear in the left leg of the trousers ((i) in the list set out above) as “another cut ... which may have suggested another particle, but I could not say”. In context, it seems that he meant that it might have been caused by another bullet fragment. In their report,² Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan pointed out that in the laboratory notes³ the tear was illustrated as a right-angled defect. This damage to the left leg of the trousers, which was associated with the abrasion of the left thigh considered by Dr Marshall to be a possible bullet graze, was in the view of Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan more consistent with contact with a point than with the passage of a bullet.

² E2.53

86.391 In summarising the gunshot wounds described by Dr Marshall in his autopsy report, we referred to the entrance wound in the left buttock as wound (i), to the large laceration in the left side as wound (ii), and to the three smaller lacerations in the left side as wounds (iii) to (v), in order from lowest to highest. In their report, Dr Shepherd and Mr O’Callaghan used different numbering. In order to avoid confusion, we set out the following summary of their conclusions¹ with our numbering substituted for theirs:

“Clearly a bullet entered the left buttock of Kevin McELHINNEY and penetrated the organs of the pelvis. The X-ray of the pelvis shows the point of contact with the flat bone (ilium) of the left side of the pelvis. The bullet entered at an acute angle from right to left (which is supported by the site of the abrasion rim) and was deflected nearly vertically after the contact with the pelvis.

The large oval wound [(ii)] does not have the appearance of a true exit wound, it is clearly a laceration and overlays the fractured left 9th rib. The photographs show a faint darker line joining the top margin of this wound with the bottom of wound [(iii)].

Wound [(ii)] and the lowest damage to the clothing have been caused by the passage of the bullet through the rib, and possibly against the skin, which has stretched the skin and caused it to lacerate but the bullet has not exited through this wound. Instead it has passed 2.5 cm in the subcutaneous tissues before exiting through wound [(iii)].

Wound [(iii)] has the shelved (or abraded) upper margin which is consistent with a bullet exiting upwards.

Wound [(iv)] is a re-entry wound. The small arc of abrasion on the upper front margin is consistent with an entry wound. However the site of this abrasion is not typical for a bullet travelling upwards from wound [(iii)]. Despite this it is our opinion that wound [(iv)] is the re-entry site from wound [(iii)].

There is a dark band connecting wounds [(iv)] and [(v)]. Wound [(v)] has a shelved upper margin which is consistent with a bullet exiting upwards.

The X-rays of the chest show that air (or gas) is present in areas in the soft tissues of the left side of the chest and the left axilla (armpit). This is highly suggestive of the subcutaneous passage of a bullet, but no tracks can be identified on the X-rays.

None of the X-rays show any bullet fragments that would result if the bullet had fragmented after its impact with the rib as suggested by Dr Marshall in his opinion.

The bullet passed upward through the undergarments of the chest leaving the series of holes. After leaving wound [(v)], the bullet did not pass through the jacket or its lining until it exited through the hole near the shoulder.

Dr Marshall formed the opinion that all of the injuries were caused by one bullet and we would concur with that conclusion; we differ only [o]n the behaviour of the bullet at the time of exit and in our opinion that it did not fragment.

Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position it is clear that the track of the bullet was from below upward and from right to left.

The same track could be achieved if Kevin McELHINNEY was bending over or on all fours and the shot was fired from behind and to his right.”

86.392

In his oral evidence to this Inquiry,¹ Dr Marshall stood by his interpretation of Kevin McElhinney’s injuries. As to Dr Shepherd’s view that wound (ii) did not have the appearance of a true exit wound, Dr Marshall said that while a textbook might describe an exit wound as a stellate wound with everted margins and no rim of abrasion, there was no such thing as a typical exit wound. He could see no reason why wound (ii) should not be an exit wound. Dr Marshall did not think that the bullet had exited intact through wound (iii), since it had passed through the pelvis and the ninth left rib and would have been unlikely to make such a neat hole. He believed that this wound was caused either by a fragment
